ANNUAL MEETING OF BOARD

Pennington County Fathers Meet And Fix Salaries and Let Printing.

The board of county commissioners of Pennington county met last Tuesday at 10 o'clock in their first regular annual session. They took up the matter of salaries for regular officers where these were not established by law and also drew the jury lists, distributed the county into commissioner districts, let the county printing and also did such other work as regularly came before the board at this session.

The commissioner districts were established as follows; 1st including towns of Star, Reiner, Highlanding, Goodridge, Cloverleaf and Silverton; 2nd, consists of city of Thief River Falls; 3rd the towns of Norden; Numedal, Bray, Sanders, Black River and Polk Centre; 4th the towns of North, Rocksbury, River Falls and the village of St. Hilaire; 5th Smiley, Wyandotte, Kratka, Mayfield, Deer Park and Hickory.

This certainly should be popular with all the country members who have entertained any notion that the city of Thief River Falls would take any undue advantage to secure control of the board of county commissioners.

The official printing was let to H. E. Ives of the St. Hilaire Spectator at the rate of 12½c per folio for the first insertion and 7½c per folio for subsequent insertions. This was truly a low bid but according to circulation was no better than the one offered as a joint bid of the News, Press and Eleven Towns.

ONE POINT EACH.

The case of the Tri-State Telephone Company versus this city was heard before Judge Willard of the United States Circuit Court in Minneapolis last Friday.

The Judge had previously issued an order to the city to show cause why a temporary injunction restraining the city from interfering with the company's work in extending its lines in this city, should not be issued.

City Attorney G. Halvorson and Ex-Atty. Gen. E. T. Young looked after the interests of our city while the Company was represented by their Attorney, H. P. Roberts. After the case had been quite fully argued the Court held for the defendent and hence declined to grant the injunction.

This puts the case on the regular trial calendar and it will be tried at Fergus Falls on Feb. 6. It does seem probable that the Circuit court will reverse itself but in all probability the case will be carried to the United States Supreme Court by either party. This case may become one of the leaders on the subject of litigated telephone company's rights inasmuch as both the Tri-State and Northwestern Telephone companies have quite a number of franchise that are in exactly the same condition that exists in the local exchange.

The case of the city versus Anderson, the foreman of the telephone crew, who was arrested some time ago was dismissed on the grounds of insufficient criminal charge to warrant holding the prisoner.

RICHARDSON RETURNS.

Ira C. Richardson formerly Judge of Probate of Red Lake county refused to qualify for another term of office at the lower Falls and the County Board will have to appoint his successor. Mr. Richardson will return to this city and will resume his practice of law before his appointment to the Judgeship of the Probate Court last summer by the Governor.

LOGGER KILLED AT BEAUDETTE.

David Lacoe, of this city was instantly killed in the woods near Beaudette. He was employed by one of the logging firms in that district, and was in the act of cutting down a tree when another one was felled near him, the top of which struck him fairly on the top of his head, fracturing his skull.

AWARDED CONTRACT.

Manager Stowell, of the Northern Culvert company, landed a large contract for the supply of culverts for Cass county, N. Dak., which county includes the city of Fargo where there are two culvert companies with which Mr. Stowell completed. The factory of the Northern Culvert Co., will be a scene of greater activity than usual for the next few weeks.

BORN: To Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Langlois, Jan. 1, 1911, a New Year's girl weight nine pounds.

ROBBECKE-ANDERSON NUPTIALS

Monday Evening At The Home Of The Birde's Parents.

Tuesday evening at 8 p. m., at the home of the bride occurred the marriage of Estella Marie Robbecke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Robbecke, and Hugo Anderson, both of this city, Rev. Seltz, of the German Lutheran church officiating.

The bride was becomingly gowned in white as was also Miss Elsie Robbecke, who with Mr. Otto Anderson, brother of the groom, attended the bridal couple. Following the marriage ceremony and the congratulations of the guests, the wedding supper was served. Immediately after wards the young couple departed for Lake City where they will make their home for the coming four months during which time the groom will complete his pharmacy course and they then expect to return to this city and make their home here.

Only the immediate family were present at the ceremony the out of town guests being, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lawrence and family of Fergus Falls and Otto Anderson of Lake City.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are numbered among the most popular of our young people. The bride has been a resident of Thief River Falls since childhood and has received her education in our city schools having graduated from the High School here with the class of 1907. while the groom during his residence here has made a host of friends, with whom the Press unites in extending their congratulations and good wishes.

LYNN HAINES ON LEGISLATURE

Opening Brings Many New Ideas On Legislative Possibilities.

Additional Legislative Letter! ••••

There were cusses and causes. Then the republican majority of the House of Representatives selected H. H. Dunn of Albert Lea as the presiding and organizing officer of that body. No speakership contest in a decade was waged so bitterly or ended with a wider breach between members. The acrimonious atmosphere will clear a little as the days go by. I prefer to wait for that time anl until certain administration steps are taken before attempting to analyze the contest.

Eighty-four republicans attended the caucus in the capitol Monday evening, either in person or by proxy, Mr. Dunn received 55 votes for speaker and Mr. Burnquist 29. There were no other contests in the caucus and the following House officials were unanimously elected:

Oscar Arneson, Chief Clerk
G. O. Hage, First Assistant
Jerome Rice, Second Assistant
R. J. Thoreen, Enrolling Clerk
Crawford Sheldon, Engrossing Clerk
Geo. H. Dean, Sergeant-at-Arms
Barney Siez, Assistant
William Scanlon, Postmaster
O. O. Halman, Assistant
Moses M. Maxwell, Chaplin.

The session starts auspiciously, because Minnesota has never been in a more attentive mood. In every section the people realize that this legislature is to be the most important ever assembled in the state and this general and intelligent interest augurs well, for no other influence so encourages good intentioned members or so effectually deters that element naturally inclined to serve the corporations and politicians. Public sentiment is the mightiest, as well as the simplest, force in government. It is my earnest hope that these letters may stimulate that influence, and bring it to bear directly upon the labors of the legislature.

Since the new is largely an outgrowth from the old, with the same custom and corporations to overcome, I want to briefly summarize the chief characteristics of the 1909 legislature. That session was marked throughout by a conflict between two sharply defined forces, one representing the people and progressiveness in politics, the other for special privilege of every kind. The "progressives" were outnumbered and generally outgeneraled. As a rule they were the more inexperienced members.

The reactionaries controlled the organizations of both branches. They kept intact the law-making machine thru which the special interests had operated continuously for years. They successfully opposed every attempt to reform the Cannonized system of legislation. New members were brought into the combination, often innocently, by the lure of local appropriations and the various forms of good fellowship, which will be explained with specific examples in the course of this correspondence. The "corporation cabinet" has, in times past, gone farther in the task of controlling a sufficient number to make things easy for themselves and the corporations. These more extreme means might be indicated by the four designations, "boquets", "banquets", "bribery", and blackmail", each representing a stage or degree in the development of a machine. My study of governmental conditions has convinced me that the property power in politics, working always with and thru professional politicians, uses this same system everywhere. It is the big congressional model, adapted to every state legislature and to every large municipal council in all the land.

Another lamentable characteristic of the last and previous sessions can best be described as "leg pulling". In recent years the big corporations have been contributing less and less to the support of legislators, and as this source of revenue has grown lean, a gang of greedy members have organized and perfected a more or less profitable side line. Bills aimed at certain corporations or business men would be introduced for the express purpose of being killed. The "killing", of course, would depend upon the manner in which the interest or individual thus held-up, met the terms of these modern "statesmen". I shall not deal with ancient history in this connection, but it is not at all improbable that the session just beginning will supply some interesting examples of this legislative pastime.

• • •

The foregoing suggestions are not that I am pessimistic regarding the session of 1911. On the contrary, I

PROPOSES BIG CHANGE IN METHOD

Governor Eberhart Outlines His Department Ideas in Legislative Message.

SEES SAVING FOR THE STATE

Would Abolish Oil and Boiler Inspection Bureaus as Separate Departments.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with time honored precedent and the express mandate of our state constitution I have the honor to communicate to you such information and recommendations as seem most expedient with reference to the condition of the state and the administration of its affairs.

In this message I shall in some measure depart from established custom and in addition to recommendations covering the needs and requirements of the various departments as shown in their several reports, I shall present to you the general condition of our great commonwealth and recommend such change of administrative policy as, after the most careful study and investigation, I firmly believe to be necessary in order that, on the one hand, we may stop all sources of waste and loss and, on the other, so improve, conserve and develop our great natural resources as to insure the greatest blessings of permanent progress and prosperity to this as well as future generations.

IMPORTANCE OF EFFICIENT ADMINISTRATION.

No state in the Union emphasizes the importance of efficient administration in a greater degree than Minnesota. When the constitution was adopted more than fifty years ago no one could have anticipated the phenomenal growth of the state and the tremendous resources contained within its domain. In order to keep pace with the rapid development various changes have been made from time to time and the administration of state affairs has been the subject of a vast amount of ineffective and unsystematic legislation. There has been a tendency to create a large number of boards or commissions through which the business of the state is largely transacted. The purpose of the legislature in creating these boards or commissions has been to keep pace with the rapid development of the state without apparently increasing the cost of administration. In many instances the result has been the further complication of the administrative machinery without adding to its efficiency. As an instance it might be cited that there are today not less than seven educational boards, aggregating forty-nine members, scattered all over the state of Minnesota and any question involving all the educational interests of the state would necessitate the convening of these several boards, which is not only difficult and expensive but impracticable.

PRESENT SYSTEM OF STATE UNWEILDY.

The governor is the chief administrative officer of the state and is rightly held responsible by the people for the enforcement of the laws and the efficient administration of the business affairs of the state. Under our present laws the governor is by law constituted an active member of not less than sixteen boards, some of which administer business affairs during the year running into the millions. Any one can readily see that it is absolutely a physical impossibility for the governor to be advised with reference to the details of such enormous business transactions that he may act intelligently and for the best interests of the people of the state. As prominent examples I would mention the drainage and timber boards. The state of Minnesota spends large sums of money every year for drainage, and I have every reason to believe that the expenditure of this money by the drainage board of this state has brought the best results, but as a member of the board I cannot of my own knowledge assure the people of the state that the best results have in all cases been obtained.

In the second place under the present system of organisation, with a large number of nominal and perfunctory boards in charge of the affairs of state, there is no way of securing such co-operation as is essential in efficient business administration. The boards are uniformly too large. The members reside in every portion of the state, and even if they could be assembled at any one time and place it would be extremely difficult to agree on any single proposition and to secure uniform support in the execution thereof.

RESPONSIBILITY SHOULD BE PLACED DIRECT.

According to the report of the state auditor the state collects and dis-

WASHINGTON NEWS POLITICAL QUIBS

Anticipation of Democratic House Cleaning Senator Clapp. Leader Of Progressives.

Washington D. C. January 5, 1911.—Just why Uncle Sam shoul make any discrimination in his benevolences as between members of the lower branch of Congress and the upper House is a question that has always puzzled me. Yet it is proverbially true that Senators are favored at every turn of the Congressional road in the matter of perquisites and little odds and ends which aggregate thousands of dollars.

Take the matter of drinking water. From July1, 1909 to June 30, 1910, the official record shows that Senators imbibed Appollinaries water and "other mineral waters" to the extent of $4,834.00. Not so with the servants of the people who are atthe other end of the Capitol, whose terms expire every two years. The water they drink is of the old-fashioned sort, drawn from a spigot, set in the wall. The luxury of Appollinaris water is an unknown quantity on the House side.

Then, there is the case of the tunnels connecting both the Senate and House office buildings with the Capitol. The subway from the Senate building to the Capitol has two automobiles which skip back and forth thru the under-ground passage, conveying the portly and dignified Senators to their destination. Not so, with House members. They walk from the House building to the Capitol in democratic simplicity.

There is one man, formerly a resident of Minnesota, who rejoices in a quiet way over the defeat of Jim Tawney. This is J. R. Halvorson, formerly of Albert Lea and a one time staunch supporter of Tawney, who rewarded him for services rendered by making him superintendent of the House Folding Room, a position which toward the end of Halvorson's official service paid him $25000 a year, with not a great amount of work.

Following Tawney's narrow escape from defeat in the fall of 1908 Halvorson lost his job in Washington and rumor had it that the Albert Lea man had not been active enough in his support of the first district congresman. Mr. Halvorson was always popular with members and secretaries, who found the official accomodating and obliging. His removal caused quite a sensation among friends both here and in Minnesota. He was succeeded by I. L. Ingribitsen another Albert Lea man, who is still on the job, but who will be forced to retire in December 1911, when the Democratic brethern step in and take charge of the House appointive positions.

After Halvorson's decapitation he moved to Los Angeles, where he is engaged in the real estate business. He recently wrote to a friend in Washington, who is about the Capitol, and in the course of his communication he very naturally let go some good-natured "chuckles" over the result of the election in district first, Minnesota.

As the result of the Democratic house-cleaning next December most of the fat plums in the way of House appointments will fall to the Democrats and the leaders are even now making up their slates. While the shake-up will affect the majority of the present office-holders, there will be some hold-overs. One notable indispensible and a Marylander who has been connected with the Capitol force and fattened at the public trough for nigh unto fifty years. His name appears in the official Directory of Congress as a special employee in the office of the doorkeeper of the House of Representatives. His duties keep him on the floor of the House during the sessions, there he looks after the wants of members in various and diverse ways. His salary is $1800 a year.

Another house employee who has held his position from time immemorial is Joel Grayson, another indispensable, who hails from Virginia. He is employed in the House Document Room at asalary of $2150 a year. He held his position at one time under the late Charles H. Pierce formerly post master at Northfield, who for several years was superintendent of the House Document Room in Washington.

The following from the Washington Times will not bring much comfort to the enemies of Senator Moses E. Clapp, who regret his insurgency. Listen to this bit of interesting gossip:

"When the Senate insurgents want to hold a conference they gather around the table down in the office of Senator Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota Senator Clapp is chairman of the Committee on Indian affairs and has

SOO WILL TAP NEW TERRITORY

Branch from Portage Lake to Cut Foot Sioux Country in Spring.

An important branch of the Thief River Falls line of the Soo road is to be built the coming spring, north from the vicinity of Portage Lake and crossing the Great Northern road at Bena. The branch will be run up to the Cut Foot Sioux country, and will serve to get out a large amount of timber for the Thief River Falls Lumber company.

The lumber company recently purchased considerable Indian pine, and while the branch of the Soo line will be constructed primarily for the purpose of getting this out, the road will serve many other good purposes For example there are many settlers in the territory to be traversed by the branch, and the coming of the road will be a great boom for them.

The dicision of the Soo line people to build this branch has just been made. Few, if any, of the settlers who will be benefited have heard that the road is coming their way in the near future. It will cross the Cass river at Winnebigoshish dam, and will continue on to the Round Lake and Cut Foot Sioux country.

It is expected that this will be the beginning of another railroad to tap the international border.

COMPARISON OF THE DAKOTAS

What Prohibition has Done for North Dakota in Way of Inhabitants.

Devils Lake Journal: The recent census report showing the population of the states, speaks volumns for prohibition, and the figures make a most interesting study.

The figures(and figures never lie) talk louder than the lies the brewery interests are spreading over the country.

There are not many people who will argue the question that taken as a whole, the soil of North Dakota is as good as the soil of South Dakota. In the matter of nearness to market South Dakota has considerable advantage over North Dakota, Sioux City and Omaha are at its very doors and it is 100 miles nearer the twin cities than North Dakota is.

Both states were admitted to the union at the same time—a little more than twenty years ago.

When the states were admitted South Dakota had a population of 348,600, while North Dakota had a little better than half as much, 190,983.

Both states adopted prohibition in their constitutions, but South Dakota went back to high license after two years.

What, has been the result?

From 1890 to 1900 North Dakota increased in population at the rate of 67.1 per cent as compared to 15.2 per cent for South Dakota, or more than four times as fast.

From 1900 to 1910 North Dakota's increase was 80.8 per cent as against South Dakota's 45.4 per cent increase.

Since the two states were admitted to the Union, North Dakota, which at the time had but little more than half the population of South Dakota, and ont nearly so many commercial advantages, has kept gaining on its sister until now it has practically the same population, there being about 6000 difference—the exact figures being; South Dakota, 583.888; North Dakota, 577,056.

That is not all; North Dakota's increase in population is the largest of any state in the Union having a larger population, except one, Oklahoma, also a prohibition state, which boasts of a record of 109.7 per cent increase in ten years.

And here is another significant fact: From 1890 to 1900 Iowa had prohibition, even though it was poorly enforced in the river towns. During that period the state increased in population 319,556, or 16.7 per cent. Ten years ago the Mulst law was passed in Iowa, which amounts to open saloons, and during the past ten years instead of increasing in population, Iowa lost 0.3 per cent—theonly state in the Union showing a decrease in population. Perhaps the repeal of the prohibition law had nothing to do with the falling off in population. Perhaps it did. An attempt to explain it by saying that Iowa people have been attracted to Canada. But North Dakota people have been attracted to Canada so have Minneso-

How We Paid The Mortgage.

BY WILLIAM SMITH.

"It was back in 18—" 'Said uncle Pose, upon being requested to tell a story," that mother was lefa a widow with we three boys as her sole support. Sam was sixteen, Alton fourteen, and myself twelve years of age.

But here, before we go any further with this story, let's get a big chunk for the fire place.

Everything should be just right for story-telling; it should be a cold winter night, the family should be gathered around the old fire place, a big log blazing away, and even old Touser, the dog, should be stretched out on a comfortable rug in front of the fire."

We saw uncle Pose was in a story-telling mood, so we hastened to replenish the fire, arrange the chairs, with his big arm chair in the middle, and even gave Touser his favorite place on the rug; feeling that we would be well repaid for our pains.

The mortgage was held by Mr. Bennett a money loaner, at the village of Red Falls, who had the name of being a very close unscripulous man, and mother was fearful lest he foreclose the mortgage and take the home

It was in March that father died, and mother and we boys were not only grief-stricken, but confronted with the problem, "How can we pay the mortgage?"

It was due on November fifteenth of that year, with two years interest at eight per cent, and in case of foreclosure we would have but one year in which to redeem it.

Such were the conditions at the time of father's death.

We gathered around this old fireplace one evening a few weeks later, after all the out side chores were done, and we had helped mother do the dishes, when she said. "Now boys we are all here alone tonight, and I want to speak to you about the mortgage. How are we going to pay it?"

"I'll work" said Sam, "So will I". And I will too, said Alton and myself; and we all ran to mother threw our arms around her neck and sobbed out our sorrow once more.

"You are just the dearest boys in this whole world and I know you will all help; now, lets see, there is forty-five acres in the field, and we have seed corn enough to plant it; corn always brings a good price in the lumber camps; let us try a crop of corn.

If you boys can take care of the forty-five acres and attend school, you will do well.

There are the three old horses and the colt; we can rig up three walking corn plows of some kind; or, perhaps we can get a riding plow for Bruce and use one of the old horses and the colt on that; it's going to be a big undertaking but I think we can manage it some way."

"With the two cows giving milk and the wool from the sheep when shorn, I think we can manage to pay the taxes and make a living; and we may get the teacher to board with us during the summer term."

"You boys will have to work all of your spare time in the corn, for this summer, but if we get the mortgage paid there will be better times in store for us; you boys think it over for a day or two and let me know."

These were our first plans for paying off the mortgage; the responsibility had been shifted to our young shoulders, at fathers death, and the burden seemed doubly heavy on account of this mortgage, we felt if it was not paid when due that there would be no leniency shown, as there had been a bitter fight on for the past two years between the town of Red Falls and our part of the county on the county division question, in which father had taken a prominent part in favor of county division.

This had increased Bennetts ill-will and of course we knew what to expect.

I was the baby of the family, and slipping my arms around mother's neck before I went up stairs to bed I said, "Mother, mother, I love you just the best of any one in this world and I'll do anything I can to help you."

After I had crawled into bed beside Sam and Alton, I could hear mother sobbing gently to herself. Dear, good patient mother, I thought, and with a simple prayer for her on my lips I fell asleep.

The lowing of the cows, and the bleating of the sheep, awoke us at daylight; and the world seemed brighter as we went about our chores.

We three boys met at the barn and talked over the future.

It seemed to me that Sam had turned suddenly into a man for he went into all the details of the summer's work before us.

With a Happy New Year to all my Friends I wish to extend my hearty thanks for the business you have given me during the past year and to assure you that I will do my utmost to merit your confidences and future business.

Yours Truly,

A. N. Lundgren, Photographer.

Miss Esther Kretzschmar went down to Red Lake Falls last Thursday to attend the home-talent play, "Oak-Farm," presented that evening.

Miss Sidona Posten, formerly among the Hamline students but this year at the St. Cloud Normal, spent her Christmas vacation with her parents, returning to St. Cloud Tuesday.

Mrs. L. B. Nichols left for Washington Monday evening where she will spend the rest of the winter visiting the McNiven family, who formerly resided here.

Now's the best time to subscribe for the Press.

Sam and Halvor Hofto returned to Grand Forks Tuesday afternoon.

Lawrence Smith returned from Germantown near which place he has been employed the last few weeks.

Peter Hedeen and Peter Wold drove in from their reservation homes on Monday to attend the first annual meeting of the commissioners of Pennington Co.

Olaf Larson took the Great Northern at Viking in order to be present and Ed Aubol drove up from his home near St. Hilaire as he says he would rather trust his team than Jim Hill's wagon.

Miss Florence Sallow entertained at her home Thursday evening, Dec. 29th a number of her young friends in honor of her 20th birthday. The rooms being beautifully decorated in red and green, making it very attractive for the assembled guests. The evening was passed in playing games until ten o'clock, when dainty refreshments were served. After which the guests were entertained with music and songs in which all took part. The misses Myrtle Rayson and Bessie M. Sallow rendering the various selections on the piano. The guests departed at midnight, wishing Miss Florence hearty congratulations and many happy birthdays. Miss Florence received a number of beautiful gifts from her many friends

A CHECK BOOK

Signing your name to a check makes you think. You don't spend a check as readily and carelessly as you do the cash. An account at our bank will tend to restrict your spending.

Try an account with us and pay all your bills with checks. If you do this during 1911 you will be surprised at the money you will save.

The Manager of the "Press" could have sold this space to Montgomery Ward & Co. or Sears, Roebuck & Co., either one, for twice the price that it could have been purchased for by any of the local merchants.

Why, then, is this space not filled with good, live, local advertising? Is it because it is not worth having? No; because if that were the case, the above named firms would not bid twice what we are asking from our local merchants.

Get busy! Advertise! and you will get the business that pays.

Another year behind us. How about the good resolutions, don't forget them. We did not make any, so we wont forget.

Among the young folks who came home for the holidays, were Benhard Bendickson, Benny and Martha Habedank, Emma and Freda Bundhund, it was a lively time, only the old folks had to do the chores most of the time so, that, is what we are getting for getting old.

Emil Riebe, Edward Ristau and John Bundhund left Friday for the town of Sanders, to spend New Year with friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Paulson went to Clamra to spend the holidays with the old folks.

Aldrich has now secured a corner on the Malay-Rubber outfit. Now if he can only get a high enough tariff from every other point but get Congress to agree that we need just the amount of rubber produced by the Malays and no more he can possibly get the corner cornered.

Nels K. Anderson of Sanders and Charles Gustafson of Thief River Falls respectively, president and treasurer of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Co., met with John O Swanson the secretary Friday and Saturday of last week to make out the Annual report for the past year.

The company is ina flourshing condition, there are 640 policy holders, with an insured valuation amounting to $778124, and there is also over $1300 in the treasury. The company has had no loss from fire for over three years and consequently no assessment has been made during that time.

The dance at Alfred Lindquist's Tuesday evening was attended by a large crowd and a fine time was had until the wee hours of the morning.

Several of the local lumber-jacks who came home to spend Xmas and New Year's intend to return to the pine-woods and "flap-jacks."

August Crown returned to Thief River Falls Wednesday after spending Xmas at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Crown.

The cold weather seems to be hard on our telephone line as it keeps on breaking all the time.

A large crowd of both young and old people spent New Year's eve at Christ Pearson's to see the old year out and the new year in. A good time was had by all present.

John Swanson drove o S. Hilaire Monday o attend the Annual meeting of the Bray Mutual Fire Ins. Co., held at that place.

FIND THE MAN

Every man and woman is anxious to buy some article—necessity or luxury—every day of his or her life.

Single handed it would take you months to seek out those interested in your line of business.

An advertisement in this paper does the work instantaneously.

It corrals the purchaser—brings him to your store—makes him buy things you advertised.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the blood you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. ST. PAUL LETTER.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 5th—The banquet to the governor and the members of the Minnesota legislature to be given by the citizens of St. Paul, Wednesday evening January 11 gives promise of being a grand success in every particular. Governor Eberhart, prominent solons and state officals, Mayor Keller and leading citizens of St. Paul will respond to toasts.

When the idea of St. Paul entertaining the members of the legislature was first mentioned it was suggested that a ball be given for the lawmtkers and their wives. After due consideration it was decided that a banquet for the men would be more proper and the plans were made accordingly.

The banquet is to be given in the St. Paul hotel, the capitol's new hostelry. Manager Roth has completed all of his arrangements for the great spread and declares it will be one of the finest he has ever served in the years of his service in the hotel business.

On the finance committee are John R. Mitchell, chairman; Charles W. Gordon and Samuel Dittenhofer. Composing the banquet committee are M. D. Munn, chairman; L. P. Ordway and Sherman Finch. The invitation committee includes Louis Betz, chairman; Winn Powers, Gebhard Bohn, Reuben Warner and John I. H. Field, Louis W. Hill heads the entertainment committee the other members being T. W. Griggs, Charles Patterson, Jesse H. Neal, Cal E. Stone and William P. Kenney.

Visitors to the St. Paul automobile show will be afforded a chance to see an airship that has made several successful flights and in view of the recent fatalities there will be much interest in knowing just how the accidents occur. An experienced avitor will be present to demonstrate just how Arch Hoxey's machine "turned turtle" as he was making his famous spiral at Los Angeles last Saturday.

Another novelty that will be of interest is the wireless outfit which is to be attached to an automobile. Specially made instruments have been designed for use on automobiles and the possibilities of their use in time of war.

The state of Minnesota owns one of the best wireless outfits in the country and this is to be set up in the Armory and messages will be sent from it both afternoon and evening. An attempt will be made to send a message to President Taft in Washington and another to Col. Roosevelt in New York.

Officers of the Iowa, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Montana militia have been invited to be present to witness the tests of the autowireless outfits and the officers from Fort Snelling will also be present. The demonstrations are to be given by Henry Milton, Peter Daley, H. J. Clark and George Boyce.

burses over $2,000,000 annually. If a private business institution transacted its business by similar methods it could not long exist in the present field of active competition. Our state has been exceptionally fortunate in securing honest and intelligent officers and the fact that the state has made such great progress with so few charges of mismanagement or graft is a great credit to the men in charge, but positively no argument in favor of the system and cannot possibly convey any assurance for the future. Bearing in mind the two essential elements of successful business administration, fixed responsibility and active co-operation there are several departments of state that can be cited as models. The dairy and food, insurance, banking and public examiner's departments are all properly organized with a responsible head in charge of each and deputies as well as inspectors especially skilled in their work and devoting all of their time thereto. In the board of control and tax commission every member is especially skilled in the performance of the duties of his office, devotes all his time thereto and the business of each board is organized and transacted along lines of efficiency and merit. In all these cases there is no question as to responsibility and if all the business of the state were transacted along similar lines the results would unquestionably be far greater.

WOULD CONSOLIDATE SOME DEPARTMENTS.

Perhaps the only remnant of the theory that purely political considerations are sufficient for reward at public expense is the present fee office. There is no possible defense for the existence of this office today. Fees collected do not belong to the officer, but to the state, and the state owes the officer a sufficient compensation for his work, including necessary expenses, and no more. No state officer should be dependent for his support upon the amount of fees collected. If these fees aggregate a larger amount than necessary to amply compensate him for his work and necessary expenses, he is appropriating money that belongs to the state, and if they are insufficient for that purpose, he rendering services to the state without proper compensation. Perhaps no offices in this state can illustrate this more forcibly than those connected with the oil and boiler inspection, and surveying of logs and lumber. The inspection of illuminating oils could be turned over to the dairy and food department with practically no additional expense, which would result in saving the state in fees disbursed for the inspection of oil approximately $40,000 annually, the total amount of fees collected during the fiscal year ending July 31, 1910, being $53,560.60. The dairy and food inspectors should test the oil in making their inspection trips throughout the state. This would make the inspection more rigid and effective as the inspectors would be free from local influence and independent of the amount of fees collected, all of which should go into the state treasury. With reference to the boiler inspection the same argument can be used.

WOULD ABOLISH OIL INSPECTION DEPARTMENT.

In the case of oil inspection, this department should be entirely abolished and its work performed by the dairy and food department. In the case of boiler inspection, this work should be performed by expert inspectors in the labor department, who should be amply compensated for their work and who should travel throughout the state in the performance of their duties, devoting all their time thereto. The fees collected should be based on boiler capacity and paid into the state treasury. With reference to the inspection of logs and lumber, this could be performed by inspectors under the forestry commissioner, and the fees collected therefor turned over to the state as in other cases.

According to a conservative estimate not less than $100,000 now paid for inspection service in the three departments mentioned should be used by the state for much better purposes, and it is safe to say that the same inspection could be made with better results for less than half of the present cost. It should be distinctly understood that this is not reflection upon the men in charge of this work. They are uniformly good men and discharge the duties of their respective offices as far as the law permits The inherent defect is in the system itself.

For the purpose of bringing this scheme of reorganization definitely before the legislature I shall discuss the contemplated changes in the administrative affairs of the state with reference to four great subdivisions or bureaus, those of public domain, public health and safety, education, and revenue and accounting.

SUBDIVISION OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Within the bureau of public domain I shall discuss a department of state lands, a department of forestry, department of geology and mines, a department of game and fish, a department of waterways, a department of agriculture and immigration and a department of public highways; within the bureau of public health and safety, a department of public health, a department of dairies and foods and a department of labor; within the bureau of education a department of education, and a department of state institution, and within the bureau of revenue and accounting a tax commission, a railway and warehouse commission, a public examiner, a department of banks and a department of insurance.

It is not essential that the various subdivisions should be arranged as herein suggested, or that the departments thereunder should be so denominated, nor it is essential that the officer in charge should be known as a commissioner. These are only means of designation and other terms can be used as conveniently and effectively, but the classification herein suggested is only one of the many that might be arranged, and one that would seem to be the most logical. The working out of such a scheme is one for the legislature, and my only purpose in submitting this plan is to secure greater administrative efficiency by fixing responsibility and securing co-operation.

THE STATE BUREAU OF PUBLIC DOMAIN.

In the organic act establishing our state boundaries the general government assigned to Minnesota 54,196,480 acres of the national domain. The government survey describes 2,447,360 acres of this as water surface, leaving a land surface of 51,749,120 acres. Under the homestead, timber culture and timber and stone acts actual settlers have received from the general government about 45 per cent of Minnesota's total domain, or approximately 23,400,000 acres. Grants to railroads, including both state and congressional grants, aggregate something over 13,000,000 acres, which is a fraction more than 25 per cent of the total land area. About 6,000,000 acres have been sold or otherwise transferred to lumber and mining companies, speculators, soldiers and settlers by cash sales or various kinds of scrip and the remainder represents public land belonging to the general government and to the state of Minnesota.

The amount of unappropriated lands belonging to the general government open to settlement in Minnesota, as shown by the land office report of 1909, is 1,450,955 acres, of which 187,000 acres are unsurveyed. In national forest reserve Minnesota has approximately 1,204,486 acres. The total unsurveyed acreage of the general government in Minnesota, including lands in reservations, is estimated at 2,290,000 acres, which, with 1,260,000 acres surveyed and open to settlement, bring the total Minnesota holdings of the general government up to 3,550,000 acres.

LANDS BELONGING TO STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Under the various acts of congress granting lands to the several states Minnesota is entitled to 9,600,119.47 acres. Up to July 31, 1910, patents had been received from the general government for the several classes of state lands aggregating 8,181,102.72 acres. This leaves a balance of 1,419,015.75 acres, according to the records of the state, yet to be approved and patented.

Approximately 2,800,000 acres of school, university, agricultural, college, internal improvement, swamp and salt spring lands have been sold and the proceeds invested for the various educational and other permanent trust funds, which on July 31, 1910, are reported by the auditor as aggregating $27,077,223.41.

The auditor, as ex-officio state land commissioner, reports on hand unsold in the possession of the state and its institutions at this time 2,486,405 acres.

In addition to the above holdings the auditor estimates that there is still due from the general government 600,000 acres of selected swamp and indemnity school lands, bringing the total up to approximately 3,000,000 acres, as the total public domain to be administered in the interest of our public schools and other state institutions, as well as the general public.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE LANDS NECESSARY.

The necessity of amending our present laws and methods of handling state lands, with the organization to that end of a separate state land department, is now generally admitted. Our present ex-officio land commissioner, State Auditor Iverson, advocated such change in his report of two years ago, reiterating his position at this time, and a bill to that end was introduced in the last legislature, but failed of passage because of certain constitutional difficulties. The attorney general, in his report to your body, condemns the present land laws and methods of land sales as archaic and obsolete.

Among the vital and practical reasons for the proposed reform in our land laws and administration, therefore, are the following:

First—To make the state agricultural lands accessible and available to actual intending settlers.

Second—To realize for our schools and other public institutions full and just values for their lands.

Third—To place unsold lands, with their timber and other products, under businesslike administration, improving and developing their resources and protecting them from fire, depredation and waste.

Fifth—To co-operate with other respective public domain departments of the state with reference to the various lines of development and improvement, such as, drainage, highways, forestry, agriculture, water powers, waterways, geology and mines.

Sixth—In separating the land department from the auditor's office to make the latter an independent check upon the accounts and business transactions of the land department as contemplated by our constitution in creating the office of auditor.

Before the above reform in our land laws can be carried into legislative effect however, it appears wise and apparently legally necessary to submit the proposition to the people in the form of a constitutional amendment.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY.

The original forest area of Minnesota is estimated at over one-half of the total land surface of the state, or approximately 28,000,000 acres, of which perhaps 18,000,000 represented pine and evergreens. About one-half of the original forest area yet remains, though materially depleted by fires and cuttings. Part of this is hard wood, though the greater portion is pine and pulpwood, chiefly located on the northern wooded plateau of the state, where it is of inestimable service in protecting the sources of our streams.

It would seem as though the necessity of placing the public forest under scientific and businesslike administration were so plain to the general public and to the members of this legislature that argument should be unnecessary. The state has just experienced another chapter of horrors in connection with the Rainy River valley forest fires, which should be sufficient to demonstrate the necessity of improved forest administration. But the Hinckley, Chisholm and Baudette fires, with their losses aggregating millions of dollars' worth of property and many human lives, tell only a part of the sad story. To this we must add losses by trespass and depredation and loss by neglect of growing forests, as well as loss of opportunities for reforestation. It is estimated that the aggregate forest resources of Minnesota are worth $100,000,000, which is the strongest possible argument for adequate methods of protection, development and administration.

The forest problems of our state have been sadly neglected. For protection against forest fires Minnesota spends less than one-fourth of what is required for effective results and in the way of practical forest administration conducts only a few scattered experiments, with nothing like a comprehensive, scientific and businesslike system of forestry.

DEPARTMENT OF GEOLOGY AND MINES.

After mining and shipping to the furnaces 254,000,000 tons of iron ore, the world's record of production, Minnesota has now definitely located a body of ore, amounting to 1,347,596,000 tons, which is one-third of the available and merchantable ore of the United States and upon which taxes are paid into the state treasury. And yet Minnesota has no state department of mines, and not even, in operation at this time, the usual geological survey found in most of the states of the Union.

Our educational institutions, notably the public schools, university and agricultural college, lead the world in wealth and income from these mines. It has long been apparent that mineral resources which promise our schools and university a future income of more than $100,000,000 require detailed expert administration. Other Northwestern and Mississippi Valley states, such as Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri, which together possess and control for educational purposes but a small portion of our wealth, all conduct permanent geological surveys and some of these states, as well as many Eastern and Western states, have separate departments of mines and Minnesota should do the same. The expense of such administration will be returned in revenue to the state many fold.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF GAME AND FISH.

Nature has richly endowed the state of Minnesota with game and fish. It is one of our natural resources, in the conservation of which the state has been most fortunate.

The total disbursements of the department for the year 1910 amount to $95,407.17. Out of 504 prosecutions there have been only thirty-two acquittals and the sum total of fines for the year 1910 amounts to $8,624.45.

A suggestion is made in the report of the commission which I believe worthy of particular consideration, namely, that some method be instituted whereby it may determine the amount of game killed in the state from year to year in order that it may determine with greater accuracy what ought to be done to preserve the game in the future.

Minnesota has a larger number and also a larger area of inland lakes than any other state in the Union and fishing both as a sport and an industry is constantly increasing. The fame of our summer resorts and beautiful lakes attracts thousands of visitors from distant states annually.

One of the best investments made by the state is the improvement of our fish hatcheries so as to increase the supply of fish. The total distribution of fish fry for the years 1909 and 1910 amounts to 199,886,967, which is an increase of 100,505,667 over the years 1907 and 1908.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF WATERWAYS.

One-fifteenth of Minnesota's surface consists of lakes and streams. Our water area approximates 4,000,000 acres. The elevation of this water area ranges from 700 to 1,800 feet above the sea, the average altitude of our lake and stream reservoirs being about 1,200 feet above sea level. We have about 7,500 meandered lakes, most of them future sources of power and transportation facilities. The source of the Mississippi lies [illegible] feet above the point where it leaves the southern boundary of the state. The Red River of the North has a fall of 700 feet within the state, the Rainy river 600 feet, and the Minnesota and St. Croix about 300 feet each. In addition to these well known streams great water powers exist on the St. Louis and a score of rivers which flow from our northern watered plateau into the Great Lakes and Hudson bay system. It is estimated that the aggregate power of known available falls and rapids in Minnesota is about 500,000 horsepower, of which considerably less than one-half is now utilized for industrial purposes. In other words, the available waterpower of the state, as at present surveyed, is equivalent to over 8,000,000 tons of coal per annum, developed into industrial power. Minnesota has no coal mines, but its waterpower, which is never consumed, and should be as great one hundred years from now as today, if properly conserved and developed, is approximately equal, in amount of available horsepower, to the average coal product per state of the twenty-eight coal producing states.

RESOURCES WORTHY OF DEVELOPMENT.

The water resources of Minnesota, therefore, comprise a big chapter in our scheme of conservation and development. Waterpowers, waterways, drainage and artesian supply are a source of wealth, income, life and development worthy of high recognition on the part of the state and give ample field for the organization and activity of the best scientific and business talent. It goes without saying that a department in charge of at least one commissioner, devoted to the conservation and development of our water resources, will earn its cost manifold. The revenue resulting from a single waterpower or the commercial advantage of a single waterway may warrant the support of such a department for a decade. Among the lines of work which this department should at once undertake are the following:

A complete survey of the navigable streams of the state, including the gauging of the currents; a census of the developed waterpowers; a survey and estimate of undeveloped waterpowers; a survey of the entire drainage area of the state and of the sections which need drainage; a complete map of Minnesota lakes and streams showing elevations and topography and indicating the location of waterpowers and navigable channels; a rainfall map, showing the distribution of rainfall; an artesian supply map, giving the location and capacity of deep wells; a plan for the co-operation of the state with the federal government in connection with waterways, waterpowers and drainage; an investigation of the laws and administration of various states and countries with relation to water resources and the submission of a proposed revision of Minnesota laws governing this subject.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND IMMIGRATION.

Minnesota possesses the greatest agricultural resources of any state in the Union and yet it is one of the few states which have no centrally organized department of agriculture. Of her 45,000,000 acres of agricultural lands less than 50 per cent are under cultivation and this 50 per cent should yield, under proper methods of administration, from 50 to 100 per cent greater returns than are now realized.

The general government gives to agriculture one of its best equipped federal departments. Mississippi valley states, such as Iowa, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, all have state departments of agriculture. The same is true, not only of the Pacific coast states, but of such Atlantic coast states as Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which are noted chiefly for their manufacturing resources and interests, rather than agriculture.

The state of Minnesota has done much to encourage scientific agriculture; what we now need is to make co-operative and effective, under a well directed central organization, the many lines of agricultural activity now in progress in the several directions. We have one of the greatest agricultural colleges and farm schools in the country, with three fairly well equipped experiment stations, and a farmers' institute or traveling lecture course. We have built up the greatest state agricultural fair in the United States. We have a successful and efficient state dairy and food department, a live stock sanitary board, an immigration board, forestry department, highway commission, drainage commission, and among its associate agricultural organizations Minnesota has one of the greatest horticultural societies in the world, the most successful butter and cheesemakers' association, and progressive associations of live stock breeders, fruit growers, bee and poultry raisers. These several institutions, commissions, departments and associations, each in its own line, have performed a vast service in our educational and industrial development, but the greatest efficiency and economy of energy have not been realized because of lack of co-operative organization.

QUESTION OF IMMIGRATION IMPORTANT.

Lands, forests, mines, waterpowers, waterways and highways are of no avail, except as they serve the people. Conservation and development are without purpose unless there are men, women and children to be blessed thereby. Natural resources receive value in proportion to the population served. It is the function of the department of immigration to bring to our lands the population; and our immigration commissioner has made a record in performing this function.

The $70,000 expended by the commission during four years in advertising Minnesota have produced several hundred thousand inquiries from intending settlers, increased the sales of state, federal and private lands, brought investors and farm tenants, raised farm values, increased business and materially aided state development. The special Minnesota immigration car, recently hauled through the states south of us by the generous co-operation of one of our railway companies and visited by 1,200 farmers daily, is an example of the enterprise with which the state is now being advertised.

At the same time with more adequate appropriations and co-operation there is little doubt that much greater results could be accomplished. For lack of such provision intending settlers arrive and there are no guides and cruisers to show them the lands, no agencies at hand to make the sale, no schedule of land prices on file, oftentimes no available roads to the lands and, in general, no opportunity to get state lands at all, except to wait and take chances on comparatively unknown lands with a crowd at some distant public auction sale.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

What veins and arteries are to the human body, such are streets and avenues to the city, and public highways to the public domain. Without highways the public domain is inaccessible, and as far as the public is concerned, a wilderness. We have made a modest beginning in the development of a state highway system and are moving slowly in the right direction. Under the one-quarter of a mill tax, which is available under the constitutional amendment, on the condition of the state paying one-half the cost of the state road, it is possible for this legislature, on the present state valuation, to provide the state highway system with an annual appropriation of $800,000. This provision will place Minnesota in the rank of the eight leading states in good roads legislation.

Notwithstanding the usual hardships and handicaps under which a new experiment like the state highway system labors, our state highway commission and its capable engineer already make a substantial showing of practical results. Doubtless there will be laid before you during this session a bill for a greatly improved and strengthened state highway act.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

No question coming before the legislature at this session deserves more earnest consideration than that of public health. We have saved several millions of dollars annually by guarding against plant and animal diseases and are now beginning to realize how untold millions are wasted annually through our neglect of preventable and curable human diseases, lack of sanitation in cities, homes and schools, lack of safeguards against railway, mine and factory accidents, food adulteration, impure milk and water supply, all of which come properly within the scope and jurisdiction of the department of public health.

The great problem to be solved is one of prevention rather than cure and consists largely in the enforcement of sanitation laws in our cities, schools and homes. But this department can accomplish little when handicapped by such lack of support as in the past. The importance of the department warrants larger appropriations and I therefore recommend for your most careful consideration the needs of this department.

One of the most effective departments in the state service today is the dairy and food department.

FAVORS A WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Minnesota is advancing to the front as one of the greatest industrial, manufacturing and commercial states in the Union. As such, it can never attain the greatest degree of prosperity unless its labor is efficient and intelligent and receives at the hands of the state such consideration as will secure the most adequate protection. I recommend the enactment of a workmen's compensation law, believing it to be for the best interests of both employes and employers as well as the state at large.

Discussing the question of education the governor points with pride to our present institutions and recommends the creation of a state board of education. This board, he says, should be non-partisan and the members should be given six-year terms. The state institutions are complimented for their good management and in referring to the state prison the governor comes out in opposition to capital punishment.

Discussing the subject of taxation the governor says, all things considered, Minnesota under present laws and administration, appears to be making good in the direction of scientific and just taxation, and he calls the attention of the legislature to the report of the tax commission.

On the question of reapportionment he says: "Of all the important questions to be decided by the present legislature, that of reapportionment will be watched with the greatest interest by the people of the state. In some sections of Minnesota 12,000 people elect a senator, and in other sections it requires 62,000; in some sections 5,000 people elect a representative and in other sections it requires 32,000. This should be remedied."

them and taking her box of matches from her pocket lit one of them. Though the wind blew it out at once she had time to see that there were not half a dozen matches in the box.

She scratched another match and it, too, was extinguished by the wind. Another and another attempt was made till all her matches save one were gone. For a moment she gave way to despair, then concentrated her little brain on the great problem of saving scores of lives. Tearing the skirt of her cotton dress to shreds, she made a miniature tent of her coat, scratched her last match under it, touched the flame to one of the shreds, placed others over it, and in a moment her lantern was relighted.

This done, she crawled out from the cattle guard and ran along the track, but now more cautiously. Within a few minutes she heard the rumbling of the train and began to swing the lantern. The brakes were whistled down and the train came to a stop.

When those on the train went forward and saw the condition of the bridge a chill cold as death ran through them, and when they saw the wee ragged child who had saved them their gratitude knew no bounds.

That ended the poverty of the Hughes family. The passengers who had been saved made up a fine purse for Jenny, and the railroad gave her father, who recovered, employment. Jenny is now the president's stenographer.

A little stack of clover or alfalfa should be included in the winter food supply of every flock of hens from which eggs are expected during the winter months. It provides protein in a form which they greatly relish.

Straw is not only a more economical feed for horses than rich hays when they are not working hard, but is preferable from the standpoint of their health. A good deal of bright straw will be thus fed the coming winter.

The class of people who squander the most money on get-rich-quick schemes are not much better nor a great deal worse than the sharpers who fleece them, for both are playing the same game—getting something for nothing—the latter successfully, the former unsuccessfully.

Where the current is available there is no light for use in the barn that is so safe and convenient as the electric. It is always on tap, and there isn't a continual expenditure for broken chimneys, while the danger from fire as a result of the cow kicking the light over is reduced to a minimum.

"I am fixing up a surprise for John, but I am afraid that if he stays around the house he will discover me."

"That's all right. You just tie a towel around your head and ask him if he can't stay at home today and help you take up the carpets."

[illegible] he knows, not for what he does."

"Then that young lawyer ought to get some tremendous fees."

"Why?"

"He knows it all."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hard For the Eskimos.

One of the difficulties of the Moravian missionaries in Labrador is to make the Old Testament, with its wealth of pastoral detail, intelligible to the Eskimos, not one of whom has ever seen a horse. "Sheep and cattle," says Hesketh Pritchard in "Hunting Camps In Wood and Wilderness," "they cannot realize or conceive of, for there are no domesticated animals save dogs in that portion of the peninsula. They comprehend the story of Esau, the hunter, and that of Samson and the lion, which animal can be translated as polar bear, but of Abraham in the land of Mesopotamia they can form no picture. The nearest approach to these ideas is drawn from the harvest of the sea, seals and fish taking the place of flocks and herds."

Mistletoe a Menace.

Few people who know mistletoe only as a desirable feature of Christmas decorations understand that the plant is a parasite dangerous to the life of trees in the regions in which it grows. It is only a question of time after mistletoe once begins to grow upon a tree before the tree itself will be killed. The parasite saps the life of the infected branches. Fortunately it is of slow growth, taking years to develop to large proportions, but when neglected it invariably ruins all trees it reaches. The only method of extermination is the cutting down of diseased trees.—Exchange.

OUR CALLING.

By R. H. Washburne.

Time with swiftly moving footsteps
Bears us onward toward life's close,
We must fill the fleeting moments
With our labor, not repose.
One by one we're moving onward,
And the end of life draws near;
Let us hasten lest our mission
Fail of its completion here.
Work to do lies all about us,
Let us to the vineyard go,
Gather sheaves for God's great harvest,
Ere life's sun is sinking low
Live then lives of steadfast purpose,
Live in deeds and not in word,
Living thus for others' blessing,
Heaven will be our sure reward.

There is more likely to be interesting reading in the political line in the comments on the acts of the legislature during the coming winter months than the story of any political campaign.

Attorney General Geo. E. Simpson has issued a bulletin of Recommendations to the Governor for certain changes and additions. The Attorney General is an important factor if he wishes to bring all his influence to bear.

Governor Eberhart states that the Primary Law is defective and expresses his confidence in the legislature to remedy the defects. Well, you know Ed Smith would like to have the entire Primary Law repealed, then what more could we expect of the governor than merely mention one of the leading questions of today.

The legislature of 1911, its personalities, and its accomplishments, will be watched by our readers with more interest than has ever been the case with any legislature. We have been specially fortunate in securing a weekly letter from Lynn Haynes, the man who wrote the wonderful book on the Legislature of 1909. The first issue of this letter appears this week on our front page and we would urge all our readers who are in any way interested in the doings of our State to read these letters. If you are not interested you ought to read them and you are sure to become interested.

There is absolutely no doubt in the minds of the most progressive scientists but that the United States is the most extravagant nation on the face of the earth. Now why not draw up our purse-strings a little during 1911 just for a trial and see how that would feel.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

Governor Adolph O. Eberhart's message to the legislature today may be briefly epitomized in two propositions:

1. There are too many state boards already.
2. We should create a number of state boards and bureaus.

The conclusion is as apparent as is the ringing conviction carried by the governor's eloquent silence on the question of county option.—St. Paul Daily News.

AS TO EXPRESS RATES.

How much did you pay the express company for carrying your Christmas gifts?

That raises the discussion of a live issue, the exorbitant rates that express companies are permitted, by grace of the inexhaustable patience of the American people, to soak us with. When will it end?

If the village merchant were not so tarnally afraid of the city mail order house, this country would speedily have parcels post, and that would bring the express companies to some sort of reckoning in the matter of rates. Some solution of the mail order house will have to be devised, for this eternal bleeding of the whole people by the express carriers must be stopped.

The parcels post will settle their hash.

PEOPLE, NOT MONEY, ELECTED.

There is more than a grain of comfort in the figures given out by the two congressional committees in the reports of their expenditures during the recent election.

The republicans disbursed $74,373; the democrats, $27,771. It was generally believed during the campaign that much larger sums were being dealt in, but the reports as filed with the clerk of the lower house of congress are accepted as true.

Every good citizen will find satisfaction in the knowledge that for once the longest financial pole did not knock down all the political persimmons. For once money did not cut any perceptible figure in the results. The voters elected congressmen, not the politicans of either party, nor the money they brought into the canvass from questionable and interested sources.

THE VALUE OF GOOD STATIONERY.

Too much stress can onthe laid upon the importance of sending out your correspondence in a manner that will create a good impression. Don't save money by first attacking your expenditures for stationery. Get the best. The impression created by good business stationery is lasting, and many a house has lost business owing to the fact that letterheads, advertising, etc., were gotton up in such a manner as to leave the receiver under the impression that the concern sending out such matter was doing business in an attic.—Business Man's Magazine.

CARNEGIE AND HUMAN HAPPINESS.

Andrew Carnegie has given $10,000,000 to promote the cause of universal peace, making a total of $180,000,000 which he has dedicated to the public out of his private fortune.

It is magnificent. But—

Does the career of Carnegie represent the highest service to mankind? Is this man, as a matter of fact, a great promoter of human happiness, a great benefactor? Let these facts answer:

His wealth is due to the maintenance of a prohibitive protective tariff on the products of his mills.

This tariff has laid a needless burden, directly or indirectly, on the shoulders of every man, woman and child in the United States. To keep it there the infamous Pennsylvania system of corrupt politics was invented and maintained. It is a festering sore on the republic.

No, not if he gives the last penny to chisel his name on libraries hospitals and peace temples.

Immortality is purchased with the gold coin of unselfish sacrifice, not with the bonds of industrial monopolies. And the undying love of the race is reserved for the soldiers of liberty, not for the exploits and oppressors of mankind.—The St. Paul Daily News.

FARMERS' SHORT COURSE.

Much interest is reported, in all parts of the state, in the "Farmers' Short Course," to be given at the School of Agriculture in St. Paul, commencing Jan. 13, 1911. Preparations are being made to take care, in dining-hall as well as in classroom, of as many mature "farmer students" as may desire to avail themselves of the advantages of this four-weeks' course. The classes will be combined for the morning lectures, and divided into sections for the afternoon practical work, which will be given simultaneously in several rooms. For the evening lectures, all will again gather in the large Assembly Hall, where they will have the satisfaction of listening to a series of addresses by distinguished specialists from the Experiment Stations of different states and from the Department of Agriculture at Washington. Besides these, some entertaining speakers will be heard on topics of general interest.

The date fixed for the opening of the Course follows the week of the meeting of the State Agricultural Society, of the Minnesota Field Crop Breeders' Association, and of the Minnesota Live Stock Breeders' Association, thus enabling farmers to take in all four events at the cost of one round-trip ticket to the Twin Cities.

For complete information, address J. M. Drew, University Farm, St. Paul.

TO ALFALFA GROWERS.

It would seem that for silos and banrs, as well as for dwelling, the hollow tile is to find increasing use on the farm. But the utility of the air-space is by no means confined to buildings constructed in whole or in part of this material. A stone wall, with on offset or thinner will of brick a few inches away, is made more than doubly effective in securing warmth. The "veneered" house—a baloon frame, with an outer wall of the thickness only of a single brick, separated from the sheating by four inches of air—is invariably more comfortable, winter or summer, than the house with walls of solid brick. And for thoes who must build of wood—even though lumber must be brought from the Pacific coast because our Minnesota pine is now too dear—the air-space is available through the use of back plastering, compo-board, or even of good roofing paper.

Some valuable suggestions in this line will be found in an article by F. L. Marsh, architect, in the Minnesota Farmers' Institute Annual No. 22, which can be had by sending 11 cents, for postage, to the Extension Division, University Farm,—C. R. B.

Names of Alfalfa Growers Wanted.

A comparative study of alfalfa in Minnesota, involving co-operative work with farmers in representative sections of the state, is being planned by the Agricultural Division of the Experiment Station. As a preliminary step to this investigation, it is desired to get in touch with all who are at present raising alfalfa in Minnesota, even though on a small scale, and with those who have tried it with only partial success or with complete failure.

It is hoped that each reader of this notice will kindly send the names and addresses of any who have had, to his knowledge, any experience with the growing of alfalfa in Minnesota, to A. C. Arny, Assistant Agriculturist, University Farm, St. Anthony Park, Minn.

CHANGING SEED.

The records of Experiment Stations do not show a necessity for changing seed grains to produce good and satisfactory yields. On the contrary, these records show that as a new seed becomes adapted to a locality and its environments, the yield has increased, with a tendency to improvement in quality. These results have been attained by careful cleaning and grading each year. More than a thousand varieties of grains have been tested at the Minnesota Station and it has become a matter of common observation that "new varieties from distant sources seldom gain satisfactory results until they become well acclimated."

Observation and experiment further show that the degeneration of varieties—or the so-called "running out"—results from "careless selection of seed and poor tillage rather than from natural causes." The Minnesota Station would reserve the best field of grain on the farm, or the best piece of that field, for a seed-plot, and seek by the use of the fanning mill and grader, to increase the yield and make the variety already grown more valuable to the locality.

REVERSING AN ADAGE

By HARVEY DALTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Force is the basis of everything. Force keeps us moving—indeed, alive. And, strange to say, force is the basis of Christianity. Perhaps what I mean will be plainer when I have told my story.

I had been a clergyman of the Second Presbyterian church in our town for several years when I began to be a doubter. I first doubted the miracles. That's the way all skeptics begin, and they think that if the miracles were out of the way they could believe all the rest. It was hard to get up in the pulpit every Sunday and preach what I didn't believe myself. Finally I applied for a leave on the usual clergyman's ground—a bad throat—and went on a sea voyage.

The ship I sailed in was a tramp. I was told that they had had fine weather for three months. Some of them said they'd be glad to see a hurricane. they had got so tired of sunshine and light breezes. But the day after I got aboard the weather changed, and, sure enough, the hurricane they wanted broke on us furiously. We were three days fighting seas set going by wind traveling at the rate of a hundred miles an hour. We had everything battened down, but the waves pounded out the glass over the cabins and so much water poured into the hold that all hands—passengers and all—were called upon to man the pumps.

During all this never did a sailor pass me but he scowled at me, and occasionally they would gather in knots, talking and shooting malignant glances at me. I didn't know what it meant, and before I found out the wind died down. But it came up again, and we went through three more days of much the same kind of weather. When this second storm was over I was standing on the deck one afternoon looking at a rainbow which seemed to me a bow of promise when a number of sailors headed by an old salt with rings in his ears came up to me, and the old fellow said:

"Parson, we've come to the conclusion that you're bringing these storms on us, and we don't want no more of 'em. We're goin' to pitch you overboard."

Seeing a capstan bar near me, I seized it to use as a means of defense, but a man behind me was too quick for me, and I was held in a titanic grip. This gave the others a chance. They closed and over I went.

The men continued to look over the side of the vessel to see what became of me, especially as that place was alive with sharks, and I had scarcely struck the surface when a big fellow gave a slow flap of his tail and floated toward me. I'm a good swimmer and had no difficulty in keeping on the surface. Besides, I had hung on to the capstan bar, which was enough to float me anyway. The shark came slowly up to me, turned on its side with a view to taking me in, opened wide its scissor jaws and—

Here the turning point of my story comes in. I put one end of the capstan bar on his lower jaw, and, just as the two started to get together, I wedged the other end in just back of his teeth on his upper jaw. And there he was.

I was floating about between the two rows of teeth, hanging on to the middle of the bar. Then when I was satisfied the shark could not bite I just floated out and up to the surface.

Nothing succeeds like success. The sailors who watched what I had done threw lines down to me and hauled me up again on deck.

The first thought that came into my head was the miracle I had most doubted—that of the prophet Jonah. I saw it in a different light than ever before. Hadn't I just been through a more remarkable occurrence? And how had I escaped? By the same way as I had been tossed overboard—force. I made up my mind to stop doubting and go to work. I saw that the sailors, after my experience with the shark, were afraid of me, and I resolved to profit by their fear. I proposed thereafter to preach the gospel peaceably when I could, forcibly when I must.

"Every man Jack of you," I thundered, "come aft to prayers!"

I led them to the after deck, not a man refusing to follow, and gave them half an hour's service. I established two services a day, and at every service I read them the story of the prophet Jonah, at the end asking them if any one of them disbelieved it. The first day one man said it was all a lie. I knocked him down. He got up, and I knocked him down again, and he kept getting up and I knocking him down, till at last he said, "I believe you, parson, and I reckon you're the man that lived three days in the whale's belly yourself."

Since then I have believed that force even in our calling is better than persuasion. At any rate, there are cases where persuasion won't work, but force will. And if there is any place where force will work better than persuasion it's among a ship's crew. I remained aboard that ship seven months, and I found the only way to induce the men to believe anything extraordinary was to hammer it into them. I thrashed a man into believing the story of Samson, two men for doubting the story of Joshua making the sun stand still and every man of the crew for ridiculing the falling of the walls of Jericho at the blowing of a ram's horn.

The Brooch

By DONALD MACKNIGHT

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

During the war between King Charles I. and his parliament two English families, the Vincents and the Traverses, were living on adjacent estates. Young Egbert Travers and Angela Vincent played together as children; then when the young Cavaliers were leaving their homes to support the king and Egbert marched to the war the parting made them sensible of the fact that they were lovers. Over the hedge that separated the two estates they plighted their troth, and the young lover dashed away thinking of the day when, the Puritans having been made to know their place and the authority of the king having been fully re-established, he would return to take up the pleasant life he had thus far led, made far happier by his union with Angela.

But, as under the struggle of 1861 to 1865 in America there lay, unrecognized at the time, the principle of civil liberty, so under that in England there was a principle of constitutional government. Travers was fighting for the king as an uncontrolled power, while his enemies were fighting for the king as he is today—a mere representative head of the government. The latter cause triumphed, the king was beheaded, and those who supported him, many of them deprived of their estates, found themselves without the means of subsistence.

Sir Edward Vincent, who espoused the parliamentary cause, had fallen at the battle of Marston Moor, and his wife had died during the struggle, leaving the Lady Angela an orphan. The Travers estate was confiscated, and Egbert Travers, instead of returning to his home, as he had anticipated when he set out to fight for the king, found himself penniless and without a roof over his head. An aunt of Angela's had taken what funds she could get together and gone to Holland. Angela decided to join this her only relative and remain with her till England became more settled under the sway of the parliament and the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell.

One evening when traveling toward the coast Angela heard a shot, the coach came to a stop, and a man on horseback appeared at the window, thrusting in one of those cumbersome implements with a flintlock which in those days they considered a pistol. A yellow strip of cloud reflecting the light of the setting sun shone on the man's face, while the features of the lady were concealed from him.

"I'll trouble you for your purse," he said.

"And now your jewels."

She removed a brooch from her throat and gave him that too. This seemed to satisfy him, and he told the coachman to drive on, but immediately stopped him to ask:

"Are you for the king or the parliament?"

"My father died for the parliament; my betrothed fought for the king!"

The highwayman straightway thrust his hand into his pocket, took out the purse and tossed it back into the carriage.

"It's only the cursed Roundheads," he said, "whom we force to give us food while we wait for the return of King Charlie."

He was feeling for the brooch when she stopped him.

"Keep it," she said, "for a remembrance. If I mistake not, you are one of those young men who, having lost your possessions in defense of the king, have taken to the road. The day may come when we shall meet again. If so, the brooch may be a means of recognition."

The highwayman lifted his hat, thanked the lady for her gift and signified to the coachman that he might drive on.

* * * * * * *

King Charles II. was entering London amid great rejoicings. A carriage was standing by the curb in the street where the royal procession must pass When the king had gone by a young man in the cavalcade, seeing a face in the carriage, reined in, crying:

"Angela!"

"The last time you were at my carriage window it was for a very different purpose," she replied.

"What mean you, sweetheart?"

"Sweetheart, indeed! You robbed me."

"What, of your heart?"

"Of my heart, forsooth! Of my purse."

The young man looked confused. "We must needs do something after Naseby," he said, hanging his head, "but I surely never robbed you, Angela."

"You have a brooch a lady gave you?"

"A brooch! Yes, I have a brooch."

"I gave it to you, saying that some day it might be a means of recognition."

"Come," she said, "mayhap you have been wearing it next your heart, thinking it to be the gift of some fair dame other than your betrothed."

"Indeed I have kept it near my heart!" he admitted. "Here it is." And he produced it.

The estates of these young people came again into their possession. Among the descendants of Egbert and Angela is the brooch of which Angela was robbed.

And with these figures before them is not likely that the people of North Dakota will ever be so foolish as to repeal the prohibition law or pass any laws calculated to weaken or hinder prohibition enforcement.

hisoffice in the Capitol proper. The ber that they can get up a conference on short notice. In fact, they seldom have a formal conference, but just naturally gravitate down to the office of the Indian Affairs Committee when there is need to talk over anything."

"And they talk about "Moses" Clapp's office, not Senators Clapp's. The big Minnesotan is a favorite with all the insurgents, as he is with his colleagues generally, and when the progressive band gets into council in his rooms men and things are discussed with a frankness that would make good reading if exploited,"

New Orleans and San Francisco are having abig talk over the location of the Panama Exposition in 1915. Congress is being besieged with a mass of literature bolstering up the claims of each city. The latest surprise sprung by the San Fricisco boosters came in the form of a map of the world, showing the Golden Gate City as the center of the world's population. This astounding claim was made, mind you, to of-set a previous one by the New Orleans boomers that the city at the mouth of the Missippi river was almost at the center of population in the United States

Now that Sereno R. Payne of fatherly countenance who was chiefly instrumental in fathering through the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill has announced his approval of the permanent tariff commission plan, it is reported that Champ Clark, who will shortly exchange places with uncle Joe Cannon, shies alittle at the proposition and is not as enthusiastic a supporter of the program as he was wont to be in the days when the minority leader was planning to get control of the House for the Democrats.

Samuel A. Langum of Preston, post master of the House of Representatives, who retires next December, has not been seen in Washington this session. However, his friends say he will be on hand after the holiday recess. The office is in charge of his assistant, Earnest P. Humphreys.

A Sign of a Crowd.

A very fat, puffing, elderly woman stepped up to the box office of the Chestnut Street theater and, placing a coin on the ticket window, said:

"Give me a ticket to the gallery."

"You are at the wrong window, madam," said the ticket seller. "The gallery ticket office is to your left as you go out of the door."

The old woman walked down the steps and, advancing a few feet, glanced around inquiringly and then let her gaze wander to the iron fire escape which was suspended above the sidewalk.

Going back to the main box office, she said:

"Say, me boy, Oi can't get in there; it's crowded."

"Crowded?"

"Sure, it must be," she said. "They have the steps pulled up."—Philadelphia Times.

With an Eye to the Future.

"It would probably take many generations of adversity to train Americans into the farseeing thriftiness of my people," once observed an American of Scotch birth. "I remember a case of a Scotchwoman who had been promised a new bonnet by a lady. Before she undertook the purchase the lady called and asked the good woman:

"'Would you rather have a felt or a straw bonnet, Mrs. Carmichael?'

"'Weel,' responded Mrs. Carmichael thoughtfully, 'I think I'll tak' a strae ane. It'll maybe be a mouthfu' to the coo when I'm done wi' it.'"—Lippincott's.

Crockett's Revenge.

There is a story of Crockett of "Stickit Minister" fame to the effect that when he offered his first volume to a Scotch firm it was returned with a polite note assuring him that there was no market for that sort of thing. The letter was marked "No. 396b." In later years when the same publishers asked him for one of his manuscripts he politely requested them to refer to their previous correspondence with him marked "396b."

The Gullible Public.

Two boulevardiers of Paris tell how they proved the gullibility of the public. They bet a friend 1,000 francs that by inserting three advertisements of three lines each in papers in the course of a week they would receive 500 francs without giving any explanation or making any promise to the senders.

On a Saturday the following advertisement appeared:

"Intelligent persons will send 5 francs to such an address."

On the Wednesday the insertion ran:

"Last possible day is Sunday. Send your 5 francs then, or refusal."

The third on the following Saturday was:

"All 5 francs posted after tomorrow will be inexorably refused."

By the Sunday morning seventy-seven postal orders for 4 shillings each had come in, and the next morning eighty-two more arrived. The gullible public had sent in not 500 francs but 785 francs in a week. Having proved their point and won their bet, the two boulevardiers naturally returned the postal orders to the ingenuous senders.

Same Old Story.

"Does he pay his alimony promptly?"

"No. He has to be urged and threatened every pay day; but, then, of course, I got used to that when we were living together."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HAINES ON LEGISLATURE.

expect good results this winter. The elections eliminated nearly every man responsible for the old conditions. The old Senate "combine" was broken by the defeat of such members as E. E. Smith, J. F. Calhoun, Geo. R. Laybourn, D. S. Hall, A. D. Stephens, V. B. Seward, S. F. Alderman, A. S. Campbell, E. S. Durment, C. A. Johnson, Geo. French, J. E. E. Robinson and P. R. Vail.

Such Senators as B. E. Sundberg, A. L. Hanson, Ole O. Sageng, T. E. Cashman, John Moonan, V. L. Johnson, J. T. Elwell, Joseph M. Hackney, Manley Fosseen, J. W. Pauly, C. J. Gunderson, O. G. Dale, J. J. Ahman, S. B. Bedford, S. A. Nelson, and C. R. Donaldson, all active in behalf of the people, were returned. John Saugstad and Carl Wallace, old reliable House members, were advanced to the Senate. In addition to this splendid nucleus, most of the new Senators are men of superior ability and committed to progressive legislation.

The same general situation prevails in the House. There is not space in this letter to designate the machine leaders who failed to survive the elections, nor to call the roll of the progressives who were returned. These identifications will be made in later letters. It is enough at this time to know that the greater number of experienced leaders are on the side of the people. And that the new members are generally inclined to be responsive to the public will. This encouraging condition has not existed at the beginning of any other session during the past twelve years.

* * *

Among the most important fundamental measures to come before the session will be: (1) A number of questions dealing directly with the legislature itself, such as changes in methods which will compel standing committees to act promptly and publicly, and reforms looking toward greater efficiency economy and deliberation. (2) Reapportionment. (3) Direct legislation, thru the Initiative, Referendum and Recall. (4) Extension of the primary, and improvement in the corrupt practices act.

* * *

The Otis decision has revived the whole railroad problem in a form bigger and more perplexing than ever fight with the transportation trust will center about the distance tariff bill, which will be championed again by Senator Cashman.

The public utility companies may make another attempt to create a public utilities commission and thus escape local regulation.

County option will bring about the biennial clash between the brewery organization and the reform forces.

* * *

Government means more to every citizen, not in sentiment, but in dollars and cents, than his or her business. Every legislative question involves your interests. Watch the session.

What Beauty Is Called.

Socrates called beauty a short lived tyranny; Plato, a privilege of nature; Carneades, a solitary kingdom; Aristotle, that it was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world; Homer, that it was a glorious gift of nature.—Housekeeper.

Firearms In Russia.

As an illustration of how closely everything is watched in Russia, take its system of registering firearms. When a weapon of any kind is purchased a permit must be secured from the local authorities. The name of the man who makes the purchase, with the number of the weapon, is recorded. If the purchaser ever wants to dispose of the weapon he must notify the authorities and cause the transfer to be recorded on the books of the firm which sold it.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

Twelfth Night was, in olden times, the season of universal festivity—of of masques, pageants, feasts, and traditionary sports. This comedy then would not disappoint public expectation, when it was found to contain a delightful combination of the delicate fancy and romantic sentiment of the poetic masque, with a crowd of revelling, laughing, or laugh-creating personages, whose truth all would recognize, and whose spirit and fun no gravity could resist.

SCHOOL ANNOUNCEMENT.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

School will re-open on Monday Jan. 9th. The pupils of the 7th and 8th grades will report at the old high school building, second floor. These two grades, enrolling some 150 students, will be organized on the department plan. This provides the grade teacher who excels in some subject will teach that subject to all the pupils in these grades. It is somewhat similar to high school organization and is in operation in some of the best schools in the state. The results obtained by this system are better than under the ordinary method. Nearness to the Lincoln building will also permit these pupils the use of the gymnasium and the privilege of hearing speakers and other entertainers who may appear before the high school students.

The children who have attended the Masonic block school will report at the old high school building, first floor. The 6th grade will take the northwest room and the others the southwest.

Miss Anderson's room at the Knox will be the one formerly used by Miss Ekholm. The high school students will report at the Lincoln. All other pupils and teachers will report at their former rooms. The superintendent's office will be found in the Lincoln building.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

A special short course of three months for boys and girls over 16 who have not been enrolled in the local schools this year will begin next Monday. No qualifications are required for entrance to this course, and the school's best talent will be employed to make the work useful and within the reach of everyone enrolled. The studies presented will include spelling; practical arithmetic applicable to every day affairs; agriculture, including as many departments of this study as can be presented in the three months; lessons in ordinary English; civics; simple accounting; carpentry; sewing and cooking.

Students are not required to take all of these, but only such work as they can accomplish. Neither is it necessary for them to attend all day; they may enter and leave to suit their out of school duties. Some may find it convenient to attend only half a day, and others from the country with chores to do may wish to leave for home at 3. All should enroll the first morning, however, and report at the office or the high school assembly. The course is designed particularly for those boys and girls from the country or the town who feel the need of more practical knowledge, but have duties which compel their absence for a large part of the school year. The course is absolutely free, but no one should enroll who cannot be present at least forty days.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

A course for Wednesdays only for farmers and their wives will begin on Wednesday, Jan., 18th, and continue for six weeks, closing with a two days' farmers' institute. These will be held in the gymnasium of the Lincoln building. Experts from the College of Agriculture, assisted by workers from the northwestern part of the state, will have charge of these meetings. The department of agriculture, manual training and domestic science in the local high school will co-operate. This course will be practical and the information presented must be applicable to local farm conditions. Announcements will appear later giving the particulars of each day's work. At present, the farmers and their wives should plan to meet this new and valuable proposition more than half way and make arrangements to spend every Wednesday at this farmers' school. It might be added that some form of amusement will be introduced into every session. This course, too, is free to all. The construction of the Lincoln school permits of this school extension work in this section of the state. It will be broadened in the future and the school buildings with their fine equipment will be made of service to more than those who formally enroll as ordinary students.

Saves Two Lives.

"Neither my sister nor myself might be living to-day, if it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery" writes A. D. McDonald of Fayetteville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 8, "for we both had frightful coughs that no other remedy could help. We were told my sister had consumption. She was very weak and had night sweats but your wonderful medicine completely cured us both. It's the best I ever used or heard of." For sore lungs, coughs, colds, hemorrhage, lagrippe, asthma, hay fever, croup whooping cough,—all bronchial troubles,—its supreme. Trial bottle free. 50c and $1.00. Guaranteed by All Druggists.

Remember the dance to be given in Setnes Hall Saturday Jan. 7th.

TWELFTH NIGHT

Twelfth Night is the Sunniest of the three plays of Shakepear's (golden prime of comedy.) As You Like It and Much Ado both have a larger admixture of the serious and sentimental, but that element in Twelfth Night is of the most delicate and ethereal character. The play was meant, as the title indicates. For the climax of the holiday season when the sport and revelry are at their height, and sober occupations and serious interests are laid aside and forgotten. Only enough of the shadow of the workaddy world is left to form a background to the lively picture, and to remind us that life is not all pleasure and pastime, but that after the Twelfth Night revels are over, the morning brings back its duties and responsibilities and "man goeth forth unto his labour until evening."

Mr. Walker has engaged Wm. Yule, the popular Canadian, for the part of Sir Toby Blech, and Miss Eddy, aclever young actress for the role of Viola.

Solves A Deep Mystery.

"I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart," wrote C. B. Rader, of Lewisberg, W. Va., "for the wonderful double benefit I got from Electric Bitters, in curing me of both asevere case of stomach troublt and of rheumatism, from which I had been an almost helpless sufferer for ten years. It suited my case as though made just for me." For dyspepsia, indigestion, jaundice and to rid the system of kidney poisions that cause rheumatism, Electric Bitters has no equal. Try them. Every bottle is guaranteed to satisfy. Only 50c at all Druggists.

TO AILING WOMEN

No woman can be healthy and well if the kidneys are sick. Poisons that pass off in the secretions when the kidneys are well, are retained in the body when the kidneys are sick. Kidneys and bladder become inflamed and swollen and worse troubles quickly follow. This is often the true cause of bearing down pains, lemeness, backache, sideache, etc. Uric poisoning also causes headaches, dizzy spells languor, nervousness and rheumatic pain.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, a remedy that cures sick kidneys. You will get better as the kidneys get better, and health will return when the kidneys are well. Let a Thief River Falls woman tell you about Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. O. Chritsofferson, 414 St. Paul Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results and they have also been taken with benefit by other members of our family. We keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house all the time and do not think we could get along without them."

DARING AIRMEN DROP TO DEATH

Hoxsey and Moisant Killed on the Same Day.

HIS MACHINE TURNS TURTLE

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 31.—Arch Hoxsey of Pasadena, Cal., king of the air, met a terrible death here. While attempting to make his famous spiral dip and at a height of 300 feet his machine turned turtle and dashed to the ground, burying the daring aviator beneath it. Death was instantaneous.

Hoxsey at the time of his death had been in the air more than two hours, trying for the Michelin prize for endurance, flying sometimes at a height estimated at 7,500 feet.

After his astounding evolutions in the air Hoxsey started to descend. Twice on the downward trip he executed his spiral dip—the one that led to the death of Ralph Johnstone in Denver only a short time ago. The third time the boy aviator attempted it he went over. A gust of wind caught the tilting planes of his machine and turned it completely over. There was absolutely no hope for Hoxsey. His machine shot to earth like a plummet and when the dazed and fear stricken mechanics and spectators rushed to the spot the body of the boy was found beneath the ruins of his machine crushed to an almost unrecognizable mass.

Moisant Killed at New Orleans.

New Orleans, Dec. 31.—John B. Moisant, the famous American aviator, was killed at Harahan Station, twelve miles above New Orleans, when his machine turned head downward at an altitude of 100 feet, throwing Moisant out. He landed on his head and was unconscious when picked up. He died before the special train on which he was placed could reach this city.

Moisant, in his fifty-horsepower Bleriot monoplane, with a special thirty-five-gallon gasoline tank aboard, left the aviation field in this city and flew to Harahan, where special grounds had been laid out over which the aviator was to try for the Michelin cup.

Moisant circled the field twice, trying to find a landing place. This was difficult, the field being on the edge of the Mississippi river and swamps on all other sides.

Suddenly, from some unknown cause, the monoplane turned its head downward; the horrified watchers saw Moisant pitch clear over the head of the machine, and fall like a plummet for a distance of fully a hundred feet, landing on his head.

THREE DEAD IN ST. PAUL FIRE

Another Woman Succumbs to the Injuries Received.

St. Paul, Jan. 1.—Mrs. Rose Moore, forty-five years old, victim of the fire in the Concord flats, is dead at St. Joseph's hospital, bringing the total death list to three.

Mrs. Moore is the woman who, after being burned from head to foot in the hallway on the second floor of the apartment building, rushed to the balcony and cast herself over the railing to the ground. Her death was due to the burns she received, to the shock of her fall and to the exposure.

Rescuers, thinking her dead, left her on the sidewalk while they endeavored to save others who were appealing from every window for help. Mrs. Moore is said to have lain on the sidewalk nude for twenty minutes.

TURKS DEFEAT BEDOUINS

Punitive Expedition Routs Tribesmen With Heavy Loss.

Constantinople, Dec. 29.—Turkish troops sent against the Bedouins have driven the revolters out of the El Kerak district, in the vilayet of Syria, near the Dead sea, after a sanguinary engagement.

Official advices received here state in the battle the Bedouins lost 450 killed and 600 prisoners. The Turkish losses were seven officers and seventy-seven men.

EIGHT MINERS ARE KILLED

Coal Car Knocks Props Down in West Virginia Shaft.

Bluefield, W. Va., Jan. 1.—Eight men were killed and two injured in the Lick Fork mine of the Red Jacket Coal company near Thacker, when a mine car ran away, knocking props down and allowing thousands of tons of coal to fall on the victims.

Fargo Man Frozen to Death.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 3.—Fargo and vicinity shivered with the thermometer at 18 below zero and a high wind blowing. Not once during the day, according to the United States weather bureau, did the thermometer rise above 12 below zero. William Thomas, aged sixty, was found dead beneath the south bridge, having frozen to death before he could reach his home.

WILLIAM LOEB, JR.

Said to Have Been Denied Membership in Exclusive Club.

COLLECTOR LOEB IS BARRED

Refused Admission to Union League Club at New York.

New York, Dec. 29.—William Loeb, Jr., collector of the port of New York and secretary to the former president of the United States during the Roosevelt administration, has been denied membership in the Union League club of New York city. Membership in this "holy of holies" of exclusive Republicanism was denied him at the December meeting of the club, held on Thursday night of last week.

BRANDS REPORT UTTERLY ABSURD

Roosevelt Has Not Declared for Taft in 1912.

New York, Dec. 29.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has not declared for the renomination of President Taft by the Republican party in 1912. Colonel Roosevelt made this fact most emphatic at his office here.

"All of this talk about me supporting Mr. Taft in 1912 is utterly absurd," Mr. Roosevelt said. "There has been nothing like that discussed by me with any one at any time.

"And so far as the statements are concerned that Collector Loeb has become a Taft dispenser of patronage in New York in order to secure the state delegation for the president's renomination in 1912, I know nothing more of the matter than what I have read in the newspapers. So far as I know there is nothing in it."

The statement followed the publication of a dispatch from Washington setting forth that Collector Loeb of New York had been appointed helmsman of the Taft political fortunes as regards 1912, that Colonel Roosevelt had made overtures of peace with Mr. Taft and that these overtures had been welcomed at the White House.

The Washington dispatch laid considerable emphasis on the statement that Colonel Roosevelt had promised President Taft that he would in no way, shape or form permit his own name to be used in connection with 1912. The story appeared to the colonel as having been inspired in the White House, hence the promptness and terseness of his denial.

JOINT COMMISSION PLANNED

United States and Canada May Unite on Rate Regulation.

Washington, Dec. 30.—As a result of a long series of conferences between Judge Martin A. Knapp, chairman of the interstate commerce commission, and Hon. J. P. Mable, chief of the railway commission of Canada, an agreement has been reached to recommend to the governments of the United States and Canada the creation of an international railroad commission which shall have supervision over railway rates in effect between the countries.

ALL CIVIL SUITS DROPPED

Government Is Anxious to Send Packers to Jail.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Assistant United States District Attorney James H. Wilkerson has issued a statement regarding his action in sweeping aside civil suits to make way for criminal prosecution of the men composing the National Packing company.

Mr. Wilkerson says there is but one reason for the dismissal of the civil cases and that is the desire of the government for immediate vigorous criminal prosecution of the packers.

NET GAIN OF TWO SEATS

Coalition Has 126 Majority in New House of Commons.

London, Dec. 22.—The government party will have a coalition majority of 126 in the new parliament as a result of the elections just closed. This is two more than the combined advantage over the Unionists in the preceding parliament. The status of the parties is as follows:

SIXTEEN DIE IN EXPLOSION

Boiler Blows Up in Massachusetts Ice Plant.

NUMBER OF MEN INJURED

Over One Hundred Laborers Were Standing Near the Building in Search of Employment.

Pittsfield, Mass., Dec. 30.—Sixteen men were killed by the explosion of a boiler at the plant of the Morewood Lake Ice company at Morewood Lake, two miles south of this city.

Twelve were killed instantly, one died shortly after the accident and three others died in the hospital. In addition twelve men were injured, and it was stated at the Home of Mercy, the hospital to which they were removed, that it was feared that two of the patients would die.

About 125 men, mostly Poles and Italians, were gathered in groups about the building waiting employment at cutting ice.

MACHINE DROPS FIFTY FEET

French Aviator and His Passenger Are Killed.

Issy-les-Moulineaux, France, Dec. 29.—M. Laffort, the French aviator, and M. Pola, a passenger, were instantly killed when the former's machine fell from a height of fifty feet.

Laffort was preparing to start for Brussels in competition for the Automobile club's prize for a flight with a passenger from Paris to Brussels and return.

A big crowd was present when, both to entertain the spectators and test his machine, Laffort circled above the aviation field several times. Suddenly the steering gear jammed and the aeroplane dropped to the ground. The occupants were caught in the wreckage and were dead before aid could reach them.

CHOCTAW CHIEF IS DEAD

Head of Indian Tribe Passes Away in Oklahoma.

McAlester, Okla., Dec. 29.—Green McCurtain, governor of the Choctaw Indian nation and a prominent witness in the Gore-McMurray alleged bribery investigation, is dead at Kiuta, Okla., according to a telegram received here.

In the recent congressional investigation into charges by Senator Gore of Oklahoma that politicians attempted to bribe him to approve the sale of Indian lands McCurtain testified that he had received large amounts of money for inducing tribesmen to sell their lands to the McMurray syndicate.

SUICIDAL ATTEMPT FAILS

New York Banker Will Recover From Poison.

New York, Jan. 1.—Word was received at the district attorney's office that Joseph G. Robin, the bank director who swallowed poison, showed improvement and that the chances for his complete recovery are now good. Physicians said he had an even chance to get well.

Robin is a patient in the prison ward of Bellevue hospital. A constant watch is being kept over him. The date for his arraignment on the indictment charging grand larceny has not been fixed.

"INDIAN LID" UP TO TAFT

President Will Take Action on Minnesota Case Soon.

Washington, Dec. 30.—President Taft will within a week take action relative to the Minnesota liquor situation.

Officials of the Anti-Saloon league have been given assurances that nothing will be done in the case until they have had an opportunity to furnish to the president certain information relating to the Indian population of the state.

INDIANA BANK IS ROBBED

Bandits Clean Up Institution With Theft of $6,416.

When the officials arrived in the morning they found the door of the bank open and the safe looted.

The vault had been robbed of $6,416 during the night and valuable papers were scattered over the floor.

MANY RUSSIANS POISONED

Elder Mistakes Deadly Mixture for Communion Wine.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 30.—Three communicants have died and twenty-nine others are seriously ill as a consequence of a mistake made by an elder of the Lutheran church in the Peterhof district, who filled a communion cup with a mixture of sulphurated chromate instead of wine.

Charlotte Cushman's Warning.

One icy night Charlotte Cushman and Lawrence Barrett came out of the theater together. The steps were dangerously slippery, and it was with difficulty that they kept their feet at all. As they totteringly descended the great actress said to her companion quite in her Lady Macbeth manner: "Take a good grip on my arm, Lawrence, and if I slip hold on like grim death. But if you slip in the name of heaven let go."

"SUNKIST" BY DAY—MADE SWEETER BY NIGHT

(Special Correspondent)

These are ideal days and nights for rounding out the ripening season of the delicious "Sunkist" California oranges. Few persons, doubtless, among those living remote from the lands "where the orange blossoms grow" are aware of the anxiety of the orchard owners regarding the "weather probabilities" every season. Fortunately the California orange growers can generally rely on a happy combination of warm sunshiny days and cool nights, both of which are important for the production of the most perfect fruit, and the present season's record for these favorable conditions has been exceptionally good It might, naturally be supposed that cool nights would hardly have a beneficial effect on this product of the tropics, and that a continuous warm temperature, day and night, would be better. Both conditions, however, are necessary—bright warm days and cool nights. The warm sunshine is what gives flavor to the orange, while the cool night air is a necessary agent in imparting sweetness.

Wonderful Praise Accorded Peruna the Household Remedy

Mrs. Maria Goertz, Orienta, Oklahoma, writes:

"My husband, children and myself have used your medicines, and we always keep them in the house in case of necessity. I was restored to health by this medicine, and Dr. Hartman's invaluable advice and books. People ask about me from different places, and are surprised that I can do all of my housework alone, and that I was cured by the doctor of chronic catarrh. My husband was cured of asthma, my daughter of earache and catarrh of the stomach, and my son of catarrh of the throat. When I was sick I weighed 100 pounds; now I weigh 140.

"I have regained my health again, and I cannot thank you enough for your advice. May God give you a long life and bless your work."

The Battle of a Week.

The battle of a week was the great conflict at Tours in which Charles Martel overthrew the Saracens, A. D. 732. The members of the Saracen army are variously estimated at from 400,000 to 700,000, and the historians say that 375,000 were killed on the field. It is suspected that these figures are a gross exaggeration, but it is certain that few battles of history have been either so bloody or so decisive.

HIGHER RATES NOT NECESSARY

Brandeis Discusses Conditions of Railroads.

TELLS ABOUT THEIR NEEDS

Attorney for the Shippers Declares That Higher Standards of Efficiency and Not Increased Freight Charges Are the Needs of American Railways.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Higher standards of efficiency, not increased freight charges, are the needs of American railways.

This proposition is the essence of the brief filed with the interstate commerce commission by Louis D. Brandeis, counsel for the traffic committee of commercial organizations of the Atlantic seaboard, in the investigation by the commission of proposed advances in freight rates in official classification territory—the section east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers.

Railroad managers, Mr. Brandeis contends, should not look without, but within.

"If their net income is insufficient," he says, "the proper remedy is not higher rates but scientific management, which will lower costs and bring increased business as well as making higher wages possible. If their credit is impaired the remedy is not higher rates, but advanced methods and the elimination of questionable practices. They will maintain credit by deserving it."

Would Affect Only Class Rates.

The proposed advances in classification territory would affect only class rates. The total freight tonnage for 1909 was 626,231,976. Less than 8 per cent moved under class rates, yet of the freight revenue of these railroads for the calendar year 1909 nearly 22 per cent ($103,271,823) was derived from class rates. These rates govern over 4,000 articles, including most of the necessities and competitive articles. The proposed increases vary from 8 to 29 per cent.

Mr. Brandeis indicates that he considers the great question in the investigation is the statement of President Willard of the Baltimore and Ohio that "the tendency of rates will be to continue upward."

"As an alternative to the railroads' practice of combining to increase rates," suggests Mr. Brandeis, "we offer co-operation to reduce costs; scientific management, under which, as costs fall, wages rise."

The consumer, he points out, should "beware of the vicious circle of ever increasing freight rates and ever increasing cost of living."

The burden of proof of necessity of the proposed advances being upon the railroads, Mr. Brandeis maintains that the roads "have failed so completely to sustain their burden of proof that approval of the new tariff should be denied."

The contention of the railways that the possibilities of economy in railroading have been exhausted is denied. Mr. Brandeis asserts that advances in transportation have been relatively few and some of those have been forced by law against strenuous opposition.

It Eliminates Graft.

It is indicated that scientific management increases the efficiency of the individual and of the plant and also increases the emoluments of both capital and labor. It eliminates graft in the purchasing and in construction work. Publicity, argues Mr. Brandeis, is an essential condition of freedom from graft.

It is maintained that "at least $1,000,000 a day could be saved by scientific management" of American railroads.

Mr. Brandeis urges that no evidence was presented to sustain the contention that the proposed increases in class rates are reasonable. He says that no increase in any class rate properly can be made without hearing the shippers and that the pending increases were fixed without such hearing.

He argues further that "the injustice in the existing classifications is such that no horizontal advance could be made without great hardship; that it would seriously increase the cost of living, and that it would reduce long distance tonnage and hence the revenue of the railroads."

As to the argument of the railroads that they need additional revenues on accounts of required increases in wages, Mr. Brandeis says:

"Every railroad which is properly financed can meet existing needs by scientific management."

Kick on Rail Rates.

Milwaukee, Jan. 3.—That the freight rates from Iowa, South Dakota and Minnesota points are about 3 cents lower to Duluth than over the same distances to Milwaukee is the charge filed with the interstate commerce commission by George A. Schroeder, freight expert of the Milwaukee chamber of commerce, in a petition that the Northwestern, the St. Paul and the Omaha roads be forced to lower their grain rates to Milwaukee.

JOHN M. WEEKS.

Slated for Chairman of Republican National Committee.

FOR REPUBLICAN CHAIRMAN

Said John W. Weeks of Massachusetts Will Be Chosen.

Washington, Dec. 30.—It is planned by the leaders of the Republican party, with the hearty approval of President Taft, to have a special meeting of the Republican national committee in January at Washington, when in all probability Representative John W. Weeks of Newton, Mass., will be elected chairman. Postmaster General Hitchcock, who tentatively resigned as chairman in favor of J. F. Hill of Maine, who is acting chairman, will relinquish his connection with the committee altogether and devote all his time to the postoffice department.

INCREASE IN WAGES GIVEN TRAINMEN

Affects Seventy-five Thousand Men West of Chicago.

Chicago, Dec 31.—Conductors and trainmen on fifty railroads running north, south and west of Chicago were granted a flat increase in wages of 10 per cent. The increase was granted after a month's negotiation and affects 75,000 members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors and will mean an added expense of $5,000,000 a year to the railroads. The increase becomes effective at once.

DUNN CHOSEN FOR SPEAKER

Albert Lea Man Choice of Minnesota Republicans.

ARNESON IS CHIEF CLERK

Herman Man Defeats Archie H. Vernon of Little Falls—Attempt to Take Away Fruits of Mr. Dunn's Victory Meets With Failure.

St. Paul, Jan. 3.—The selection of H. H. Dunn of Albert Lea as the Republican candidate for speaker of the house, which has been almost a foregone conclusion for a month or more, was confirmed by the Republican caucus by a vote of 55 to 29. Those of the friends of J. A. A. Burnquist of St. Paul who did not leave him when the band wagon was started late in November stood by him and went on record for him.

Having failed to select Burnquist for speaker some of his supporters made an effort to take away from Mr. Dunn the fruits of his victory by naming a committee on committees. They declared that this was not an effort to hamper the speaker in his work, but was in line with progressive reforms in congress and elsewhere. None of the fifty-five who voted for Dunn voted for this resolution and nearly half of Burnquist's supporters voted against it, so it was lost by a vote of 15 to 67.

The other surprise of the house organization was the election of Oscar Arneson of Herman as chief clerk and the defeat of A. H. Vernon of Little Falls, who held the place two years ago. Arneson was first assistant two years ago and was second assistant in 1907, when Vernon was first assistant.

Officers of the Senate.

President, Lieutenant Governor S. Y. Gordon, Browns Valley; secretary, George W. Peachey, Owatonna; first assistant secretary, W. A. Simonson, Glenwood; second assistant secretary, Alex Anderson, Wabasha; engrossing clerk, S. G. L. Roberts, Pine City; enrolling clerk, Carl Anderson, St. Paul; sergeant-at-arms, J. H. Ege, Minneapolis; assistant sergeant-at-arms, A. A. Christianson, Tracy; chaplain, Rev. Andrew D. Stowe, Minneapolis.

The officers of the house are:

Speaker, H. H. Dunn, Albert Lea; chief clerk, Oscar Arneson, Herman; first assistant, G. A. Hage, Crookston; second assistant, Jerome Rice, Minneapolis; enrolling clerk, J. G. Thoreen, Stillwater; engrossing clerk, Crawford Sheldon, Little Falls; sergeant-at-arms, George H. Deans, Foreston; assistant, Barney Seiz, Red Wing; postmaster, William Scanlan, Minneapolis; assistant, O. O. Holman, Slayton; chaplain, Rev. Moses E. Maxwell, St. Paul.

When the two houses met in their respective chambers at noon the first business was the taking of their oaths of office, which were administered by Chief Justice Start in the senate and by Associate Justice Calvin L. Brown in the house. Lieutenant Governor Gordon presided in the senate and Secretary of State Schmahl wielded the gavel in the house until it was organized. The two bodies then elected the officers named in list above. The Democrats cast their votes for Albert Pfaender of New Ulm for speaker.

LANDS IN THE NORTHWEST

Commissioner's Report Shows Them to Be in Demand.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The report of the land commissioner for the fiscal year 1910, ended June 30 last, shows that 119,600 acres, representing 2,922 applications, were entered in Minnesota in the twelve month period. The receipts of the government from these lands aggregated $209,425. Lands to the extent of 2,337,208 acres were entered in South Dakota, the receipts therefrom aggregating $1,009,800; North Dakota 804,885 acres entered, showed receipts $949,487. There remains unappropriated and unreserved in Northwestern states land as follows:

The report contains an account of the logging operations on the ceded Chippewa lands of Minnesota during the year. It is estimated that during the past seven seasons 826,476,000 feet board measure, valued at $5,346,786, have been cut off these lands.

The statement is made that 100,000,000 feet more timber remains to be logged under existing contracts.

Minnesota Man Killed.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Jan. 3.—David Lacoe of this city was instantly killed in the woods near Baudette. He was employed by one of the logging firms in that district and was cutting down a tree when another one was felled near him, the top of which struck him on the top of his head, fracturing his skull. He leaves a wife and seven small children.

Kingsley's Stammering.

Charles Kingsley loved talking, had an enormous deal to say on every conceivable subject and longed to say it. But his stammer was always checking him. He gurgled and gasped and made faces and would sometimes break off in a conversation or a meal, rush out into the open air and liberate his suppressed emotions by rapid exercise or physical exertion. Yet, as has often been observed in similar cases, when he had to preach the stammer subsided, and, though there was some facial contortion, the flow of the discourse was never interrupted. He said to his friend, Tom Hughes: "I could be as great a talker as any man in England but for my stammering. When I am speaking for God in the pulpit or paying by bedsides I never stammer. My stammer is a blessed thing for me. It keeps me from talking in company and from going out as much as I should do but for it."—G. W. E. Russell in Winchester Guardian.

put together. That day he was killed. He had no tail, and from that he was called Courtaut. There was as much talk about him as if he had been an outlaw of the woods or a cruel captain, and when he lived folk said to one another as they went forth to labor in the fields, 'Look out for Courtaut.' And on this day he was taken through Paris in a cart, dead, with his great jaws open, and all the people went to see, and they made holiday and rejoiced, because Courtaut could trouble them no more."

Rented Wedding Cakes.

There was something wrong with the cake, the baker said. It looked all right, and it smelled all right, but his artistic sense told him it would not taste all right.

"Then fix it up with an extra coat of icing and we will keep it for a renter," said the proprietor.

"Who in the world would rent a cake?" some one asked.

"Wedding parties," said he. "They want a big cake in the center of the table for show, but a cake of that size good enough for a wedding would cost more than they can afford to pay, so they order fine cake put up in individual boxes for the guests and use the bride's cake just as an ornament. They don't buy it; they rent it. Sometimes a cake is rented a dozen different times. After each wedding it is freshened up with a new coat of icing and looks as good as new for the next occasion. A good renter fetches about $3 a wedding."—New York Press.

Sarcastic Cabby.

A certain nobleman, who may be called Lord X., bears the reputation of being somewhat stingy in money matters. On a wet afternoon he hired a cab to take him to Victoria station. Arrived at the station, he handed the cabman a shilling and of course was met by the inevitable demand for an extra sixpence.

"Certainly not," said the other promptly. "You came the longest way as an excuse to extort money. Why didn't you go through St. James' park?"

The cabman saw he had no chance and said sneeringly:

"Cos St. James' park is closed. That's why."

"Nonsense," said the other sternly.

"It's right, though," was the grave reply. "They say that Lord X. dropped a shilling coming across the park last evening, and the gates are closed until they find it."—London Tit-Bits.

Lisbon In Pepys' Times.

Pepys' Diary gives an unflattering picture of the Lisbon court in his day. On Oct. 17, 1661, he talked with Captain Lambert, fresh from "Portugall," who told him it was "a very poor, dirty place—I mean the city and court of Lisbon; * * * that there are no glass windows, nor will they have any; * * * that the king has his meat sent up by a dozen of lazy guards and in pipkins sometimes to his own table and sometimes nothing but fruits and now and then half a hen. And now that the infanta is become our queen she is come to have a whole hen or goose to her table, which is not ordinary." Some few months later, when some "Portugall ladys" had come to London, Pepys found them "not handsome and their farthingales a strange dress. * * * I find nothing in them that is pleasing, and I see they have learnt to kiss and look freely up and down already and I do believe will soon forget the recluse practice of their own country."

Incapacitated.

"The fussy individual who always has a run in with the waiter never fares any better than the rest of us who are satisfied to take things as they come," said the homeless bachelor. "I took breakfast with one of these fussers the other morning in a little cafe uptown that was new to both of us.

"All he wanted was a cup of coffee and a couple of boiled eggs. But you might have thought the universe depended upon those eggs. After having given the waiter minute instructions as to their preparation, he sat with his watch in his hands.

"Finally the eggs came, and there was a lot more powwow. As he cracked the shell of one he turned to the waiter and said, 'Are you sure these eggs are positively fresh?'

"And the waiter, who had watery eyes and a very red nose, replied with all seriousness: 'I really can't say, sir. I have a frightful cold in my head.'"—New York Times.

A Queer Freak.

Milreau, who was said to have been connected with some of the best families in France and to have possessed considerable means until ruined by the Panama canal disaster, was one of the best friends the beggars of Paris ever had, and to obtain funds for helping them he became a systematic thief. He used to frequent the fashionable streets during the day and pick pockets, and by night, dressed in ragged clothes, he dispensed the spoils to the first beggars he met. For years he continued the practice without being suspected, and it was by pure chance that he eventually did fall into the hands of the police. When his lodgings were searched sufficiently empty purses were found to fill a large packing case, and it was made clear that he had stolen hundreds of watches and scarfpins, while he had been pinching and contriving to live a respectable man on a few francs a week saved from the ruin of his fortune.

The Literary Man.

When I get home where I live at I will remove my wife's new hat from my desk and my daughter's socks and my wee baby's building blocks, three spools of thread, some tatting frames, a box or two of cut out games, some scissors and my wife's new waists, a box of tacks and some tooth paste, a cookbook and a sewing kit, some letters that my wife has writ, some apple cores the kids put there, one or two wads of handmade hair, a bottle of shoe polish, too, a hairbrush and a baby shoe, some stockings that are worth a darn, a skein or two of darning yarn, a picture book or two or three, a picture babe has drawn for me, a rubber ball, a piece of gum, some picture postcards and a drum. I'll do all that when I get home and then write an immortal poem that will have Swinburne double crossed—if all my pencils are not lost.—Houston Post.

Wrecks and Cats and Dogs.

There is an odd provision in the English law on wrecks. It used to be that wrecks, like pretty nearly everything else, belonged to the king. Sometimes, if a vessel were only partly wrecked and it could be raised, an owner was averse to surrendering it, but it was generally seized for the king in accordance with the law until the question came up as to just what was a wreck. It was generally admitted that when all hands were lost that was a wreck, but as they wanted to get as narrow a definition as they could they got parliament to establish a law that in future nothing shall be considered a wreck out of which a cat or a dog escapes alive, and from that time until the present day no vessel coasts about England without carrying a cat or dog.

Canvas Currency.

Banknotes appear in much the same form throughout the world and have always done so except in China, where the earliest note was made of canvas, some six centuries before the Christian era. It was more like a tablecloth than a banknote, its length being about two meters, or six feet six inches. This form of note was not very convenient when large sums were concerned, so later the note was printed on parchment, and all other forms of money were suppressed. One emperor issued notes representing more than three thousand millions. But the money was never popular, and gradually the notes were retired.

The lady was making some remarks about the kind of clothing some other ladies at church had on.

"The finest garment a woman can wear," said her husband, "is the mantle of charity."

"Yes," she snapped, "and it is about the only dress, judging by the fuss they make over the bills, that some husbands want their wives to wear."

Sweden's "Church Boat."

The "church boat" is a popular institution in Sweden. It brings families to service from the farms around Lake Siljan to Leksand. The water route is the nearest and most convenient, and so the big boat goes from farm to farm along the shore picking up the churchgoers, who later return by the same route.—Wide World Magazine.

mother-in-law, however, she got nothing but sour advice, warnings and veiled abuse. One day the mother-in-law, looking fixedly at the mother with her baby on her lap, said angrily:

"A woman has no right to have a child if she doesn't know how to hold it."

"No, nor a tongue either," was the quiet reply.—Detroit Free Press.

DREDGE NO. 19 DID GOOD WORK.

Dredge No. 19 kept at work until Wednesday of last week, when it closed down on account of a breakdown. This dredge has done great business. It dug two laterals on this side of the river, completed two on the other side and got within 1800 feet of the end of the third one. Its work has completely drained out the Olson lakes east of Thief River, which will result in the making of a lot of productive land, where formerly water stood all the year around. With the opening of spring, both it and the big dredge No. 16, will get busy and before fall all the laterals will be completed and the river straightened and deepened, which will certainly work a great transformation in all the big sections of the country by the system. Not only will the water be carried off, thus making good hay and farm land of thousands of acres that have heretofore been entirely nonproductive, but the vexing question of roads to and from Middle River will be solved.—Middle River Pioneer.

DR BOOKMAN LEAVES OUR CITY

A large number of the friends of Dr. Bockman gathered at the Evelyn Hotel on Thursday last. The occasion being the departure of that gentleman from our city, to take a position in the City of Minneapolis and to practise his profession. The banquet was a six course affair.

After dinner there was "a feast of reason and a flow of souls." Mayor Hamre presiding with his usual grace and dignity. The following gentlemen contributed in no small degree to the enjoyment of the company by speeches in which flashes of wit alternated with more serious sentiments: Hon. D. P. O'Neill, and Messrs. W. Smith, A. H. Fasel, Olaf Ramstad, W. B. Fuller, C. R. Crandall, F. E. Weiland, F. J. Stebbins, and C. L. Hanson. Among those present were M. V. Evenson, R. P. Lambert, Dr. K. P. Carson, H. P. Riggs. J. A. Swore, J. P. Curtis, Dr. A. W. Swedenburg, Dr. O. F. Melby, Dr. H. E. Heiber, Dr. G. W. Booren, John Morgan, F. H. Herrick, J. H. McKinney, J. O. Myrland, Ole Torrison, B. Dan Bjorkman, J. J. Abbot, men, identified with the commerce, the professions and politics of our city and state.

The six years since Dr. Bockman left college, with the exception of one year spent in Copenhagen and Berlin in the study of his profession, have been spent in our midst, and in that time the doctor has won a host of friends.

Mrs. Bockman too has gained an enviable position in society and their friends will regret to see this admirable family leave, while rejoicing in a recognition of their worth that has led to this upward step in their career. The experience acquired while the doctor served our city for 2 years in the official capacity as health officer has aided him and prepared him for the larger sphere in the City of Minneapolis.

BEWARE OF A FRAUD CAPTAIN.

Headquarters Recruiting District of Minnesota, United States Marine Corps, 167 East 3rd Street, St. Paul Minnesota, December 29, 1910.

Dear Sirs:

For the protection of the public and in the interest of the United States Marine Corps, I request that you publish this communication. I have been informed by Mr. S. M. Orton, of Watab, Minnesota, that a certain individual is traveling in Watab, Minn., and vicinity under the title Captain E. T. Geittmann, U. S. Marine Corps, in charge of United States Marine Corps Recruiting Station, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Concerning this, I desire to inform the public that this man is an imposter and fraudulently using the above title. Beside the undersigned there is no Marine Corps Officer on Recruiting Service or any other duty in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Northern Wisconsin. There is no officer named "Geittmann" in the United States Marine Corps or United States Nevy.

In view of the fact that the above mentioned impersonator is a fraud, I desire to caution the public not to extend any credit to or center into any contract with this person, as such action would inevitably result in loss to the victim.

All newspapers and periodicals of the Middle West and Northwest are requested to publish this statement conspicuously.

Very respectfully,
RUSSELL H. DAVIS,
First Lieutenant, U. S. Marine Corps
In charge of Recruiting, District of Minnesoat.

GOV. EBERHART'S MESSAGE BOILED TO 200 WORDS.

The state has too many boards and they are too large.

All fee officers should be abolished, and oil inspection should be turned over to the dairy and food department boiler inspections by the state labor bureau, and logs and lumber by the forestry commissioner.

The constitution should be amended to provide for reorganizing the state land department.

The constitution should be amended to provide for a state board of education.

A fair reapportionment is imperative.

The primary law should be amended.

State should have a public utilities commission.

Gov. Eberhart suggests that the various departments of the state be reorganized of four great bureaus of several departments, each as follows:

Bureau of Public Domain:
- State lands.
- Forestry
- Geology and Mines.
- Game and Fish.
- Waterways.
- Agriculture and Imigration.
- Public Highways.

Bureau of Public Health and Safety:
- Public Health.
- Dairies and Food.
- Labor.

Bureau of Education:
- Schools.
- State Institutions.

Bureau of Revenue and Accounting:
- Tax Commission.
- Railway and Warehouse Commission.
- Public Examiner.
- Banks.
- Insurance.

Air as a Building Material.

Since dry air, in confinement, is the most perfect non-conductor of heat known, it is natural that, as scientific principles are more and more applied in the construction of buildings, architects should seek to employ it in an increasing measure as a "filler" for walls, floors and roofs. Air-spaces in these make the building warmer in winter, cooler in summer. The extra thickness given walls, in order to introduce such spaces, tends also to greater stability, and affords opportunity for superior architectural efforts.

The hollow clay, or "terra cotta" blocks which are now so rapidly coming into use, as one of the results of the high and still advancing cost of lumber, would seem to carry "to the limit" the employment of air as a building material. Yet, as the walls of the new "St. Paul" hotel, and several other large buildings recently erected in the Twin Cities, bear witness, there is no lack of stability apparent in such construction. At University Farm, this new material has been tested in various buildings, large and small, alone and in connection with hollow brick, and the results have so far been entirely satisfactory.

TOO MUCH BUTTER FAT?

The moaive which, above all others, appealed to the law-makers of Minnesota, when they enacted that milk sold for food shoud contain not less than three-and-a-half per cent of butter-fat, was the protection of children from the use of impoverished milk. The popular idea has been that, the richer the milk in butter-fat the better it is for the child. There were some who claimed that the Minnesota standard shoud be set even higher.

There are some wise mothers, however, who have learned that the milk of the cows most prized in the dairy is too rich to be fed, in its natural state, to young children; and that it is better to dilute it, for their use, with a liberal amount—say one-quarter to one-half, or even three-fifths—of warm water.

The judgment of these mothers is supported by the authority of T. L. Haecker, Professor of Dairy Husbandry and Animal Nutrition in the Minnesota College of Agriculture, who declares that milk of the standard now required in this state is too rich for the stomachs of children.

Prof. Haecker has arrived at this conclusion as the result of a series of observations, on both children and yong animals, covering a long period. He found, first that children throve better on milk containing but a comparatively small amount of butter-fat than upon the "richer" milk of the pure-bred cows at the Experment Station.

While no one can be more zealous than is Prof. Haecker in advocating the breeding of cows capable of a high products of milk rich in butter, he thinks that a mistake is made in feeding such rich milk, undiluted, to children. What is not best for calves can hardly be considered best for children. He finds that if the calf of a cow whose milk is very rich in butter-fat is allowed to nurse at will, the breeder is very likely to have a bad case of indigestion on his hands the next day, if he is not minus a calf.

It would appear that the surpassing richness of the milk of certain breeds of cattle is the result of a gradual, long-continued departure from natural conditions, under which the milk, while less valuable for butter-making was on the whole better adapted to the use of growing children; and that a return to those conditions might therefore contribute something to the cause of health and the reduction of infant mortality. It is suggested, also, that if the attention now given to securing "three-and-a-half per cent butter-fat," in all milk sold to the public, should be diverted to securing greater purity, through scrupulous cleanliness in all the operations of the dairy, the gain to the children would be further perceptible.—C. R. Barns, University Farm.

ta, Wiscinsin, Illionis, Kansas and Nebraska people, yet none of these Senate insurgents are so few in numstates show a decrease in population during the past ten years.

Out side of Minneapolis and St. Paul the great state of Minnesota has shown no increase in population during the past ten years, while North Dakota, just across the river, proudly points with pride to an increase of over 80 per cent.

The Journal would be glad to hear what explanation some whisky controlled newspapers have to make of these figures—figures the government has paid out for obtaining and given out.

In latitudes where the strawberry bed requires a covering for winter protection this should not be put on until the ground is thoroughly frozen. When the covering is applied, and this may be straw, cornstalks or coarse hay, it should be only thick enough to effectively prevent the alternate thawing and freezing during the winter and early spring months.

In view of the number of sheep which have been killed in different parts of the country the past few weeks by worthless neighborhood dogs whose only other activity seems to be chasing teams on the public highway, it would seem a very appropriate time to dig canine graves behind many a barn with shingle markers bearing the emblem, "In Memory of Our Towser.'

The cow that just barely pays her way may be carried through the summer on pasture without the owner being the loser thereby, but when the winter season comes on and high priced hay and grain must be fed to secure results at the pail it is time to sell such loafers to the butcher for whatever they will bring. It's a dead sure thing that a dairyman who is well to do won't want to keep this type of cows, while the man who is poor can't afford to.

Poultrymen have been a good deal concerned the past few months over the rather widespread appearance of a disease among poultry which has thus far defied successful diagnosis, including cause and cure. It seems to take both young and old and works with suddenness. Instances have been noted where hens have been taken with the disease and died within a few minutes after laying. An examination of dead fowls seems to show a diseased condition of the liver, but what is responsible for this is not known.

A newspaper clipping which came under our notice the other day told of a tight fisted old codger who gave as an excuse for not taking the home paper that he was too poor, but who a few days later read an ad. in some other paper telling of a recipe for making a horse stop slabbering, sent on receipt of $1.50. He bit on this bait, and when the recipe came it contained the laconic direction, "Teach your horse to spit." The account doesn't state what this fellow did next.

Data which have been collected by the Minnesota experiment station relative to the cost of keeping farm work horses show that this averages about $90 per head per year, including feed, care, shoeing, veterinary attendance and depreciation. Of this amount about $60 is for the feed bill. The information collected shows further that but three hours' work per day through the year is had from the average work horse. Two methods are suggested whereby this situation may be improved—feeding a cheaper winter ration when the horses are idle and so arranging their work through the year as to get more work out of them.

Following a summer and fall which have been unprecedentedly dry the present winter season offers a serious problem for the man who has considerable stock on his hands and whose water supply is none too abundant. Many a well will have to be drilled deeper and a rigid economy in the use of water for the stock be put into practice.

Timothy or other hay at from $10 to $18 per ton makes pretty high priced bedding for live stock. Better bed with straw and reduce the ration of hay, so that what is put before them will be eaten up clean. If the roughage fed consists of hay and straw, half and half, there will be no hay wasted, while there will be enough straw left in the mangers to bed with.

The average lively boy has all the native impulse and outward incentive that he needs along the line of sowing wild oats without being sort o' encouraged or at best excused by an indulgent but shortsighted parent. This wild oats business is one unique line of cereal production where the crop is always sixtyfold, lessened neither by drought, frosty nights nor hail at harvest time. The thoughtful parents will do the most in their power to reduce the sowing to the minimum.

If you are fitting a bunch of shotes for market and have never tried anything else with the corn ration add to this ration, which is too wide—does not have enough protein in proportion to the fat forming elements—some tankage or oilmeal at the rate of one part to nine or ten of corn and see the pigs jump. While both of these protein feeds come rather high, the feeding of them in the proportion mentioned will make a far more economical ration than corn alone because of the rapid gains which will be made.

Being the product of root rather than the fruit of the stem, it follows that potatoes will not mix through planting different varieties in the same hill, as one might think, without looking beneath the surface. The only way in which potato varieties may be crossed lies in fertilizing the blossom of one variety with pollen from a different variety, and the next season planting the seed therefrom borne in the tomato-like pod developing from the blossom. It is in this way only that new varieties are developed. Such simple experimenting is within the reach of any gardener who is careful and will take the trouble to work it out.

While some utterances of the packers may have to be taken with a grain of allowance, there is no getting round the force and sanity of a declaration made by one of them the other day to the effect that feeders of cattle, sheep and hogs lose hundreds of thousands of dollars annually because they do not take more pains to secure good feeding animals and send them to market in prime instead of poor and ragged condition. The force of this statement ought to be as plain as the nose on a fellow's face, and yet any big stock market in the country most any day shows a variation of from $2 to $3 per hundredweight on stuff where the difference in price is due to quality and finish alone and not to class or kind.

Notwithstanding the fact that it is entirely feasible, we nevertheless have neither seen nor heard of any serious effort being made to utilize the grass and weeds that annually go to waste on tens of thousands of acres of country highways by herding over them neighborhood flocks of sheep, which could be looked after by some of the grandfathers of the community whose days of active farm work are past. Not only would the grazing of the highways in the manner suggested turn into dollars a lot of roughage that annually goes to waste, but it would greatly improve the appearance of the highways and prevent their being weed seed manufactories for the fouling of the adjoining fields. Of course the carrying of such a co-operative plan into effect presupposes that the folks in the community are on good terms, which is one of the essentials of good farming.

Quite a good deal has been appearing of late in the culinary columns of the daily papers about churnless butter. As near as we can make it out, the cream is put in a brown calico (English for cotton and maybe white would do just as well as brown) bag and put in a hole in the ground for about twenty-four hours, at the end of which time it will or ought to be converted to butter. The philosophy of the busness seems to lie in the buttermilk seeping out of the sack, while it is said that contact with the earth "brings" the butter and adds a delicious flavor. It is maybe a confession of ignorance, but we would think that when the good housewife had dug the hole in the ground and filled it up and washed that cotton bag she would have expended about as much energy as in putting the cream in a basin or crock and giving it a few stirs with a spoon.

Now that the leaves are off it will be a good idea to cut the grape or other vine from the apple or shade tree unless it is the intention to sacrifice tree to vine. If the tree is already done for it may well be left as a trellis for the vine.

Figures recently compiled show that in some way or another, by hook or crook, and many are disposed to think by the latter method chiefly, the corporations of the country have acquired possession of 164,000,000 acres of land in the United States, while small holders own but 105,000,000 acres.

HE ASKED THE TIME.

A Question and Answer That Changed a Clerk's Position.

How many clerks measure up to the standard of the young bookkeeper in this story from Human Life? He was employed in the passenger department of a great railroad. It was just a little before lunch. Some of the clerks were putting on their coats, some leaving for the washroom, some consulting the clock; some were still busy. Suddenly the "boss" entered. He glanced about him and then approached the young bookkeeper.

"What time is it?" he asked.

The young man kept on figuring, and the boss put a hand on his desk and repeated the question.

"I beg your pardon, were you speaking to me?" he asked.

"Merely inquired the time—that was all," said the other.

"The bookkeeper glanced about the room, located the office clock and said. "It's ten minutes to 12."

"Thank you," said the general manager and vice president, and strolled out.

That conversation cost the young bookkeeper his place—in the passenger department—and put him under a higher officer "on the firing line." Nine years later he was assistant general manager, and while still in the thirties became a general manager, full fledged.

RAPID STORY WRITING.

A Boast That Dumas Made, a Wager and the Result.

For rapidity of composition the prize among novelists must be awarded to Alexandre Dumas, who died with over 3,000 books to his credit, in all of which he had some share. According to Mr. Arthur F. Davidson, one of his biographers, he often declared that when once he had mapped out in his mind the scheme of a novel or a play the work was practically accomplished, since the mere writing of it presented no difficulty and could he performed as fast as the pen could travel. Some one disputed this: the result was a wager.

Dumas had in his head the plan of the "Chevalier de la Maison Rouge," of which he had not yet written a word, and he made a bet of 100 louis that he would write the first volume of the novel in seventy-two hours. The volume was to be formed by seventy-five large foolscap pages, each page containing forty-five lines and each line fifty letters. In sixty-six hours Dumas had done the work in his fair, flowing hand, disfigured by no erasions—and the bet was won with six hours to spare.—London Chronicle.

Danced In Court.

An unusual scene was once witnessed in a French law court, the civil tribunal at Nantes. The proprietor of a local theater had engaged a young lady dancer, whose performances at rehearsals did not come up to his expectations. He therefore would not let her appear, and the fair dancer took action against him for breach of contract. The defendant alleged that she had not even learned the first steps of her art, and, here being a plain issue, the judge determined to decide for himself. A space was accordingly forthwith cleared on the floor of the court, and in these unusual surroundings the young lady duly went through her steps and pirouettings. In the result the judge felt justified in certifying that she was quite an expert dancer and decided the case in her favor. Henceforth she advertised herself as the only dancer in the country with a legal certificate of proficiency.—London Tit-Bits.

Poets and Dogs.

Poets have always loved dogs. In this poets and boys resemble each other. Walter Savage Landor was devoted to his dog Giallo and Byron's epitaph upon his dog Boatswain we all remember:

I never had but one, and there he lies.

Cowper was very fond of his dog, and we know how Charles Lamb, who was a prose poet, loved his Dash and how Mrs. Browning appreciated the little Flush to whom she indited a poem. The Earl of Shaftesbury kept his noble collie in his library with him at all times and Samuel Rogers always walked out with his dog. Scott declined an invitation to dinner when his dog died, saying that he could not accept on account of the "loss of an old friend."—St. James' Gazette.

The Cassowary.

The cassowary is a natural boxer and the only bird, except perhaps the ostrich, whose method of defense and attack in warfare is the forward kick—straight out, like a man—is calculated to arouse envy in the breast of any save a crack athlete. Another peculiarity of this bird is his ability to perform a sort of war dance over any particular object, a bit of rag, a stick or a stone, that attracts his attention

His Bedtime.

Many a man has solved the problem of keeping the boy on the farm by taking him into partnership, as it were, at least in some department of the farming operations. This is frequently shown on barns in which pure bred stock is kept in the inscription "Mr. Blank & Son." Briefly stated, the reason why so many boys leave the farm is because they have little or no interest in a financial way in its operations, which expressed in another way means that they have nothing to look forward to or work for. This partnership idea ought not only to bring father and son nearer together, but to simplify and increase the profits from all of the farming operations.

An interesting fact has been made very clear this season in connection with land, naturally well drained, which has been lately tiled—namely, that in the driest season known in years this land has produced larger crops of better quality than land lying near, by which was apparently sufficiently dry for crop production. This greater productiveness seems directly due to the fact that in land which is tiled there is a much freer circulation of the air, which means a mellower and looser soil and a more rapid passage to the surface of subsoil moisture. This same condition results in a rapid absorption into the soil of rain that does fall, thus reducing to a minimum the volume which flows off from the surface washing and gullying the soil.

A MAN AGAINST A NATION.

The Most Curious European War That Was Ever Waged.

The most curious European war ever waged was that which in the sixteenth century, the period of the reformation and the renaissance, was carried on single handed for between five and six years between a bankrupt grocer of Berlin and the elector of Saxony, who was the most powerful German prince of the period. The grocer's name was Hans Kohlhase, and the immediate cause of the quarrel was the arresting of two of his horses in the elector's territory, he being a subject of the elector of Brandenburg. Failing to get redress, he adopted what was then a perfectly legal expedient and declared formal war on the realm of Saxony. The declaration was accepted in due form, and the war began.

The extraordinary part of the story is that the grocer kept the war up for nearly six years practically single handed and even went to the extremity of declaring war on his own sovereign in the meantime before he was caught. He burned farms and even villages, employed mercenaries after the fashion of the times and made himself the terror of the district. He was finally influenced to stop hostilities by Luther, and after he had taken the sacrament from his hands he was betrayed into a further act of hostility by treachery and, being captured, suffered death on the wheel after refusing an act of grace which granted him the painless and honorable death of the sword. The story is perhaps the strangest of all the romances of that romantic age.—Westminster Gazette

For Body and Soul.

Here is a curious advertisement, republished in the Cornhill Magazine from an eighteenth century paper: "Wanted—For a family who have bad health, a sober, steady person, in the capacity of a doctor, surgeon and apothecary. He must occasionally act in the capacity of butler and dress hair and wigs. He will be required to read prayers occasionally and to preach a sermon every Sunday. The reason of this advertisement is that the family cannot any longer afford the expense of the physical tribe and wish to be at a certain expense for their bodies and souls. A good salary will be given."

THIRTY YEARS OF SUCCESS.

The Rexall Store Offers a Remedy For Catarrh — The Medicine Costs Nothing if It Fails.

When a medicine effects a successful treatment in a very large majority of cases, and when we offer that medicine on our own personal guarantee that it will cost the user nothing if it does not completely relieve catarrh, it is only reasonable that people should believe us, or at least put our claim to a practical test when we take all the risk. These are facts which we want the people to substantiate. We want them to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, a medicine prepared from a prescription of a physician with whom catarrh was a specialty, and who has a record of thirty years of enviable success to his record.

We receive more good reports about Rexall Mucu-Tone than we do of all other catarrh remedies sold in our store, and if more people only knew what a thoroughly dependable remedy Rexall Mucu-Tone is, it would be the only catarrh remedy we would have any demand for Rexall Mucu-Tone is quickly absorbed and by its therapeutic effect tends to disinfect and cleanse the entire mucous membraneous tract, to destroy and remove the parasites which injure the membraneous tissues, to soothe the irritation and heal the soreness, stop the mucous discharge, build up strong, healthy tissue and relieve the blood and system of diseased matter. Its influence is toward stimulating the muco-cells, aiding digestion and improving nutrition until the whole body vibrates with healthy activity. In a comparatively short time it brings about a noticeable gain in weight, strength, good color and feeling of buoyancy.

We urge you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, beginning a treatment today. At any time you are not satisfied, simply come and tell us, and we will quickly return your money without question or quibble. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at our store—The Rexall Store

Oats have been recognized as a sort of ideal horse feed so long that any suggestion which appears to controvert this view seems to be sort of revolutionary, but this is just what the Iowa experiment station has done lately. It has concluded some rather exhaustive horse feeding experiments and finds that, while oats are usually the lowest priced cereal fed to horses, they may in the end be the most costly ration that can be used. It was found that by substituting for them oilmeal, cottonseed meal or gluten meal just as satisfactory results were had at a less cost. In results secured a value of $60 per ton was placed on oilmeal and an even higher price on cottonseed meal.

While it may be viewed as an act of generosity for parents to divide all of their property equally among their several children, there are good reasons why they should keep enough of it to provide themselves a modest home and a good living in their old age, entirely apart from the hospitality which, as a rule, is gladly extended to them in the homes of their children. There is no place like home, and to people of no other age is this truer than those well along in years. To have a spot or realm which is one's own and in which one can do as he pleases is a prerogative that every parent should enjoy. It not only breeds a spirit of independence on the part of the parent, but, induces a wholesome respect on the part of children and other relatives.

An investigation by members of the forest service in one section in Oregon where there had been much loss from forest fires disclosed what was believed to be an apparatus purposely designed for the setting of these fires. It was about as large as a gallon oil can, equipped with a time fuse and a supply of oil which would be ignited some time after the contraption was placed. The miscreant who operated this infernal machine probably took it into the section which he wished to fire, placed it, piled a lot of dry stuff around it, started the fuse, mounted his horse and by the time the blaze got under headway was miles away. It is likely a sharp lookout will be kept for devils of this type next season, and it is safe to assume that if caught they will be allowed a mighty short time to make explanations.

Mara's Voice.

Mme. Mara had a voice that extended from middle G to E in alt and was one of the most facile and flexible ever known. She delighted in the florid music of Hasse, Graun, Benda, Jommelli, Pergalese, Porpora, Sacchini and others of that school and with the utmost ease executed passages that are now consigned to solo instruments, such as the violin and flute. She held the stage from 1771 to 1802, with an occasional appearance after the latter date.

PROGRESSIVENESS VS. P. O. PULLS

Will Progressives Control appointments? May Establish National Daily.

Washington D. C., Jan. 12, 1911.—Some here are asking themselves the question who is to handle the post office patronage in the first Minnesota district at the expiration of Tawney's term of congressman. There are those who are of the opinion that Tawney will still be at the helm, so far as controlling appointments and will continue to hand out fat post office jobs, or continue his friends in office. There are several good offices in the district, among them Albert Lea, Winona, Austin, Owatonna, Rochester and Waseca. These six offices, according to the last offical register of the Post Office Department, pay salaries amounting in the aggregate to $16,000, divided as follows: Winona, $3200; Rochester, $2700; Albert Lea, $2700 Austin, $2600; Owatonna, $2500; Waseca, $2300. Preston and Wabasha pay about $1700 each. There are other offices in the district paying good-sized salaries, but the ones enumerated are considered the cream of the picking and include those upwards of $2000 a year or above.

• • •

Of course, if Sidney Anderson, the congressman-elect, does not incur the enmity of the administration it is presumed that he will have the control of these appointments, so far as the rules of the post office department permit, but in view of the treatment some of the insurgents have received at the hands of the department just what is in store for Anderson is problematical to say the least. And this is where Tawney comes in. In case Anderson's type of insurgency meets with the disapproval of the administration it is not at all unlikely that the control of the post office patronage may remain in Tawney's hands, so his friends here are saying.

• • •

To be sure the administration has offered to some of the insurgents the olive branch of peace and has placed the post office patronage at their disposal again. But not in every case is this true. There is the case of Lindberg, for instance. In the sixth district Lindberg has been having trouble over post office appointments ever since he came to Washington for the sixtieth Congress. No olive branch has been offered him. In his own town of Little Falls his recomendation for a new appointment has been held up for something over a year. There are other offices in his district where a similar state of affairs exist, without much hope for the future.

• • •

Lindberg has been decidely unpopular with the administration, and especially with Frank Hitchcock, the postmaster general, who is also the President's political manager. Lindbergh wrote a letter about a year ago, a very naughty letter, by the way, in which he criticized most severely some of the methods of the department in this matter of patronage. The letter received wide publicity. To make sure that it would receive the attention of the Department, Lindbergh's secretary delivered a copy of the famous document to Mr. Hitchcock in person. Hitchcock read the letter and from that day to this there has been war between the sixth district congressman and the post office department, without the least sign of a truce.

• • •

Congressman Davis, on the other hand, has faired pretty well with the post office department and has thus far received no rebuffs from Hitchcock. The same is true of Volstad and Steerenson, although their insurgency is not so radical as that of Davis or Lindbergh. Miller had some trouble in his district, but it is understood that his standing with the Department is better than formerly.

• • •

The Taft boom for renomination to the presidency was launched with a great deal of noise and demonstration. Of course, it is a little early yet for the leaders to decide whether the echoes bring back encouraging reports or not. Lindbergh returned to Washington after the holidays and said he could not discover in his dittrict any great stir among the people for Taft. Or course, the President is not the man to stir people to enthusiasm and that may account for the lack of it at this time. Mr. Lindbergh said that he had discovered that the people with whom he talked while in Minnesota were a little disappointed at Roosevelt's going up into Massachusettes before election to help out his friend Lodge. The people, so Lindbergh said, did not think the Colonel had lost prestige because of the result of the New York election, but they could not quite forgive him as yet for going to the rescue of the Bay State statesman.

• • •

There is some talk of starting here in Washington a progressive Republican daily paper, and to give it national circulation. I hear that a promoter of the enterprise has been going over the situation with some of the progressive Republicans and that it is not at all unlikely that the movement may result in the ultimate establishment of a big daily, which will reflect the views of the progressive element in the party. Senators like Cummins, Beveridge, LaFollette, Clapp, Bistow and others, will, it is reported, support the undertaking. It is pointed out that such a paper, if established, would play an important role in the forthcoming presidential campaign and would undoubtedly lend its support to some progressive candidate for the presidential nomination.

The Davis Agricultural Bill, of which Congressman C. R. Davis is the author continues to be in the limelight, with good prospects of being enacted into law at this session. Recently Mr. Bert Ball, secretary of the Council of North American Grain Exchanges, St. Louis, Mo., has written Mr. Davis for 100,000 copies of the bill to be distributed throughout the country. The measure has received the endorsement of educators, labor organizations, manufacturers, farmers' associations, the agricultural journals and the press generally.

THOT IT WAS A HOLDUP GAME

Drunken Boys Assault night Express Agent at Soo. Seller of Liquors Responsible.

On Monday evening a crowd of young men from 16 to 20 years of age went on a drunk upon booze procured at certain saloon i this town and proceeded to paint the town red.

They attracted the attention of the police sometime about midnight when after imbibing some more liquid refreshments they started to tramp around town. They carried a quart of fire water along to quench their growing thirst and after visiting a number or resturaunts around town they took their course to the Soo Depot where they found a few people gathered, among them were the Section Foreman of the Soo Line and his wife. This lady was quite seriously ill and Dr. Gambell was there to attend her.

After having stood for the annoyance of their blustering and rowdyism for some time and after hearing repeated insults flung at the sick lady the station agent ordered them to get out of there without delay or take the consequences. This was just as he was getting ready to meet the north bound flyer at about 3:30 A. M., as the train was an hour late.

When the train had gone and he was returning to the office with his arms full of valuable express packages he found the crowd still there and packed into the office and effectually barring his entrance. He ordered them out of there but they only sassed him and made no sign of moving away. He collard the nearest one and attempted to force him out of the way with the result that a general fight ensued. The Brooks man came to the Express agents assistance and he received a few bad marks before his wife interfered to get her husband away from there but before she had time to do anything she received a blow in the face resulting in a very ugly gash.

After the rough house subsided the boys walked up town to a restaurant where an officer to whom complaint had been made found them and two of them were arrested on a charge of assault and battery and brought down to the jail to sober up while awaiting the pleasure of the court.

They were arranged before Judge Bishop and after pleading guilty had their fine assessed which they paid.

At this writing nothing has been done to mete out justice to the other three youthful bandits nor to the party who had furnished these minors with liquor contrary to law.

The safety of the public in general and the insurance of future peace demands that both these matters be carefully followed up and justice administered.

PROGRESSIVES FOR REFORM

Cannonistic Conditions Charactarize house. Gorden Good Organizer.

Does it pay, politicially, to accept anything without a fight? Or is it safer to reverse the old rule of ages and "look a gift in the mouth?" The progressives in the legislature are wondering. Some of the shrewder ones have about decided that "concession" and "counterfeit" are sisterly synonyms. It happened like this:

• • •

The progressives demand that the rules be reformed in at least two vital respects. They knew that most of the evils of legislation could be traced (1) to the smothering and distorting of bills in standing committees and (2) to the lack of publicity in connection with the acts of such committees. To change the first Canonittic condition W. A. Campbell drafted and presented to the Committe on Rules- Messrs. MacKenzie, Congdon, Stone, Fowler and Westcott-an amendment which required that practically all bills be reported back to the House from their committees within fifteen days. W. I. Nolan, also of Minneapolis, offered the other amendment requiring all committees to keep a public record of their meetings.

The Committe on Rules "conceeded" the first demand and incorporated this "concession" in their report. Instead of a single joker it seems to have twin strings in its provision. At least is admits of "interpretion" by those in authority; and that is the issue in all such controcersies. The new rule reads:

"Every bill, other than for appropriations, claims or reapportionment shall be reported therefrom within twenty days after its receipt by the committtee. Any such bill not so reported within such period, unless such period is extended by a vote of the house, shall, five days after any member gives notice in the house that he requires such bill to be reported to the house, be delivered to the speaker, with or without a report of the committee, and lie on the table of the house."

The amendment is all right as far as the first sentence goes. It should end there. Then there would be no mistaking its meaning or application.

But why was there a provision for its violation? Does it mean that if a member does not demand the return of a bill from its committee that the bill shall remain there, as it might have done under the old order of things? Why does not the rule say simply and squarely that standing committees shall report all bills back within a stated time, unless an extenion has been granted by the house?

The feature of this new rule that looks the most deceptive and dangerous to me is in the last line, which plainly provides that bills, so reported shall "lie on the table of the house." The regular course for a bill is for it to go from its committee to general orders. Here again the issue of interpretation comes in. The presiding officer might rule that it required more than a majority vote to take a vital bill from the table and advance it. There are other ways in which important bills might be manipulated out of their rightful place under this rule.

• • •

The other form was not conceeded. The progressives had to fight for it, and they were defeated decisively—62 to 46. When the report of the Committe on Rules was being considered W. I. Nolan offered an amend ment which provided for complete publicity in committee rooms. It was killed by the folowing vote:

Peterson, Pfaender, Reed, Rice, Robertson, Schuler, Sewartz, C. E. Stone, Sullivan, Thielen, Utecht, C. H. Warner, Webb, Westcott, White, Wisniewski, Mr. Speaker.—62.

Represetative Pfaender, of New Ulm, said to be the minority floor leader, "led" the democrats, as far as possible, in this first real clash between the progressives and reactionaries. In the fight for a public record of standing committe actions he spoke and voted against the amendment. It recalled to many the well known fight over Cannonism in Congress when the Tammany democrats saved Uncle Joe by joining with the regulars. The democrats who followed Pfaender were Schuler, Virtue, Herzberg, Mettling, Keefe, Minette, Moriarity, Swartz, Peters, Clarke, McDonald, Hurley, O'Brien, Sullivan Utecht and Wisniewski.

Messrs. Kelly, Saggan, Untiedt and Ribenack—all democrats—did not vote.

The lone socialist in the legislature —N. S. Hillman of Two Harbors, and the four House prohibitionists—Rufus P. Morton, A. V. Anderson, Geo. H. Voxland and C. L. Sulerud—have taken their stand with the progressives.

The most significant and inexcusable thing about this battle between the progressives and reactionaries is the "steam roller' method of the administration forces in adopting the report of the Committe on Rules. The new rules contained important changes, particularly in reference to salaries of employees, and many members asked that the report be printed and laid over for a day. But this request for a chance to consider the changes was voted dow and the rule made the basic law of the House. Now they cannot easily be changed except by a two thirds vote.

In the fight over the rules the administration faction befogged the issue. They insisted that every attempt to reform the rules was a slap at Speaker Dunn. That was not the issue and it will not be the issue in contests that are to come. The issue is to make the house deliberative, to give unhampered power to the majority; and to take czarish authority from the speaker and his committee on rules. It does not matter in the least whether the speaker and his committee are progressive or reactionary.

It is refreshing to turn to the Senate. There Lieutenant-Governor Gordon presides with dignity and justice. As the organizing officer of the upper branch he has fully justified the expectations of his friends. He has made the important committees progressive. The Senate is to be in the hands of a majority of the Senate. It will be a pleasure to deal with this unusual condition in later letters.

Representative Kunze one of the progressives from Minneapolis, passed a resolution under which all the libraries of the state will receive the House Journals. Go to your library and look at these records. If you find them incomplete or unintelligible on any important point, write to the Minnesota Citizens League, 919 N. Y. Life Building, Minneapolis, for additional light. In this connection it might be noted that if any community desires a public meeting to consider legislative conditions, the League has speakers who are equipped for such service.

I wish that every man, woman and child in the state might know what is happening to some of the new members during these eventful first days of the session.

DUNN NAMES HOUSE COMMITTEE

O'Neill on Reapportionment. Palmer Heads Temperance Committees.

Speaker H. H. Dunn has named the standing committees in the House and as was expected those who supported him in the speaker-ship fight have received the desired places tho other republicans obtained some good positions and some of the democrats were remembered.

To those of the surrounding territory the following appointments may be of interest:

D. P. O'Neill, tho a new member, was given place on six committees as follows: reapportionment, state school at Owatonna, soldier's home, road and bridges, public lands and agricultural schools.

"PUSSYFOOT" IS ENJOINED

Railroads And Express Companies may Resume Shipments.

St. Paul, Jan. 10.—An injunction restraining W. E. Johnson, special Indian agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic in Minnesota under the anti-liquor provisions of the Indian cession treaty of 1855, was issued by Judge C. A. Willard of the United States circuit court here today. If the decision holds, it means the end of government interference with the liquor question in Minnesota outside of the Indian reservations. Indian treaties having liquor clauses cover nine-tenths of the area of the state.

Willard holds that the admission of Minnesota to statehood gave the state the power of regulating the liquor traffic and repealed the anti-liquor clauses of the Indian land cession treaties.

The suit was instituted by 12 Bemidji saloon-keepers who asked the court to enjoin W. E. Johnson and his agents from interfering with their business. As a result of the injunction hundreds of saloons throughout the northern part of the state which have been closed for several weeks may now reopen and the railroads and express companies may resume the shipping of liquor into the territory. United States District Attorney Haupt will take no action towards appeal until he hears from Attorney General Wickersham.

MARRIED

On wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock occurred the marriage of Mr. John Ulvild and Miss Mary Brevik both of the town of Cloverleaf.

The ceremony took place at the farm home of the groom in the presence of a small select gathering of neighbors and was performed by the Rev. I. L. Lasseson of this city.

The Press extends congratulations.

REAPPORTIONMENT WELL CARED FOR

Senator Hackney Goes On Record Strongly In Its Favor.

"It is the unquestionable duty of this legislature to pass a reapportionment act, and such act should take effect for the next general election even though this may mean the legislating out of office every member of the senate."

So asserts Joseph M. Hackney, member of the state senate from St. Paul and chairman of the senate committee on reapportionment—an appointment which in the eyes of Uorthern Minnesota at least, is the most important assignment in the upper house this session.

"My appointment as chairman of the reapportionment committee," said Senator Hackney, "came to me as a great surprise. My constituents are not worrying over reapportionment, as it will make little or no difference in my district.

"Yet I recognize the imporance of the subject to the state at large. portionment many years to long. Minnesota has been without reap- The bill for this purpose should have been passed two years ago. The leading excuse for the neglect of legislative duty at that time was that reapportionment should be based on the national census. No such excuse can be offered at this time. The people are rightly demanding immediate justice in legislative representation. And it is indeed more than time to act when the legislative districts in Northern Minnesota have respective populations of 30,000 and over, to populations of little over 3,000 in some southern Minnesota districts.

"As chairman of the senate committee on reapportionment, I intend to excert every honorable effort to secure the passage of a reapportionment billl this session which shall take effect in time for the next general election. When the bill comes to our committee, I will do all that I can to get quick action on its hearings, and a report back to the senate as speedily as possible recommending the bill for passage. So far as I am concerned personally the state will get a fair and square deal.

"The enactment of a reapportionment law is, in my opinion, the present crying need of the state, and the greatest duty to the people, which the present legislature can perform."—Duluth Herald

ANOTHER STOCK DESTROYED

Entire General Merchandise Stock of A. J. Giller Destroyed By Fire.

Last Sunday afternoon at about 2:30 the fire alarm was given and the faithful ones went to work. Fire had started in the interior of the general merchandise store of A. Joe Giller on LaBree Avenue and before the firemen could reach the spot and attach their apparatus in working condition fire had made such headway that it broke thru the front windows and blazed up the front to the top of the building. At this juncture the water fell in torrents and it was but a few moments until the fire was under control. The entire stock was practically obliterated and tho Mr. Giller was well insured he will no doubt sustain a loss from the inconvenience and loss of business.

O. H. Nelson, the owner of the building in which the Giller stock was located, had absolutely no insurance as he said the insurance rate in that particular locality was so high as to be almost prohibative: hence Mr. Nelson will sustain a very heavy loss.

For a few moments it appeared as tho several of the neighboring frame buildings were in danger the wind being from the northwest. The buildings on the South occupied by the Salvation Army, Rolland's 5 and 10c Store were in the greatest danger.

However, none of the buildings except the one in which the fire orginated were at all injured.

The origin of the fire is said to be from an air tight heater in which young Maurice Giller had built a fire a short time before.

Mr. Giller happened to be absent in the cities buying more goods with which to replenish his stock. The building will be repaired and business will no doubt be resumed as soon as the proper adjustments for insurance have been made.

SENATOR HANSON ASKS YOUR ADVICE.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 10. 1911.

Editor, Press.

Dear Sir:—

I should be pleased to have you say to your many readers that I shall be very glad to hear from any of them on any matter to come before the Legislature, in which they are interested. I am here to serve them to the best of my ability.

Yours very truly,

A. L. Hanson.

PROVING UP TIME EXTENDED.

Settlers On Red Lake Reservation Given Leeway.

Washington, Jan. 11.—(Special).—After careful consideration on the subject the commissioner of general land office has decided that with respect to the relief intended to be given the settlers on the 11 townships of the ceded Red Lake reservation in Minnesota, the time allowance of two additional years granted for proving up on homestead entries shall be computed to extend two years from the passage of the law to March, 1910. When the question came up it was contended by some of the officials that congress, having granted one year additional three years ago, as consequence of the crop failure and hardships incident to completing the required five years residence on the lands, the additional two years allowed under the act of last March should date from the time of the original extension. This would make the entire period of relief already elapsed.

Senator Nelson, chairman of the public lands committee, was called in conference on the subject and the time allowance was agreed as intended by congress to extend two years in fact from the date of the passage of the law which gives fully a year more from March 1911. This extension affects the interests of several hundred settlers.

How We Paid The Mortgage

BY WILLIAM SMITH.

After we had talked over our plans Sam said,- "Boys mother has always taught us to pray, let us do our duty on our knees"; and there in that old log barn, we knelt down and pray the Lord above us to help us, and it was not only that morning that this occurred but it was a daily duty, and that's not all said uncle Pose his eyes shining, those boyish humble prayers were heard, and answered, and I've went down on my old knees a many a time since and thanked Him above us for the help he gave us.

There is something about a barn to kneel in, and a manger for an alter that has always sort of appealed to me ever since, it always did seem to me that I was nearer to Him and He was nearer to me in that old barn.

For the next month we were kept busy before school time in the morning, and when we returned from school in the afternoon; getting everything ready.

We made a corn marker, over hauled the harrows and plows, to see that they were in order, and by the first of April, when the school closed we were ready to commence our springs work.

Sam and Alton plowed the field, was plowed, harrowed, and marked while I helped mother in the house and did the chores; after the field off we all planted.

By the fifteenth of May we had the entire forty-five acres planted; we had worked early and late to finish it on Friday afternoon, as we had agreed to go to the village the next day and play the village "Nine."

The game had been advertised for Saturday the sixteenth, and we boys had looked forward to this ball game as the one pleasure of the season.

The Red Falls team was captained by Dave Bennett a son of the man who held the mortgage on our farm; and for some reason he had taken a dislike to we boys, perhaps it had grown from the strife over the division of the county.

At any rate, on our arrival in the village about one P. M., we were hailed by a shout of laughter from Dave, and some of his friends.

"Did you come in to get trimmed?"; for we were dressed in our over-alls turned up to the knees.

"Hows that arm of yours this summer Sam? Hear you get more practice with the plow than you do with the ball since your Dad died."

I looked at Sam; he was pale, his lip quivered, and the tears stood in his eyes; I wondered how long he would take such taunts; but instead of losing his temper, he asked; "when do you boys wish to begin the game?"

"Its advertised for two-thirty but it may be a little later, I have some friends coming in on the afternoon train, I want to wait for them so they can see how we do it;" and Dave winked at the other boys.

"All right we will go out to the grounds and warm up a bit.

About two forty-five Dave and his friends arrived, dressed in their new suits, and upon entering the grounds began to sing:"

"Who are we? Red Falls! Red
Falls! can't you see?
We came out today to have a little fun,
And beat you farmers, about four to one.
Ragshaw, Ragshaw, Rah, Rah, Rah,
Will we win- well I guess.
Red Falls, Red Falls, Yes, Yes,
Yes."

"How do you like our base-ball yell, Hamilton," said Dave to Sam.

"Oh its alright, I guess, if you have the stuff to back it."

"Well I like that; don't we look as if we had the stuff?; and he looked Sam over from head to foot and then at his own new clothes.

"But there was one thing he overlooked said uncle Pose, with a twinkle in his eye, as he recalled the bygone days, and that was Sam's big brown arms which were the result of his hard work on the farm, his square cut jaw which showed determination, and his clear brown eyes, the looking glasses of his soul.

There was a man in the grandstand that did not overlook a few of the things that were going on though, and that was big, whole-hearted, Geo. Cook, the Superintendent of the lumber company up the river, and when the question of an umpire was brought up, George volunteered to act; this did not altogether please Dave, as his father and Cook had had some difference over money matters years before and the Bennetts and Cooks had been at outs since.

"Let's see you are widow Hamilton's son are you not? "said Mr. Cook to Sam; "yes Sir." I understand you are planting your farm to corn this year." Yes. it's already planted, forty-five acres."

"That's nice, I hope you have a

Signing your name to a check makes you think. You don't spend a check as readily and carelessly as you do the cash. An account at our bank will tend to restrict your spending.

Try an account with us and pay all your bills with checks. If you do this during 1911 you will be surprised at the money you will save.

The holidays passed away quietly. The majority of the people hardly knew it was Xmas.

The new year has started cold and if this will keep up for any length of time it will certainly be a cold and tough winter.

Water is gitting to be a scarce article in this vicinity. And it seems as though it is hard to get. Emil Sigerud is down to a depth of one hundred feet and no water.

Tolof and Martin Thunheim of Newfolden were out this way last week.

Mostly everybody out this way has been sick. The Berg family have been sick a long time, and they are not improving much either.

A happy New Year to the Editor and the readers of the "Press".

"TWELFTH NIGHT" COMING.

To be presented here Monday Jan. 23rd.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the lovers of the best in dramatic literature is that of the engagement of the superior company of players headed by William Yule and Violet Eddy, in "Twelfth Night".

Seats are now selling for the engagement of "Twelfth Night" the best picturesque and delightful of all the Shakepearian comadies which appears here one night, Monday January 23rd, under the direction of C. P. Walker. Presented by a company of experienced Shakesperian actors, with a mos elaborate costume and scenic equipment, (Twelfth Night) is ideal entertainment. The company are the famous English Players with Wm Yule, the popular Canadian comedian, and Violet Eddy, a winsome young actress, especially engaged for the roles of Sir Toby Belch and Viola.

AN ELABORATE PRODUCTION.

Twelfth Night, to be presented at, in Five Acts and Sixteen Scenes. When William Yule, Violet Eddy, and their supporting company of Shakesperian Players appear at the Auditorium on January 23rd, 1911 in the ideal comedy (Twelfth Night), theatre-goers will see probably, the most elaborate and complete scenic production ever handled on the local stage. Manager C. P. Walker has furnished with a lavish hand an equipment sufficient to supply five acts, divided into sixteen scenes. Every inch of scenery, every piece of furniture, every platform and stage brace is carried by the company, together with special lighting effects. The scenery has been built especially for this territory, and can be readily adjusted to any stage. Manager Walker is particular in his instructions to his stage carpenters, and insists that the scenery be used in each and every town.

"I AM SORRY FOR PETE."

"I am sorry for Pete," were the words of a substantial farmer of the town of Holst, who had juts seen a letter received from Peter Stensrud, a former well-to-do farmer of that town who had sold his farm last year and moved to Canada; where he has met with nothing but disapointments. Crop failure to start with and then lack of water for drinking purposes followed.

"Today Pete is hauling water six miles, where he had it right in the kitchen for his wife and in his barn for his stock when he lived here and never had a crop failure," were the words of his neighbor. And still there are those who are not satisfied with good Clearwater County, and who will follow blindly in the foot-steps of the unfortunate, like Mr. Stensrud who had every thing that heart could wish for here, but who was tempted away by the glowing lithographs and advertising matter sent out by Canadian land agents. 'Look before you Leap' is a true saying to-day as when first spoken and he who heeds not the warning musi pay the penalty.—Clearbrook Journal.

SYNOD CHURCH.

I. T. Aastad, Pastor.

Services next Sunday at 11 o'clock A. M. At Silverton at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Ladies Aid meets Jan. 19th at 2:30 P. M. in the basement of the church, entertained by Mrs. I. T. Aastad.

Sunday school every Sunday at 9 A. M. The class of catechumens meets Saturday at 9:30.

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Scandinavian Evangelical Lutheran church of the Norwegian Synod was held Jan. 9th in the Sunday school room of the church. A large number of members were present.

It was learned that the church had enjoyed a vigorous growth.

The Treasurer submitted a printed report that was distributed to all the members present. From the report it could be learned that the church has had a prosperous year. Some over $1200.00 has been received in the Current Expense Fund.

All obligations were paid with a small balance in the treasury. It was also learned that all indebtedness on the church building has been paid. The receipt of the Ladies Aid and the Young Peoples Societies of the congregation was close to $1,000 during the year.

Other reports of committees were submitted and acted on.

The report of the election was as follows:

Trustees for 3 years, A. G. Loffnes and Lars Thorson.

Treasuer, D. B. Bakke.

Secretary, Lars Backe.

Sunday school Superintendent, I. T. Aastad.

Auditors, R. Oen and L. Robertson

School committee, G. H. Sandum J. J. Weeks and Jorgen Eide.

A committee was elected to consider the advisability of inviting the Synod to hold their Convention here in June 1912.

Albert Olson was elected to take subscriptions to the different Funds of the Synod.

It was generally considered that the year of 1910 was the best year in all respects in the history of the church and as an ordinace of that the Pastors salary was increased in a very substantial way.

ZION CHURCH

A. L. Larson, Pastor.

Services will be held at the Zion church next Sunday at 10:30 A. M., and 7:45 P. M. Sunday school at 2 P. M.

The Young Peoples society of the Zion church will meet at the home of Nels Berg this, Friday evening at 8 o'clock. A cordial invitation to all.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL EDUCATION.

The Minnesota Sunday School Association is to hold 18 Big Sunday School Institutes in the following cities of the State:—Winona, Red Wing, Rochester, Owatonna Worthington, Mankato, Marshall, Benson, Bdeckenridge, Fergus Falls, Moorhead, Crookston, Bemidji, Duluth, Brainerd, St. Cloud, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Stillwater. The tour begins January 14th and ends February 5th, 1911.

The tour party consists of two International workers, W. A. Brown and Hugh Cork of Chicago and two State workers, A. M. Locker and Paul S. Dietrick of St. Paul. The plan is to hold a two day's meeting in each place and these workers have full charge of the program. Mr. Cork and Mr. Dietrick will conduct the program the first evening and the next morning and Mr. Brown and Mr. Locker will take the afternoon and the evening program of the second day.

Perhaps the best place for our workers to reach is at Crookston on Jan 28,1911. Every Sunday school worker who can possibly go should attend one of these meetings. It is the chance of the year. Programs can be secured by addressing the county president, L. P. Poppenhagen of Thief River Falls.

The citizens of Crookston will entertain free all outside workers.

Origin of Firewater.

When the Hudson Bay Trading company began its trading among the Indians it was found that by selling the Indians liquor they could more easily be induced to trade their peltries. The first whisky or intoxicant of inferior quality was distilled in England and brought to America in large barrels, but in transporting it overland it was found more convenient to divide it into small kegs. The traders soon became aware of the fact that by diluting the whisky with water more furs could be obtained. This was practiced for some time, but the Indians learned that good whisky poured on a fire would cause it to flame up, whereas had the whisky been diluted the fire would be quenched. It was by this simple experiment that the term "firewater" became a common word among the Indians. A chief who had experienced the bad effects of whisky among his people said it was most certainly distilled from the hearts of wildcats and the tongues of women from the effects it produced.—Red Man.

Symbolism Didn't Appeal.

"Charlie," sorrowfully sighed the young lady in the parlor of the concrete house on Washington avenue, "it is nearly 12 o'clock."

"Yes, Belinda," was the breathing response of her poetical companion, who was stifling on the sofa beside her, "the minute hand is drawing closer and closer to the hour hand, and when the time of midnight is chimed the two hands will be even as one. Oh, darling Belinda," he continued as he literally simulated the action of the minute hand, "may not the coming together of those two hands be symbolical of us?"

She broke away and stood firmly on her feet. "No, Charles Henry Smith," she retorted angrily, "those two hands will remain as one but a single second, and then the minute hand will divorce itself and go on its way alone. No, Mr. Smith, a minute hand that doesn't stick isn't the kind of symbolism I want!"—Boston Post.

Vernet In a Storm at Sea.

Vernet, the celebrated painter of sea pieces, eager in the study of nature, made several long voyages in his younger days in order to observe the various scenes which the changeful elements exhibit. In one of these excursions undertaken merely for the love of the art a most violent gale of wind arose, when Vernet, without attending to the perils with which he was surrounded, desired one of the sailors to lash him fast to some of the rigging. Soon after this request was granted the storm increased, attended with thunder and lightning and with every circumstance that could add to the horror of the scene, and consternation and terror sat on every countenance, but in the young painter every emotion was lost in that of admiration, which so wholly engrossed his attention that he every now and then exclaimed in the most enthusiastic terms, "Good heavens, what a noble scene!"

Knife Duels In Mexico.

A duel between cattle herders on the Mexican plains is about as savage and deadly a manner of fighting as one could possibly imagine. Each opponent extends his left arm, and a third party who has been selected to act as referee binds their wrists together with a thong of rawhide. He then places a knife in the right hand of each, and the fight is on. Needless to say, it does not last long. Every stab may be calculated upon to do damage, and it often happens that both duelists receive fatal wounds. Yet, in spite of the severe rules of the game, there are men who become experts and terrorize a whole neighborhood. They pride themselves on being able to strike so quickly and so surely that they can kill an opponent with the first blow and get away unscathed.—Exchange.

The Suicide of Hannibal.

Defeated at Zama, Hannibal fled to the east to avoid falling into the hands of the Romans and found temporary security in the dominions of Mithridates. He incited this monarch to engage in a Roman war, and, his advice as to its conduct being rejected, the war proved unsuccessful, and Mithridates was required as one of the conditions of peace to deliver up Hannibal to his enemies, the Romans. The unfortunate Carthaginian heard of his approaching fate, swallowed the poison which for years he had carried about his person and expired just as the envoys arrived to take him in charge.

The Waste of the Wind.

Every one who wants a cheap motive force has tried to harness the wind. Every child has made a paper propeller or a windmill. But can it be said that the possible uses of the wind have been as assiduously investigated as such recently discovered forces as steam and electricity and gases? Is it not conceivable that the practical uses of the wind are underestimated just because they are so familiar?

We cannot help thinking that the wind will be more variously employed some day in the same way that probably the problem of laying under contribution the great physical fact of the tides will be solved. One would think that the wind could be used for electric lighting, yet there is no practical apparatus for the purpose. True, the wind is variable and occasionally absent, but as electricity can be stored one might suppose that this was the very case in which variability did not particularly matter.—London Spectator.

good crop. I use lots of corn in the camps for horse feed, and maybe you can spare me some.'

"Thank you Mr. Cook I'll tell mother about it"; and the subject was dropped.

"I like the looks of that boy that is talking to papa," remarked Miss Cook, who, in company with Mrs. Cook was in the grand-stand.

"They say he is the pitcher, and Oh, I do hope they win after the way that Bennett boy has crowed."

"He is a fine built lad, replied Mrs. Cook, and they say those boys work just like men since their father died."

"Trying to pay off the mortgage on the farm, said Mr. Bannock, the Post Master." "Well I'm sure they will succeed."

The two teams were now on the field gathered around Mr. Cook where we had chosen up for innings; we won the toss and took our outs.

"Play ball," said Mr. Cook tossing Sam who was in the box a new ball.

The game was on at last. Sam seemed a bit nervous, he gathered up a handful of dirt and rubbed the ball to get the new gloss off, then stepped into the box and faced the batter who was Dave Bennett.

Everyone seemed to know it was a game between the two pitchers; Everyone did know that Dave Bennett was a crack pitcher; and now it was up to Sam to show if he was made of the right kind of stuff.

He gripped the ball between his first two fingers and thumb, turned half way round in the box and threw a straight ball; it came like the shot out of a cannon but was too high, and was called a ball by the umpire.

"Geee, Hamilton, that one sure had whiskers on it," said Dave as he let it pass; you will throw your arm out in two innings at that rate.

"Take your time lad, encouraged ed."

The next signal Jay Rodney, the catcher gave, was for an in-shoot, it went true to the mark and was called "strike one." Dave foul-tipped the next one, missed a vicious swing at the third and was called out.

"Sam was smiling now, as that was some satisfaction to fan Dave, Mr. Cook, the game has only started and the crowd in the grand-stand went wild.

The second man up fared the same; the third made first base on a single, but was caught trying to steal second and the inning was over.

TWO DEAF MUTES

By MOLLIE K. WETHERELL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Two young ladies entered a railway car, and the only seat vacant was one turned to face another in which sat two young men. No sooner had the girls seated themselves than the young men began to work their fingers in the sign language of deaf mutes. They were well dressed, gentlemanlike fellows, and it was evident from the rapidity with which they talked with their hands that they could neither hear nor speak.

"Isn't it a pity, Grace?" said one of the girls to the other, "that these young men are deaf mutes?"

"And so handsome, too!"

The words were spoken in too low a tone for their vis-a-vis to hear, even if they had been endowed with hearing, for the girls could not quite feel sure of their condition. As the train got under way, making more and more of a rattle, the girls gained confidence and raised their voices. Since no heed was paid to them by the young men, no matter what they said, they finally became used to speaking in their natural voices.

"Isn't it funny, Belle," said Grace, "to be talking about people before their faces and they not being able to hear a word?"

"There's a fascination about it," replied the other. "Do you know, I am possessed with a desire to say something I wouldn't have them hear for the universe."

"Why so?"

"Oh, on account of the novelty of the thing. Didn't you ever say all sorts of things to some deaf person?"

"Yes, indeed. My aunt Margaret is deaf as a post. I delight to call her names right under her nose."

"Which do you think the handsomer of the two men?"

"The one with the blue eyes and light hair."

"He hasn't a mustache. You know what they say about kissing a man without a mustache—like eating an egg without salt."

"I wouldn't mind a kiss from him even if he has no mustache."

At that moment the two young men ceased their silent communication, and the one with blue eyes, light hair and no mustache looked through the window. His companion was seized with a slight coughing and put his handkerchief to his mouth. But in a few minutes they were wriggling their fingers again.

"For my part," said Grace, "I prefer the one with that soft black beard. I think a beard that has not long grown is very becoming to a young man."

"Why don't you tell him so loud enough for him to hear you—that is, if he wasn't deaf as a manikin?"

"Do you dare me?"

"Dare you? There's nothing to dare. Don't you know that the reason these people can't talk is that they are born without the slightest ability to hear? Not being able to hear, they can't learn how to talk."

"Is that it?"

"Yes."

"Well, Mr. Man, your black beard is very becoming, and you with blue eyes my friend wouldn't mind your kissing her."

Then the girls looked at each other and laughed. It was great fun to be able to talk this way to two nice looking young men who couldn't hear a word they were saying. Nor could they help looking at the subjects of their remarks to note the absolutely unconscious look on their faces.

Then the conductor came around to take up tickets, and the girls saw that the young men's were for the same station as their own. When the conductor had passed Grace said to Belle:

"How would it do to ask them to come and see us tonight?"

"You can ask them what you like. It won't make any difference. Indeed, you might screech in their ears and they wouldn't hear you."

"Well, then, I'm going to do it just for fun."

"Don't."

"Why not?"

"Oh, it seems as if they ought to hear us, even if they don't."

"Do you suppose if they had heard what we had said about them they could help showing it?"

"Of course not."

"Well, then, what are you afraid of?"

"I'm not afraid. Young gentlemen, we are very much pleased with your appearance. We live at 84 North Adams street. We would be very glad to have you call upon us this evening."

She said all this looking straight at her friend. The young men's fingers were going like lightning. They seemed to have found a new subject of mutual interest.

"What would be the use of their coming to see us?" said Belle. "They couldn't talk to us nor we to them."

When the train stopped at the station where all were to alight one of the young men said to the other in a sonorous bass voice:

The girls went home in a carriage, using smelling salts by the way.

The time came when the young men made the girls' acquaintance and the call as well, but it was all done without reference to their first meeting.

Ancient Repartee.

A union of discordant particulars is laughable, as, What is wanting to him except fortune and virtue? Similar to this is friendly admonition by way of giving advice, as when Granius persuaded a bad pleader, who had made himself hoarse with speaking, to drink a cold mixture of honey and wine as soon as he got home. "I shall ruin my voice," said he, "if I do so." "It will be better," said Granius, "than to ruin your clients."—From Cicero's "Oratory."

LID LIFTED BY JUDGE WILLARD

Sweeping Decision in Minnesota Liquor Case.

SUIT COMES FROM BEMIDJI

Federal Court Issues Restraining Order Prohibiting Interference With Liquor Traffic on Grounds That Regulation Belongs to the State—Saloons May All Reopen.

Minneapolis, Jan. 10.—An injunction restraining W. E. ("Pussyfoot") Johnson, special agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic under the provisions of the Indian cession treaty of 1855, was issued by Judge Willard of the United States circuit court.

The reasons given for the decision are sweeping in their character. If the decision holds there will be no more of the "federal Indian liquor lid" in Minnesota outside of the limits of the actual Indian reservations.

The Indian treaties having anti-liquor clauses cover nine-tenths of the state. According to the contentions of the government in this suit the federal authorities have the right to prohibit liquor absolutely from any and all portions of this vast territory. According to Judge Willard's decision all of these anti-liquor clauses are void and of no effect.

The suit on which the decision was rendered was instituted by twelve saloon proprietors of Bemidji against Johnson and two of his deputies, T. E. Brentz and H. F. Coggeshall.

Appeal Can Be Taken.

Charles C. Houpt, federal district attorney for Minnesota, who handled the case on behalf of the government, was asked whether an appeal from Judge Willard's decision would be taken to the United States supreme court. "I don't know what will be done," he replied. "I must hear from the attorney general."

In the meantime the saloons may open throughout all that vast stretch of land covered by the treaty of 1855. It is here that "Pussyfoot" Johnson and his men have been driving all liquor manufacturers and dealers out of business. The federal agents cannot interfere, for they are under a judicial restraining order. Furthermore, railroads and express companies may resume the shipping of liquor to that district. This traffic has been stopped for many weeks.

Judge Willard holds that the admission of Minnesota to statehood gave the state the power of regulating the liquor traffic and repealed the anti-liquor clauses of the Indian land cession treaties. He points to the fact that only a year ago was any attempt made to enforce them since the state was admitted. For about a half a century before that the control of the liquor traffic, outside of the Indian reservations themselves, was left to the state.

Indian Agent Johnson arrived in Minneapolis just in time to get first news of the court decision. At his rooms in the West hotel he appeared cheerful but surprised, as neither side expected so sweeping a decision.

"Placed in my position there is really nothing for me to say," he remarked. "In view of the decision of the court I should say the attorney general is the only federal representative from whom comment should be expected. As for myself, I am not going to say a word."

BIG DAMAGES FOR INJURY

Switchman's Suit Settled by Payment of $17,500.

St. Paul, Jan. 10.—What is considered the largest settlement ever made in a personal injury case in the Ramsey county court was filed in the action brought by Carlton F. Stetson against the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company. The settlement was for $17,500. The action was brought by Stetson's father to recover $25,000 for injuries alleged to have been sustained by his son while working as a switchman at Milwaukee.

The youth's back was broken and he lay for weeks upon a board. The trial of the case during the November term of court resulted in a disagreement. The attorneys stipulated the settlement and the case was dismissed.

They Would Not Speculate

By GROVER S. GRIFFIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"You remember," said the Wall street man, "the time the different interests were fighting for Northern Pacific? Well, at that time I was dipping into stocks with mighty little money and usually on 5 per cent margin. I would lose $50 one day and make several hundred the next, repeating the process vice versa.

"Now, I never could do drudgery, and my position of speculator on not enough to buy a good horse was distressing. But this was not the worst of it. I was heels over head in love, and my girl's father was aware of my financial condition. He gave me to understand that I must look elsewhere for a wife. He would never consent to give his daughter to one so reckless, and even if I gained a fortune in Wall street it wouldn't make any difference to him, for he didn't approve of success gained in that way. Speculators were drones.

"As for his daughter, she said she agreed with him, gave me a lecture on the folly of thinking of marriage when I had not means for support for myself alone and was liable to be landed high and dry any day so far as my little capital was concerned. She advised me to go to work and threw out a faint hint that if I would earn an honest income she might marry me after all.

"I had no idea of doing that so long as I had a dollar in the world to put up on stocks and kept pegging away until at last I got down to buying ten shares at a time. One afternoon after I had had some successes my broker told me that I had $100 to my credit. He also told me that Northern Pacific was acting very strangely and"—

"Oh, cut it short," said one of the listeners. "When the stock went up you were in for a hundred shares and made a lot of money."

"Who's telling this story?" asked the narrator sharply.

"You."

"Well, then, shut up till I get through.

"The stock was about par, and I gave an order to buy ten shares. That was just before the stock went up to a hundred and fifty. The next evening I went to see my girl and told her that I had made fifty points on Northern Pacific, having sold out that afternoon. She said that my selling was the only sensible thing connected with the transaction. When I left her she gave me a kiss and, calling me back, gave me a letter to post and another kiss.

"'If I get two kisses at having made $500,' I said, 'how many shall I get at having made $10,000?'

"'None,' she replied. 'If you should make that you would be all the further from reformation.'

"I went away laughing, and whom should I meet but Jim Atterbury. I told him of my good fortune and asked him to go and have a little supper with me. He accepted, and we went into a restaurant.

"This is a kind of confession, I suppose, and I might as well make it now I'm on the subject. We drank several bottles of wine and I became ambitious to treat Jim royally. Going into a night bank, I cashed a check for $300 and"—

"Blew it all in," said the critic of the story.

"Not all of it. A pickpocket relieved me of what I didn't spend. I went to bed at 6 o'clock and didn't wake up till 5 in the afternoon. When I did I went out to get something to eat and buying a paper I saw in enormous letters in a newspaper that Northern Pacific had begun to skip up about 10 o'clock in the morning and had closed at 3 with 1000 bid.

"Wasn't I disgusted though? Had I held on a day or two I would have made a small fortune. And when I thought that out of the whole deal I hadn't left but $200 I sat down and cried. Yes, I cried; for notwithstanding the prejudice of my girl and her father against speculating, I believed a competence would have helped me through with her. Putting my hand in my pocket I found the letter she had asked me to post. I carried it in my hand till I came to a box and slipped it in, hoping that I wouldn't have to confess why I hadn't posted it the night before.

"That night there was a terrible time about Northern Pacific stock and the next morning, true enough, there were sales at 1000. In the evening, pining for sympathy, I went to see my girl. I found her in the slough of despond. I tried in vain to get out of her what was the matter but failed. Finally she said something about the letter she had given me the night before. I swore I had put it in the box a few minutes after I had left the house. She was too much in the dumps to jolly me, so I left early.

"The next morning about 9 o'clock she telephoned me to come right up to the house. I did so and found her dancing about the room like a lunatic. She came and threw both arms about my neck.

"'Why did you tell me you had posted my letter when I gave it to you?' she asked.

"'What do you mean?' I stammered.

"'It was an order to sell 200 shares of Northern Pacific at 150. It was delayed one day and the stock was sold for 1000. I'm worth a million.'

"With a trembling hand she handed me the broker's notice of sale."

A Modern Shipwreck.

In an account of the wreck of the sailing ship Carnarvon Bay on King Island, Australia, it is related that when the vessel struck the captain calmly took a cigar from his pocket, bit the end off and lit it before ordering the boats to be launched. Even this display of lack of fear did not entirely prevent some degree of panic among the men, however, and seven men pushed off in the port lifeboat, leaving twenty-two to scramble into the starboard boat. In spite of the captain's orders the men in the port boat refused to come alongside, and those in the starboard boat shouted that if they did not put off the masts would fall on them. Instead of hurrying to the boat the captain strolled to his cabin and collected his papers. After he had entered the boat he transferred five men to the port boat and made for Tasmania, 100 miles away. He and the mates steered in turn, while the men bailed with empty biscuit tins, and forty-eight hours later both boats reached land.—Chicago News.

Oddities of Cecil Rhodes.

He possessed few intimate friends, and not even to all of them did he disclose his hand. Mere acquaintances disliked his moody silences, varied with fits of rather boisterous fun. They considered him exclusive, morose, rough and overbearing. And it must be admitted that he was a good hater, violent when thwarted and at times blunt to the point of rudeness. It is difficult to be sufficiently unconventional to shock a mining camp, but he shocked it. In dress he was almost disreputable. He seldom took pains to ingratiate himself with any one, and a man who too openly scorns his fellows must expect to suffer social ostracism and to have his character traduced. It would be idle to deny that for a time there were unfavorable rumors in circulation regarding him or that he was in many circles unpopular. But, like Gallio, he "cared for none of those things."—Sir Levis Michell.

An Eccentric Bishop.

Bishop Wilson of Calcutta had as housekeeper a venerable lady who remembered the duel between Sir Philip Francis and Warren Hastings on Aug. 17, 1780. On entering the cathedral on a Sunday morning, fully robed, lawn sleeves and all, and passing the pew where the old lady sat he would pause and give her the "kiss of peace" before all the congregation, and this although he had met her at breakfast.

His sermons, too, were racy. Preaching against dishonesty, especially in horseflesh, as one of the great English failings in India, he went on, "Nor are we, servants of the altar, free from yielding to this temptation." Pointing to the occupant of the reading desk below him: "There is my dear and venerable brother, the archdeacon, down there. He is an instance of it. He once sold me a horse. It was unsound. 'I was a stranger, and he took me in.'"

Scientist Who Couldn't Light a Fire.

Lord Kelvin, like Lord Morley, once amused a Scottish audience with a display of ignorance. At a lecture in Edinburgh, with Lord Kelvin in the chair, the Duke of Argyll was taken suddenly ill. "When the aged peer was carried down to one of the anterooms," said a local paper, "one of the first things to be thought of was the lighting of a fire, and this task was tackled by the duke's host, Lord Kelvin. But instead of placing some paper in the grate and some wood on that in the orthodox manner he amazed the onlookers by desperate efforts to kindle a handful of sticks at a gas burner. Ordinary mortals may be pardoned for taking some satisfaction in the fact that even so great a philosopher as Lord Kelvin did not know how to light a fire."

Atlas and His Load.

Strictly speaking, "atlas" is a misnomer for a map book, since it was not the world, but the heavens, that the "atlas" of mythology upheld. Mercator, the famous Dutch geographer, who made globes for Emperor Charles V. of Germany, was the first to use the name in this connection, choosing it as a convenient and in some sort an appropriate title, because Atlas, the demigod, figures with a world upon his shoulders as a frontispiece or some early works on geography.

Atlas, it was said, made war with other Titans upon Zeus and, being conquered, was condemned to bear heaven upon his head and hands. Later tradition represented him as a man changed by means of Medusa's head into a mountain, upon which rested heaven and all its stars.

In any case, Atlas was always associated with a heavy burden strongly borne. Thus Shakespeare makes Warwick say to Gloucester:

It is not difficult to see how by an association of ideas this came to be chosen as the name for a book of maps which upholds and exhibits to us the whole world.

Marshal Tureen and His Soup.

There is a quaint old shop in London which still bears the name of Samuel Birch, the first purveyor of turtle soup in the English capital. Amid all the changes of the city Birch's shop in Cornhill survives in the guise it wore when its owner was lord mayor of London in the memorable year of Waterloo. Samuel Birch achieved distinction in many fields. He was an orator and a patriot; he was colonel of the city militia and accepted with great good nature his nickname of Marshal Tureen; he was a man of letters, produced plays that held the stage and books that were readable, though now seldom read. One of his plays, "The Adopted Child," was popular long after its author had killed his last turtle. His daughter married Lamartine, and one of his sons, a fine classical scholar, begat a family of scholars. Yet Birch's claim to fame rests most upon the fact that he was the man who made turtle soup popular. City merchants, templars from the inns and dandies from the west end all flocked to Cornhill, the turtle house of all London.—Argonaut.

In the matter of dress we have fallen upon a decline since the days when the Duke of Wellington was refused admission to Almack's because he was wearing trousers instead of breeches and silk stockings. Even Almack's, however, had to admit trousers within its closely guarded portals the following year. When Gladstone was "up" at Oxford the reign of the dandies was in full swing. When late in life he revisited the university to lecture to the undergraduates on Homer he was asked by G. W. E Russell whether he noticed any difference between his audience and the men of his own time.

"Yes," he replied, "in their dress an enormous change. I am told that I had among my audience some of the most highly connected and richest men in the university, and there wasn't one whom I couldn't have dressed from top to toe for £5."—St. James' Gazette.

A "Fast" Train.

"Speaking of railroads," said the truthful man, "the ultimate word, in my experience, was a certain 'limited' on which I traveled last summer. At a point where we were making our greatest speed a man stood at the side of the track with a moving picture machine. I leaned out of the window and called to him 'How are you getting on?'

"He stopped turning the crank and spoke with an expression of deep disgust.

"'It don't seem to be no use,' he said. 'Hold your head still, please. I want to get a time exposure.'"—Everybody's.

The Llama With a Saddle.

In his native country the llama is trained as a beast of burden, and in this capacity is very useful for, hard and wiry by nature, he can carry as much as a 100 pounds. As a mount, too, he is quite easy to train. Indeed, both the llama and the onelko take to the saddle as to the manner born when once they have assured themselves that their teacher wishes them well. Their most striking peculiarity as saddle animals, however, is a strong objection to having their heads in any way pulled about by their riders. So long as their mouths are left alone they will amble along quite contentedly at a fair rate of speed, but if they are ridden by some one with a heavy hand they show a tendency to stop at once, whipping round in a manner distinctly disconcerting to those who do not quite realize what is going to happen.—Wide World Magazine.

Turn About.

In a certain southern city the colored servants, as a rule, go to their own homes at night. The cook in the family of a clergyman not only does this, but of late has arrived at the rectory too late to cook breakfast. Hence her mistress lately told her that for each breakfast missed there would be a reduction in her weekly wages. Dinah passively assented to this, but next day the mistress heard the maid next door say to her:

"'Pears to me you get to work mighty late."

"I gets to work when I gets ready," was the reply.

"How does you manage about de brekfus?"

In remitting, please send le stamps when the amount is less than 26c; on amounts above 26c we prefer money order, express order or bank draft. (Don't send cash.)

We will be glad to send you complete list of valuable premiums. We honor both "Sunkist" and "Red Ball" wrappers for premiums.

The orange is the most luscious and healthful fruit. California excels in quality of oranges. The best of the California oranges are now packed in individual wrappers labeled "Sunkist."

Five thousand orange farmers in California do their own packing, shipping and selling. They grade and select their crop into "firsts," "seconds," etc. The firsts are fancy, tree-ripened, hand-picked, seedless, fiberless, thin-skinned oranges—every individual orange a perfect specimen of the finest variety of oranges. They are not only more healthful and more palatable than other oranges, but they are actually cheaper, for they are nearly all meat and nourishment.

Your dealer sells "Sunkist" Oranges. Ask for them. You will know them by the tissue paper wrapper in which each "Sunkist" Orange is packed. On the wrapper note the label, "Sunkist." Keep all the wrappers. They are worth money to you

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 13, 1911

"He that riseth late must trot all day."—Poor Richard.

Hon. D. P. O'Neil of this city drew a good seat in the house chamber. He is located just about in the center of the house. Can you hear Dan's voice ring?

Senator A. L. Hanson of Ada was appointed chairman of the immigration committe. He was also named as a member of several other important committees. Now, who says that Senator Hanson has no influence in the State Senate.

Life is a great game. Not frivolous, but serious. And they get most out of it and play it best who put themselves into it for the benefit of others. What? You don't believe it? Then try it yourself and learn the truth. —Ex.

Has Bro. Watson of the Big Falls Compass struck the right chord? He is running Montgomery-Ward and other mail order house advertisements, and the rest of his paper is comfortably filled with ads of the home merchants who were never before known to advertise. Hop to it. George P.—Grand Rapids Independent.

At last postal savings banks are a reality is this country. Tuesday one was opened in each state the one in Minnesota being at Bemidji. They will be of great benefit to people of small means, and eventually will be of benefit to the whole country, as they will encourage thrift and saving among people who never saved before —Norman Couny Index.

The only way to get the best results from potato raising is for the farmers to join together and raise only one variety and that one should be the best as Southern planters use our potatoes for seed and cannot use mixed potatoes. The Early Ohio isthe most in demand, although a new variety—the Irish Cobbler—is said to be growing in favor. The question of raising a uniform variety should be talked over in each neigh- —Norman County Index.

A bill has been introduced in the House by W. A. Campbell providing for educational and professional qualifications for county superintendents of schools. This is a move in the right direction and should receive hearty approval.

As to Professor James' British plan of voting to help friend Tawney why not simplify matters by having Tawney move to a more congenial atmosphere than the first district?

"Cannon Victor in Hot Fight on House Rules". And it was only last March that———, but why dwell on the changes the last ten months have wrought in the hearts of Congress, now we know that "Cannon can come back."

The Czar of Russia has decided that it has become necessary to encourage agriculture in his country and he is now engaged in a business to manufacture farm machinery and will sell these on long time payments to the actual farmers in his domain. There is little doubt but, that this may be a move in the right direction but it would seem that if his proposed farmers shall succeed it will be necessary for him to establish a number of schools of agriculture to teach his people how to farm; for it is as equally important to know how, as it is to have the wherewithal.

COUNTRY WITHOUT A MILLIONAIRE

That's the boast of New Zealand. "Sounds good," you say, "but they can't have any railroads or telegraph or telephone or modern utilities of any kind, can they?

Well, no, they couldn't except for one thing—the fact that the nation itself has some people and property, hence some credit, on which to raise a little money now and then to do things.

And yet it must seem funny to live in a country without a single millionaire to look up to.—St. Daily News.

THE EXCESSIVE USE OF TOBACCO

The managers of the great railway systems have long insisted that their employees abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors. Now it is announced that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad is discharging those of its men whose "yellow fingers" betray their addiction to the habit of smoking cigarettes. Beginning with this month, no more cigarette smokers will be employed, says the Mankato Free Press.

The report, just published, of the commissioner of internal revenue shows that the use of tobacco in all forms is largely increasing in this country, and that 7,000,000,000 cigarettes were smoked in the year ended last June, a billion more than in 1909. The Santa Fe railroad does not prohibit the use of cigars or pipes by its men. The company believes these are not so injurious as cigarettes. But we doubt whether is has any scientific confirmation of this belief.

Separate investigations have been conducted by medicial examiners at the universities of Michigan, Cambridge, Yale, at Clark college, and at the Henry Phipps Institute, which show that the use of tobacco by adolescents is injurious, but that healthy and mature men suffer no measureable ill effects from a moderate indulgence. But any person may use tobacco excessively; some have a physical idiosyncrasy against tobacco and some suffer from nervous affections that are made graver by its use.

Moreover, the tests of college students show that tobacco users may be subject to habits of idleness and inattention to their duties. It is worthy of note that a great public service corporation should issue a denying ordinance against them. To be sure that itis in the west, where the prejudice against cigarettes has found expression in several state prohibition laws. The eastern railroad companies have not deemed it worth while to follow the Santa Fe's example.—Lake City Graphic-Republican.

FARMER'S ELEVATOR PROGRESS.

Before calling the board of directors which were appointed at the Auditorium of Thief River Falls on Dec. 17th, together. I will announce to the public that we have still about thirty-five shares to sell, and unless said shares will be sold in the near future it will practically be of no use to call the board together. According to our incorporation articles we cannot commerce business until a certain amount of shares are sold. Our subscription list was left with Mr. Oen of T. R. Falls, as he promised to help and sell stock "Free of Charge."

Now I hope our neighbor friends will not delay in taking a share in our project, as now is a good time of the year to contract for lumber, as the lumber yards are over stocked.

I still hear some argument in regard to the distribution of the total profit, and I will therefore give my opinion as I understand some want to divide it by a percentage on the amount of bushels sold by each share holder. But now in case we should handle 200,000 bushels in one year and a net profit of two cents a bushel, which would amount to $4,000 to be divided between 120 shares, that would make a net profit of thirty-three dollars per share. Now in case this should be divided into percentage on bushel sold of grain by said stock-holders. I do not think that would be fair as 100,000 bushels of this might amount might have been marketed by out-siders, and in this way a small grain raiser would receive very little in dividends, but this subject might be taken to a vote at our next annual meeting in July.

PARCEL POST COMING.

Washington, Jan. 11.—In spite of the deluge of opposing petitions with which congress has been inundated there is a good chance that the law providing for a rural parcels post system will be passed in this session. As the situation shapes up at the present time the enactment of the proposed legislation will be assured if President Taft brings sufficient pressure to bear upon the leaders to carout the recommendation of the rural system contained in his message.

There are a score of rural parcels post pending, upon all which there were extended hearings last winter. The house committee on postoffices and post roads is in possession of all the necessary information on the subject.

Representative Keeks of Massachusetts, the chairman of the house committee, favors the inauguration of a parcels post on the rural delivery routes and moreover advocates the reduction of the postage rate on merchandise and other fourth class mail matter from 16 to 1 cents a pound.

If a bill embodying this combination should be passed it would be possible to send the parcels under four pounds weight anywhere in the country for 12 cents a pound, while on the rural routes packages weighing up to eleven pounds could be dispatched at the same rate. This is the international parcels post rate.—Bemidji Sentinel.

HUMANITY ON WHEELS

Red Cross First Aid Car Now on the Road—Startling Statistics

In these strenuous days no one can afford to sit back and wait for business to come to him. He must go out and hustle for it. This is no less true in humanitarian work than in commercial ventures.

The American Red Cross has always been distinguished by its enterprise in making its efforts to aid humanity of maximum value. As another evidence of this activity this association has lately established a first aid to the injured department through which it hopes to carry instruction in this important subject to all parts of the country. In futherance of this object it has now in operation a First Aid Car. This car was donated by the Pullman Company and has been fully equipped by the Red Cross with all sorts of first aid material. It is in direct charge of Dr. M. Whitefield, of Birming of Dr. M. Whitefield Glasgow, of Birmingham, Alabama, who was employed for this special work by the First Aid Department of the Red Cross. The car was outfitted at the Pullman shops in Buffalo and is now evidently appeals to the various railway officials as the railways are hauling it free of charge.

The car will proceed from place to place stopping at railway, manufacturing and mining centers where the best opportunities present themselves for organizing first aid classes. Just as has been done by the Red Cross in the mining field an attempt will be made to interest employers, employees and local physicians alike so that first aid aid to the injured instruction will have general support and countenance after the car has visited a place. Though the Red Cross car is primarly designed for instruction purposes it will also always be available when needed for rescue work and care of injured in case of disaster as it is fully equipped for this purpose.

It is, perhaps, not generally realized how large a percentage of deaths are now due to accidents. In fact, in certain industries deaths from disease are absolutely insignificant in numbers as compared with thoes from accident. For example, in the registration area which now includes about 55 per cent of the population of the United States, the 1909 census statistics charge to accident 67.9 per cent of all deaths among steam railway employees between the ages of 25 and 34. The next most hazardous occupation as shown by these statistics is that of miners and quarrymen taken together in which accidents are responsible for 61.3 per cent of all deaths at the same ages. Iron and steel workers have 28.1 per cent, and the rate for all manufacturing and machanical pursuits taken together at the same ages is 21.9 per cent. These are the people which the Red Cross is trying to reach in a practical way by means of its First Aid Car.

MINNESOTA TO BOOM

Minnesota, according to George P. Welch, state immigration commissioner, has better reason for celebrating Corn Day than any other state in the Union. "There was a time, "said Mr. Welsh, "when everybody thought Minnesota was too far North to produce corn in any quantity. But we have fooled those skeptical persons in the last few years. Our agricultural experts have found that Minnesota soil is as good for corn as it is for wheat and the whole world knows about our wheat. Corn is now being raised throughout the 405 miles of the state's length from Iowa to the Canadian border. The yield last year was 58,000,000 bushels and in 1909 iswas 60,000,000. The decrease was due to the fact that fewer acres were planted in 1910."

Official figures show that Iowa having been excelled already, Illinois will soon have to look to her laurels as a corn producing state if Minnesota keeps up her advancement in the branch of agriculture. Thousands of acres of fine land are lying beneath swamps, muskegs and timber lands in Northern Minnesota and thousands of acres of tilled land are devoted to wheat yet the average yield per acre for 1909 in Minnesota was 34.8 bushels as against 35.9 bushels for Illinois and 31.5 bushels for Iowa. In the Southern part of Minnesota the average yield per acre is more than 45 bushels. The state's average yield per acre in 1900 was 32.5 bushels. The Illionis and Iowa figures are not available but it is understood that they made a better showing than in 1909.

"Minnesota would be the best corn producing state in the Union if the farmers only took more care in its culture and were as good corn breeders as those of Iowa and Illinois," continued Commissioner Welsh. "The corn crops are not rotated as they should be, as Minnesota farmers prefer to make a specialty of wheat raising, thinking they can do better by raising a crop that many other states cannot raise. There was no crop failure in Minnesota last year. With the corn yield 58,000,000 bushels and the wheat yield 94,080,000 bushels conditions were about as in 1909."

Professor Bull seys the faculty of the Minnesota College of Agriculture is anxious that Corn Day shall be generally observed Professor Bull is a soil culturist and knows all about treating soil to produce any sort of corn that is wanted for special use. He can raise corn that will either fatten or make stock lean as may be desired by treating the soil and selecting the seed. He can raise corn that will produce an oil which passes in commerce as olive oil. Or he can produce a corn that is free from oil and contains a large proportion of potash.

These are a few of the reasons why Minnesota can enter into the observance of Corn Day with a willing spirit.

Contempt For the House of Commons.

There is nothing noble or exalted in the history of the house of commons. Indeed, a devil's advocate had be the requisite talent could easily deliver an oration as long and as eloquent as any of Burke's or Sheridan's, taking as his [illegible] the stupidity, cowardice and, until recent times, the corruption of the house of commons. I confess I cannot call to mind a single occasion in its long and remarkable history [illegible] of commons, as a whole, [illegible] of her obviously heroic or [illegible] wise, but we all of us can recall hundreds of occasions [illegible] and wisdom being greatly needed, the house of commons exhibited either selfish indifference, crass ignorance or the vulgarest passion.—Augustine Birrell's "Essays and Addresses."

Anne Boleyn and the Lemon.

Who ever thinks of connecting such a commonplace article of diet as the lemon with the romantic history of ill fated Anne Boleyn? Yet indirectly she was the cause of its first introduction into England and so into popular notice. Henry VIII. gave such splendid feasts and pageants in honor of the coronation of Anne and of their previous nuptials as had seldom been accorded to queens of the blood royal. These kingly entertainments were in turn followed by the great civic feasts of London, for which the whole world was searched for delicacies to add to the splendor. At one such banquet, graced by the presence of the royal pair, a lemon was introduced as an elegant novelty. To an epicure such as Henry the acquisition of a castle in France would have proved less acceptable, and such was the importance attached to the discovery—so says an old biographer—that a special record was made of the fact that the cost of this precious lemon was six silver pennies!

An Architectural Curiosity.

There are many churches throughout England which are without tower or spire, but there are few churches which can boast of having a tower and spire side by side. One of these is the parish church of Ormskirk, in Lancashire. The tower is built over the porch at the west end, and the spire is placed as closely as possible to it. The origin of this architectural freak has not been ascertained, but there is a tradition to the effect that when Orme, the Saxon pirate from whom the town derives its name, decided to construct a kirk, or church, as an explatory offering for his evil deeds his two daughters quarreled over the design for the structure. One determined to have a tower, the other was equally resolved to have a steeple. As neither of them would give way the pirate chief acceded to both their wishes, and the curious may see the tower and spire still keeping watch side by side on the surrounding country.

She Played the Green.

The attache of a European embassy was very much attracted by a western girl of great beauty and still greater wealth at a summer resort, and in order to interest her deeply he fell into the habit of discoursing at length on his family tree and telling her that ancestry was of great value to a man.

The girl from the west had been brought up in a section of the country where every man was accepted for what he was and not because of what his ancestors had been or done. She began to be bored by the attache's lectures on pedigree.

"Oh, yes," she agreed indifferently, "but what's the use of blue blood if you haven't got the long green?"—Popular Magazine.

What's In a Name?

The late king of Siam had for a full name Phra Bat Somdeth Phra Paraminor Maha Chulalongkorn Phra Chula Chum Klo Chow Yu Hua, and this does not include his titles. A wag in Bombay saw it in the paper when the ruler was visiting that city and was being received by the British officials and passed it over to a young Irish subaltern with the challenge that he pronounce it. The young fellow looked at it a moment and then handed it back. He said he was not long enough winded, but he was sure he could play it on the garrison club piano if the instrument were a couple of octaves longer. The king's uncle, however, who was also a prince high priest, had for one name alone the following collection of letters: Pawaratsawarlyalongkaun. Any one who can get through this and not flat one of the notes has lived a long time where he can look out of the window and see the gilded peak of a temple shimmering in the equatorial sun.—Christian Herald.

Starve a Cold.

Nature, as a rule, takes the appetite away when one is coming down with a cold or other infectious disease, and nature is wise. Don't coax Mary to eat when she has a cold. Don't allow the neighbors to tempt Johnny with calf's foot jelly or other dainties. When suffering from a cold the digestive organs are in no condition to care for food. The digestive juices are altered or entirely absent. One or two days' comparative fast will often assist in averting a severe siege of cold. A more convenient and enjoyable form of fasting would be to subsist for one or two days upon fruit or fruit juices perhaps, with the addition of a little toast. An exclusive fruit diet has all the practical advantages of complete fasting, while it satisfies the appetite and supplies sugar from which the liver can manufacture glycogen to sustain the white blood corpuscles in their continuous warfare against microbes.—William S. Sadler in Designer

Giving Him Carte Blanche.

A few years ago John Kendrick Bangs, the humorist, told a number of his Broadway literary confreres that he felt particularly elated over an order he had just received from Henry W. Savage, the theatrical producer, for the libretto of a musical comedy. The play was produced a few months later. During the long period of rehearsals so much of Bangs' material was eliminated and so much other material inserted in its stead that when the curtain went up on the first night not more than half a dozen of the original lines remained.

About a week later a friend, meeting Bangs, asked him if he was writing any more plays for Savage.

"Yes," replied Bangs. "Only an hour ago I sent him 500 blank sheets of paper and told him to go as far as he liked."—Irvin Cobb in New York Tribune.

Anthony Trollope's First Earnings.

A literary man recalls Anthony Trollope's little gloat over the first fruits of his pen. "I send you a copy of 'The Warden,'" he wrote to Lord Houghton in 1860, "which Mr. Longman assures me is the last of the first edition. There were, I think, only 750 printed, and they have been over ten years in hand. But I regard the book with affection, as I made £9 2s. 6d. by the first year's sales, having previously written and published for ten years without any such golden result. Since then I have improved even upon that." Trollope, of course, "improved upon that" in no uncertain fashion.—Westminster Gazette.

NATIONAL CORN EXPOSITION.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 11.—The program for the fourth annual National Corn Exposition to be held January 30th to February 1th, in the eight immense buildings on the Ohio State Exposition grounds has just been completed, and provides for one of the greatest National Agricultural Expositions ever held in the world.

The buildings are connected by enclosed walks, comfortably heated and brilliantly illuminated, in all resembling a great summer garden with palms and plants and tender growing crops, giving the visitors a whiff of nature which will more remind them of a balmy June day than of the winter season.

This great National Corn Exposition will be a grand round-up of all state agricultural shows and agricultural meetings. The name "Corn Exposition" does not mean that only corn will be shown, for all grains and grasses, the prizewinners only, at the various state shows, will be in competition for the valuable National trophies.

More than 35 states will have competitive exhibits. Twenty-five state agriculture colleges and experiment stations will have scientific exhibits, each demonstrating its most advance experimental work. These exhibits which will be in charge of expert demonstrators will deal, in a practical way, with nearly every phase of the science of agriculture. For instance: North Carolina will emphasize the cotton industry from the growing plant to the manufactured article—with cotton gin and loom in actual operation, while Illinois will especially emphasize its soil work. Never before in the history of the world has there been such a showing of results in agriculture, based on scientific investigation.

The federal department of agriculture will be represented with its famous exhibit which fills two large cars, and which has just been returned from the international expositions at Buenos Ayers.

Important among the many meetings, exhibits and other special features of this greatest of agricultural expositions may be mentioned the meetings of the American Breeders' association; the Ohio Dairymen's association; the National Rural Life Conference, the Ohio Conservation association, the Ohio Corn Improvement association and numerous live stock associations. There will be special features of vital interest to the Y. M. C. A., churches, colleges, schools, the farmer, and the city man and their families alike.

Speakers of nation-wide reputation will deliver addresses daily on the National Corn Exposition program.

Isaac Jubb went to Beaudette on Tuesday in company with Lawrence whom he expected to locate upon a homestead in that district.

Mrs. G. A. Penney and sons, Arthur and Jordan returned from Duluth Tuesday called home by Dr. Penney's illness. The Doctor is much improved.

Mrs. Wm. White and daughter, Stella left for Eau Claire, Wis., Tuesday evening where they will spend the remainder of the winter with relatives and friends.

Lester Gasel, of the Northwestern Drainage Company's force has been on the sick list the past week but has recovered sufficiently to be "up and doing" again.

Mrs. E. Goar, who has been visiting, Mrs. Wedmer and Mrs. Ed Rolfe returned to her home at Stephen Friday. Kathryn Rolfe accompanied her aunt and will visit her for some time.

Mrs. Clay, who has been visiting with her aunt, Mrs. A. Aker the past two weeks left for Fargo Tuesday afternoon where she will visit for some time before returning to her home at Bowden, N. Dakota.

The Commercial has lately secured a consignment of elegant oak desks. The school will shortly be equipped with the same kind of furniture throughout, making it the best furnished business school north of the Twin Cities.

Miss Stella Brogen left Tuesday for a visit with friends at Eau Claire, Wis. Miss Brogen has accepted a position as stenographer with a whole sale house at Superior and will begin her work there at the completion of her visit.

Dr. E. A. Colberg of St. Peter stopped off between trains on Tuesday. While here he visited with O. A. Naplin and G. T. Almen. Dr. Colberg has a record of having completed twenty-one years of school work before the age of twenty-two.

A large number of business men including Messrs. H. P. and Oscar Sponheim, Lars Backe, H. O. Loken, and D. B. Bakke, went up to Holt on Wednesday to attend the first annual meeting of the stock-holders of the State Bank of Holt which was held that day.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian society will meet at the home of Mrs. Hugh Jones on Friday afternoon Jan. 13th, at 3 o'clock where they will be entertained by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Booren. A full attendance of the members is desired as new officers for the coming year are to be elected. Everybody will be welcome.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future referance is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

Frank Posten, manager of the McCurdy Ice Co., has no objection to the weather that has prevailed the last few days as it is enabling him to fill the many orders for ice to be shipped to various towns in this vicinity and out along the wheat line. All of these towns will be supplied from this city and their requirements are great enough to give the company all the work they can handle.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATIONS ARE POSTPONED.

The teachers examinations that ordinarily would have been held in February have been postponed by order of the state superintendent, and will be held May 4, 5 and 6th. Teachers holding certificates that expire Mar. 1, 1911, if they are now engaged in teaching in the county, should write Supt. E.A. Mostue, Thief River Falls at once so that their certificates may be properly extended to the time of a later examination.

I will be at my office in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls on the first and third Saturday of each month until further notice. Will be pleased to answer inquiries as regards school matters and solicits your correspondence.

Respectfully submitted,

School Notes.

The high school students occupied the Lincoln school for the first time on Monday. It is needless to state that for room, comfort and convenience it is beyond description. Dedication will take place as soon as the electric fixtures arrive and are installed. It would be more satisfactory to citizens if they await the dedication to inspect the building.

The short course students started their three months of work on Monday. The class at first consisted of ten young men, but more are joining every day. This is a splendid opportunity for young people in town and country to secure something which will be of immediate value to them, and at absolutely no cost. There is a number of large boys and young men about the city who ought to be taking advantage of this short course. It might mean a stepping stone to some better position. No qualifications are required to enter the course, except that the student be over 16.

Miss Wahl was forced by ill health to resign her position as sixth grade teacher at the Central. Mrs. O'Brien of the Knox takes Miss Wahl's room and Miss Herrick, of Little Falls, takes the Knox sixth grade.

Nearly all the pupils were in school on opening day last Monday. Very little illness now exists among the children and were it not for the extremely cold weather, the lower rooms would be crowded.

The grammar grade students are now in the old high school building in the quarters formerly occupied by the high school students. A seventh grade teacher will be secured this week to aid in caring for these grammar grade children, as the enrollment has been increasing for the last two months until it is impossible to seat the children in three rooms.

Bemidji has 34 teachers and fewer children than has Thief River Falls. There are 30 teachers in Thief River, and the departments of agriculture and normal training are in operation in the local city, but not in the Bemidji schools.

Four high school boys and the superintendent were busy all the Christmas holidays getting furniture in place and making other preparations for the opening of school on January 9th. The simple task of scrubbing the Lincoln floors developed the fact that this building has over three quarters of an acre of floor space.

STEINER SCHOOL NOTES

* * * * * * * * * * *

School opened on Monday with but four absent, which was a good beginning for the New Year, considering the weather we are having.

We are pleased to find our school house cleaned Monday morning, when we returned. All the Christmas decorations are also left making the room look more home like and pleasant.

Several of the pupils froze their faces this morning coming to school.

Messrs. Waring, Furstnau and Whitman, our school board, visited the school this afternoon. They promised to fix up our school house for better protection against the cold weather.

The pupil's perfect attendance for the third month are: Lizzie and Ruth Furstnau, Edwin, Emil and Olga Koglin, and Edwin Swanson. Those missing but one or two days are: Augusta and Sarah Swanson, Elle, Willie and Louise Meyer, Amy Whitman, Celia Saugen and Egbert Malberg.

For twine the prices are: Standard 500 feet to the pound, 6¼c per pound; sisal, white 500 feet to the pound, 6¼c per pound; standard manila, 500 feet to the pound, 6¾c per pound; manila, 600 feet to the pound, 7¾c per pound; pure manila, 650 feet to the pound, 8½c per pound

For the farm machinery the prices will be: Minnesota mower, No. 1, five-foot cut, dealer, $32 consumer, $38; Minnesota binder with bundle carrier, six-foot cut, dealer, $87, consumer, $102; Minnesota binder with bundle carrier, seven foot cut, dealer, $90, consumer, $105; Minnesota tongue truck for binder, dealer, $10; Minnesota transport truck, dealer, $5.

TWELVE GO WEST.

At least twelve local persons have expressed their desire to join the party which is to be made up here, and will travel in a special car to visit the Umatella Valley in the Great State of Oregon. In this Valley the United States Government has expended about $1,850.000 to bring water from the Umatilla River to irrigate this beautiful and fertile Hermiston Valley lying between the Cascade mountains on the west and the Blue mountains to the east in north Eastern Oregon just south of the famous Yakima Valley. The homeseeker will find all he is looking for in the valley in the way of climate and altitude with the water assured by the U. S. Gov't., transportation markets and soil are not to be excelled anywhere.

Should anyone desire to join our party they should communicate at once with Messrs. Jones and Whirry. Room 11 Dobner—Meehan Block Phone 268.

Transportation including berths will probably cost about $70 or $72. Traveling in a special car is the ideal way to make a trip to the coast country for it means that the car can be side-tracked at all the points of interest and it also means that there is no moving of baggage and no necessity for Hotel accommodations from time to time. Its traveling without worry or discomfort and with as little inconvenience as if you were in your own home.

NEWFOLDEN FIRE COMPLETELY DESTROYS STOCK.

Monday afternoon Hoberg & Erickson's general merchandise store at Newfolden caught fire and building and stock are in ruins. The citizens did heroic work with an emergency bucket brigade but the wind was so strong that their efforts were of no avail.

Hoberg and Erickson's was the largest general merchandise store in town and its loss will be keenly felt until it is re-established.

YANKEE Versus SOUTHERNER

By HARRY VAN AMBURG

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

A steamer on the Mississippi river half a century and more ago would be a curious sight to a traveler today. One-third, the ladies' cabin, was used exclusively by women and children; the other two-thirds constituted a gigantic gambling establishment—not an establishment run by a bank, but used by gentlemen and sharpers, the former for amusement, the latter for swindling. At mealtimes one long table extended through the men's cabin, and when dinner was served the captain of the boat would enter the ladies' cabin, offer his arm to one of the ladies and escort her to the table, the rest following. As soon as they were seated the bell was rung and a waiting crowd dropped into their seats.

Southern gentlemen traveled on these steamers, men of the olden time, whose "word was as good as their bond." One day Colonel St. Leger of Canton, Miss., and Major Carter of Baton Rouge were enjoying a social glass before the little Punch and Judy affair in the bow of the boat that served for a bar when the colonel said:

"Majah, do you see those sharpe's ovah tha' fleecing that Yankee? He will go back to Connecticut or wharevah he comes from and repo't that we a' all swindle's down heah. Now, if I were to tell him that these men are cheating him he wouldn't believe me."

"There must be some way of saving him from them, colonel, if we could only hit on it."

"It doesn't occu' to me, suh."

Now, every gentleman in the south at that period played poker, and these two were both experts at the game. They finally agreed that the best way to save the Yankee would be to get him into a stateroom by himself, win his money and at the end of his journey hand it back to him with a lecture on the folly of playing cards for money on a Mississippi river steamboat. As soon as the small tables were united in a long one for dinner Colonel St. Leger approached the Yankee, entered into conversation with him and after the meal invited him into his stateroom to sample some fine old Kentucky bourbon he had there. The Yankee accepted, and Major Carter joined the party. After sampling the whisky the three sat down to a friendly game of poker.

Since the Yankee played very poorly and the two southern gentlemen were among the best poker players in the south it was not long before the Yankee's money was transferred to their ownership. But just as they thought they had him "broke" he pulled out a fat roll of new twenty dollar bills, with which he began to play recklessly. The colonel looked at the major and the major at the colonel. The colonel's look said, "By Jove, what a haul this would have been for the sharpers!" and the major's look replied, "Yes, and we must take it out of him for his own good."

One by one the twenty dollar bills passed into the hands of the Yankee's benefactors till at last all but one had been taken from him. With a gasp he opened a jack pot with it, raised and kept on raising the confederates until there was something like a thousand dollars in the pot. In the showdown he exhibited four aces against the colonel's four queens and the major's full of tens.

Again the colonel and the major exchanged glances, this time of astonishment. But they kept on their benevolent effort. Presently the Yankee said:

"Guess we'd better raise the limit. You fellers have taken $5,000 out o' me, and I want to get it back."

The southern gentlemen would have considered it a reproach to them to refuse under the circumstances and agreed. From that time forward the hands the Yankee held were phenomenal. It seemed that all the court cards in the pack fell into his hands, and, singularly enough, the confederates held large hands, too, but always a trifle smaller than his. Then when the former had recovered his losses he pushed back his chair and said:

"Gentlemen, you thought you had in me a greenhorn whose money you could easily win. I'm regarded the best poker player in Hartford. I don't wish to punish you for trying to swindle me, so I decline to play any longer."

Again the confederates looked at each other, this time in dismay. Then Colonel St. Leger, stammering and red as a boiled lobster, told his story. The Yankee put out a hand to each of his intended benefactors, saying:

"Is there anything more honorable as well as guileless than the true southern gentleman?"

When they settled up the Yankee generously turned over to his friends the new bills he had brought out, taking the worn ones himself. At New Orleans the three parted with expressions of mutual regard, the southerners going to the same hotel. An hour later they met in the barroom, each with a new twenty dollar bill in his hand.

"Majah," said the colonel, "this bill is a counterfeit."

"So is this."

"We've been done by that rascally Yankee."

"So we have."

"I've got fifteen hundred of it."

"I have the same amount."

There was a pause, at the end of which the colonel said:

"Majah, what will you have, suh?"

And the two commiserated with each other at the bar.

C. W. Hale of the Agriculture Extension Department of the State University will conduct the first of a series of six weekly farmers' institutes in the gymnasium of the New High School next Wednesday. He will be assisted by the agricultural department of the high school and some interesting music will also be rendered.

Everybody should attend this and the five succeeding institutes.

Passports In Russia.

Every person arriving in Russia is required to surrender his passport to the owner or manager of the hotel or house he stops at and if married give all information as to the name and ages of his wife and children, so as to enable the house owner or hotel proprietor to complete the blank prescribed by law for submittance with the passport to the respective police district station for registration. The blanks are made out in duplicate, one copy being filled out at the police station and the other forwarded to the address bureau, at which place it is possible to learn the address of any one residing, temporarily or otherwise, in the city. A similar blank is filled out when the party moves into another house or leaves the city, notation being made as to the destination. The traveler in leaving need only inform the hotel management or house owner, provided he is living in private apartments, of his departure and give the name of the city or country he is bound for.

The Lion's Share

By SADIE OLCOTT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The world is full of cases of people overreaching themselves by trying to overreach some one else. Unhappily few of these cases come out to the advantage of the person overreached.

Peter Inslee, a prospector, discovered a rich vein of ore in Colorado and sold a half interest to Enoch Smithson, who organized a company for its development. Inslee's share was all in the stock of the company, he owning a few shares less than Smithson, thus giving the purchaser full control in the premises. Inslee did not get any dividends on his stock, and being very poor, with a wife and a couple of kids to support, he was obliged to sell a few shares occasionally to keep the wolf from the door.

Meanwhile the price of the stock on the exchange was gradually settling. When the company was organized a few shares were sold at 50 per cent of their par value. As Inslee kept putting it out he got less and less for it till he was obliged to part with considerable shares at a time to supply his necessities. After awhile he sold the last of it for 6 cents on the dollar.

About this time, going by the mine, he saw that a high fence had been put around it. He strolled up to the gate and was refused admittance. For the first time it occurred to him that Smithson had pretended that the mine was not paying in order to depress the stock.

Inslee went to Potter, a broker in Colorado Springs, and asked him to find out what floating stock of the company there was on the market. Potter investigated subrosa and discovered that there was all of Inslee's original stock and a part of Smithson's, which the latter had given in payment for mining machinery and other necessities. Inslee told the broker about the fence recently put around the property, saying also that he suspected there was a "nigger" behind it. Potter agreed that if Inslee would at any time find out that the mine was doing well he would advance money to buy the stock, he getting a slice of all he bought besides his commissions. So they got up a code of communication and Inslee went home.

Staining his face so as to pass as a half breed Indian, Inslee went to the mine and applied for work. He was obliged to apply several times before being employed. When he got in behind the fence he found that he was not allowed to go out. Nor was he or any other man in the mine permitted to communicate with those outside except by letter, and all letters were inspected before being sent.

Inslee felt assured that the management were expecting something remarkable. Then one day it was evident that something remarkable had occurred. Smithson went by, talking excitedly to a man Inslee knew to be a capitalist, and Inslee heard Smithson say, "Six hundred dollars to the ton!"

Inslee [illegible] her [illegible] Potter direct. He could [illegible] though only about family affairs, [illegible] had told her before leaving [illegible] his letters. The day he heard Smithson's remark he wrote her, inclosing some wages he had received. Mrs. Inslee heated the paper and brown letters came out on it.

"Wire Potter to buy all he can get. Six hundred to the ton."

Mrs. Inslee at once sent the message. Potter found that already small orders to buy the stock were being executed, and the price had gone up from 6 to 7 cents. He had learned who held the shares and went round buying it at private sale. In this way he kept the price down till he had bought all Inslee's original stock and so much of Smithson's as was on the market.

Smithson's brokers were now endeavoring to secure the stock at an advanced price through the exchanges, but found none for sale.

One morning Inslee walked into Potter's office and told him that a magnificent strike had been made at the mine. Potter at once began to bid in open market for the stock. He secured none, but effected his purpose, which was to give a better value to the shares as quoted.

Then Inslee, undisguised, went to the mine, called for Smithson and demanded an accounting. Smithson told him that he had paid him for his interest and ordered him off the premises. Inslee advised him to be ready to turn the property over to a new management one month from that day on which was to be held the annual election of directors.

When that day came around Inslee, who held his own original half of the stock and one-third of Smithson's, appeared at the meeting of stockholders—he and Smithson held it all—and voted in a new board with himself as president.

"And now, Mr. Smithson," he said, "I'll trouble you to vacate these premises."

There was nothing for Smithson to do but to turn the mine over to its discoverers, under the law governing corporations. Smithson, who was ambitious to have both his own and Inslee's share, found himself obliged to be content with the lesser part. This he eventually sold to Inslee at private sale.

The mine proved far more valuable than had been supposed even when the strike was made, and through it Inslee became enormously rich, while Smithson subsequently lost what he had made.

"Beautiful as a Dachshund."

It is in the drawing rooms of the German diplomats and their friends that you meet occasionally the long haired, aesthetic masculine beings whom you have perhaps noticed skating in the Tiergarten, with their long coats flapping in the breeze, or hunched over a journal at Bauer's—artists and writers whose names every one knows, and there are dozens of young army officers, their cheeks scarred with the wounds of many duels. They talk Wagner and Schopenhauer with serious apprehension, and in the midst of the waltz as they are spinning fraulein giddily around and around like an animated top you may overhear them whispering in her ear, "You are as beautiful as a dachshund."

It is their supreme compliment.—De-[illegible]

GRANTS STAY OF TEN DAYS

Federal Judge Declines to Quash Indictments.

PACKERS MUST STAND TRIAL

Efforts of Indicted Men to Escape Criminal Prosecution on Ground That Government Will Proceed by Injunction Fails—Judge Carpenter Allows Time to Enter Further Motions.

Chicago, Jan. 10.—The efforts of the indicted Chicago meat packers to have criminal prosecution against them nullified on the ground that the government has elected to proceed by injunction and the only course open is to cite them for contempt of court, came to nothing when Judge George A. Carpenter of the United States district court, denied the motion of the packers and ordered a stay of ten days in which to enter further motions before pleading to the indictments.

Unless other preliminary motions are interposed within the next ten days the effect of Judge Carpenter's ruling will be the immediate arraignment of the packers, who are under criminal indictment for alleged violation of section 2 of the Sherman antitrust act, which makes every conspiracy or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the states or foreign nations a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

As soon as it became known in Washington that the federal court had shattered the "immunity" plea of the packers orders were sent to the government lawyers to meet there as soon as possible for a conference.

History of the Case.

The government filed a bill in equity in the United States district court for the Northern district of Illinois in 1902 against twenty-six meat packers, charging a combination to restrain competition in violation of the Sherman act. The case came first before K. M. Landis, who, having been attorney for several of the packers before taking his seat on the federal bench, was disqualified, and the case was heard by Judge Peter Grosscup.

The injunction was granted and made permanent and on appeal to the United States supreme court affirmed. [illegible] years later the National Packing company, a holding concern, was organized to take over the stock of numerous independent packing companies and issue its own stock in return. Injunction proceedings were brought against the National Packing company and were pending at the time the indictments were filed against the individual packers. These injunction proceedings have since been withdrawn.

Last July the federal grand jury returned true bills against Louis F. Swift, Edward F. Swift, Charles H. Swift, Frank A. Fowler and Edward Tilden, of Swift & Co.; J. Ogden Armour, Arthur Meeker and Thomas J. Connors, of the Armour Packing company, and Edward Morris and Louis H. Heyman, of Morris & Co. The indictments alleged violations of the Sherman act subsequent to the Grosscup injunction and were in line with the government's policy to attack wrongdoers individually as well as corporately.

Packers Not Yet Arraigned.

Various dilatory motions have been entered since the indictments issued and the packers have not yet been arraigned. The last and most bitterly fought contention was that the government, having obtained an injunction, any subsequent violations of the Sherman act were in contempt of court.

The packers attempted to have the indictments quashed on this ground, thus making the injunction a bar to any subsequent criminal proceedings and themselves immune from punishment other than the court may inflict of its own initiative by way of fine against the corporations enjoined.

Judge Carpenter held that the government, by proceeding in equity to enjoin a continuing violation of the Sherman act, does not thereby confine itself to that procedure but may prosecute criminally for distinctive violations, subsequent to the injunction.

THE SCRATCHED BULLET

By RUTH GRAHAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A man sitting in his office heard an explosion. He was counting a pile of bills at the time, but as soon as he had finished and thrust them in his safe he went in next door and found the occupant, Daniel Jones, sitting in his chair with his head down on his desk, dead.

My office was in the same building and hearing of the murder I went into Jones' office. A surgeon was extracting the bullet from the wound, and as soon as he had done so it was seized upon by a detective who stood waiting for it. The detective rolled it up in his handkerchief and was going away with it when I said to him:

"I believe you detectives are humbugs, making a great ado about small things to keep up an appearance of efficiency. I'll bet you a hundred dollars to ten that the bullet you have taken never leads to the discovery of the murderer."

"Since you offer large odds I'll take your bet. I think in about one case in ten the bullet with which a man is murdered will lead to the discovery of the person who shot him."

"Very well," I replied; "if it is so in this case come to my office, tell me the story, and I'll give you a hundred dollars."

We exchanged names and addresses and I thought no more about the matter till I saw it stated in a newspaper that a man had been tried for the murder of Daniel Jones. The jury had not been ten minutes in coming to a verdict of justifiable homicide. The very next morning the detective with whom I had made the bet came into my office and claimed a hundred dollars. I invited him to be seated and tell me the story.

"I examined the bullet with a microscope," he said, "and discovered a tiny scratch on one side, and, looking further, found another scratch twice the breadth of the first about one-third the distance around the circumference. If I could find a pistol with two specks in the barrel at such distance from each other to make those two scratches on a bullet fired from it I would have the weapon with which Mr. Jones was killed.

"The next move was of course to learn of a person or persons who would have a motive for the murder. The family of the murdered man were very loath to point a finger of suspicion at any one, and I had a hard time to get anything out of them. Jones had a debtor, Evans, whom the family admitted to have pressed so strongly for payment that the two had quarreled bitterly about the matter. Then there was a discharged coachman who at the time of his discharge went away muttering curses. These were the only suggestions I could get from the family, and I went to work on both of them at once.

"I effected an entrance to the house of Jones' debtor and found a pistol in his drawer, but of a different caliber from the one with which he (Jones) had been killed. Besides, from other indications I made up my mind that he had nothing to do with the murder. I also found the coachman who had been discharged, but no pistol in his possession.

"I sat down one day, lit a cigar, put my feet up on a desk and did a job of thinking. I can think out any soluble problem with a cigar in my mouth and my feet in the air. The murderer, after shooting Jones, would naturally be worried about the pistol with which he committed the deed, since it might be used as evidence against him. Even the fitting of the ball in it, considered with other incriminating circumstances, might convict him. He would endeavor to get rid of it. How? He would either try to lose it, give it away, sell it or pawn it. I rely greatly on criminals' anxiety to get rid of incriminating articles. There was a chance in this case that the pistol would find its way into either a second hand store or a pawnshop. I concluded to go through all there were of both in the town.

"In a pawnshop I found a new revolver, only one barrel of which had been used, that had been pawned a day or two after the Jones murder. I focused the sun's rays in the barrel with a glass and thought I saw some scratches, but could not be sure. I bought the pistol, loaded the barrel that had been used and fired the ball into a tank full of water. Recovering the bullet I found on it the scratches I was looking for."

The detective paused, and I, taking up my checkbook, wrote him a check for a hundred dollars. Handing it to him I remarked that the rest of his job was doubtless dead easy, but I would like to hear how it was managed.

"I was not long," he continued, folding the check and putting it in his pocketbook, "in finding the person who had pawned the revolver. He was a tramp and said he had been walking on a road toward the city and met a man in an auto driving furiously. The tramp turned to look at the registered number and made a mental note of it. Just then he saw the man in the auto throw something away. He went after it and found a revolver.

"Taking it into the city he pawned it. The man who threw it away was identified by his auto number.

"Jones had broken up his domestic happiness by alienating his wife's affections."

RENEWS HIS FIGHT ON HOUSE RULES

Norris of Nebraska Proposes Further Amendments.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Another demonstration over the house rules is assured as a result of the introduction of two resolutions by Representative Norris, the Nebraska progressive, who led the fight against the Cannon organization a year ago.

One of the resolutions provides that the proceedings of all house committees shall be made a matter of public record. It prohibits house committees from meeting behind closed doors under any circumstances. This proposal is regarded as revolutionary by the regulars.

The other resolution proposes an amendment to the new rule under which a committee may be discharged from further consideration of a given bill.

HAD DEPOSITS OF NINE MILLIONS

Carnegie Trust Company of New York Suspends.

NO BAD RESULTS FOLLOW

Institution Was Closed by State Bank Examiner Who Says It Is In an Unsound Condition.

New York, Jan. 8.—The Carnegie Trust company, one of the largest banking institutions in the city, with deposits of nearly $9,000,000, closed its doors by order of State Superintendent of Banks Cheney. The suspension hardly caused a ripple in the financial district, where the trust company was often reported in a shaky condition.

Superintendent Cheney, in an official statement, said an examination of the trust company had caused him to "conclude that it is in an unsound condition to transact business and that it is not safe for it to continue."

State banking officers are now probing the company's books. Officials of the trust company have made no statement and the extent of liabilities is unknown. Bankers, however, say depositors will be paid in full.

The institution was organized in 1907 and after the retirement of Leslie M. Shaw from the office of secretary of the treasury he become its president. The name of Carnegie as applied to the institution attracted to it a great deal of attention, but the adoption of this name was without Mr. Carnegie's authority or approval. It is understood he was not a stockholder and not immediately identified with it. Mr. Shaw's connection with the bank ceased after a few months because of differences with the other officers of the institution.

In Trouble a Year Ago.

It is understood that a year ago the institution was in more or less trouble, growing out of the fact that one of its chief officers, in connection with a well known banker of Wall street, had effected a very large loan from it to enable him to buy out and consolidate with it another institution, but this falling through left the Carnegie institution with a large amount of funds locked up.

News of the suspension spread rapidly and hundreds of depositors had assembled about the doors even before the usual hour of opening.

"The superintendent of banks has taken possession of the property and business of the Carnegie Trust company, located at 115 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan.

"Examination of the affairs of the company has caused the superintendent to conclude that it is in an unsound condition to transact business and that it is not safe for it to continue. The examination is not yet complete and no further statement can be made at the present time."

"SUNKIST" BY DAY—MADE SWEETER BY NIGHT

(Special Correspondent)

These are ideal days and nights for rounding out the ripening season of the delicious "Sunkist" California oranges. Few persons, doubtless, among those living remote from the lands "where the orange blossoms grow" are aware of the anxiety of the orchard owners regarding the "weather probabilities" every season. Fortunately the California orange growers can generally rely on a happy combination of warm sunshiny days and cool nights, both of which are important for the production of the most perfect fruit, and the present season's record for these favorable conditions has been exceptionally good. It might naturally be supposed that cool nights would hardly have a beneficial effect on this product of the tropics, and that a continuous warm temperature, day and night, would be better. Both conditions, however, are necessary—bright warm days and cool nights. The warm sunshine is what gives flavor to the orange, while the cool night air is a necessary agent in imparting sweetness.

The Lion's Share

By SADIE OLCOTT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The world is full of cases of people overreaching themselves by trying to overreach some one else. Unhappily few of these cases come out to the advantage of the person overreached.

Peter Inslee, a prospector, discovered a rich vein of ore in Colorado and sold a half interest to Enoch Smithson, who organized a company for its development. Inslee's share was all in the stock of the company, he owning a few shares less than Smithson, thus giving the purchaser full control in the premises. Inslee did not get any dividends on his stock, and being very poor, with a wife and a couple of kids to support, he was obliged to sell a few shares occasionally to keep the wolf from the door.

Meanwhile the price of the stock on the exchange was gradually settling. When the company was organized a few shares were sold at 50 per cent of their par value. As Inslee kept putting it out he got less and less for it till he was obliged to part with considerable shares at a time to supply his necessities. After awhile he sold the last of it for 6 cents on the dollar.

About this time, going by the mine, he saw that a high fence had been put around it. He strolled up to the gate and was refused admittance. For the first time it occurred to him that Smithson had pretended that the mine was not paying in order to depress the stock.

Inslee went to Potter, a broker in Colorado Springs, and asked him to find out what floating stock of the company there was on the market. Potter investigated subrosa and discovered that there was all of Inslee's original stock and a part of Smithson's, which the latter had given in payment for mining machinery and other necessities. Inslee told the broker about the fence recently put around the property, saying also that he suspected there was a "nigger" behind it. Potter agreed that if Inslee would at any time find out that the mine was doing well he would advance money to buy the stock, he getting a slice of all he bought besides his commissions. So they got up a code of communication and Inslee went home.

Staining his face so as to pass as a half breed Indian, Inslee went to the mine and applied for work. He was obliged to apply several times before being employed. When he got in behind the fence he found that he was not allowed to go out. Nor was he or any other man in the mine permitted to communicate with those outside except by letter, and all letters were inspected before being sent.

Inslee felt assured that the management were expecting something remarkable. Then one day it was evident that something remarkable had occurred. Smithson went by, talking excitedly to a man Inslee knew to be a capitalist, and Inslee heard Smithson say, "Six hundred dollars to the ton!"

Inslee dared not communicate with Potter direct. He could write his wife, though only about family affairs. He had told her before leaving her to read his letters. The day he heard Smithson's remark he wrote her, inclosing some wages he had received. Mrs. Inslee heated the paper and brown letters came out on it.

Mrs. Inslee at once sent the message. Potter found that already small orders to buy the stock were being executed, and the price had gone up from 6 to 7 cents. He had learned who held the shares and went round buying it at private sale. In this way he kept the price down till he had bought all Inslee's original stock and so much of Smithson's as was on the market.

Smithson's brokers were now endeavoring to secure the stock at an advanced price through the exchanges, but found none for sale.

One morning Inslee walked into Potter's office and told him that a magnificent strike had been made at the mine. Potter at once began to bid in open market for the stock. He secured none, but effected his purpose, which was to give a better value to the shares as quoted.

Then Inslee, undisguised, went to the mine, called for Smithson and demanded an accounting. Smithson told him that he had paid him for his interest and ordered him off the premises. Inslee advised him to be ready to turn the property over to a new management one month from that day, on which was to be held the annual election of directors.

When that day came around Inslee, who held his own original half of the stock and one-third of Smithson's, appeared at the meeting of stockholders—he and Smithson held it all—and voted in a new board with himself as president.

"And now, Mr. Smithson," he said, "I'll trouble you to vacate these premises."

There was nothing for Smithson to do but to turn the mine over to its discoverers, under the law governing corporations. Smithson, who was anxious to have both his own and Inslee's share, found himself obliged to be content with the lesser part. This he eventually sold to Inslee at private sale.

The mine proved far more valuable than had been supposed even when the strike was made, and through it Inslee became enormously rich, while Smithson subsequently lost what he had made.

"Beautiful as a Dachshund."

It is in the drawing rooms of the German diplomats and their friends that you meet occasionally the long haired, aesthetic masculine beings whom you have perhaps noticed skating in the Tiergarten, with their long coats flapping in the breeze, or hunched over a journal at Bauer's—artists and writers whose names every one knows, and there are dozens of young army officers, their cheeks scarred with the wounds of many duels. They talk Wagner and Schopenhauer with serious appreciation, and in the midst of the waltz as they are spinning fraulein giddily around and around like an animated top you may overhear them whispering in her ear, "You are as beautiful as a dachshund."

Federal Judge Declines to Quash Indictments.

PACKERS MUST STAND TRIAL

Efforts of Indicted Men to Escape Criminal Prosecution on Ground That Government Will Proceed by Injunction Fails—Judge Carpenter Allows Time to Enter Further Motions.

Chicago, Jan. 10.—The efforts of the indicted Chicago meat packers to have criminal prosecution against them nullified on the ground that the government has elected to proceed by injunction and the only course open is to cite them for contempt of court, came to nothing when Judge George A. Carpenter of the United States district court, denied the motion of the packers and ordered a stay of ten days in which to enter further motions before pleading to the indictments.

Unless other preliminary motions are interposed within the next ten days the effect of Judge Carpenter's ruling will be the immediate arraignment of the packers, who are under criminal indictment for alleged violation of section 2 of the Sherman anti-trust act, which makes every conspiracy or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the states or foreign nations a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

As soon as it became known in Washington that the federal court had shattered the "immunity" plea of the packers orders were sent to the government lawyers to meet there as soon as possible for a conference.

History of the Case.

The government filed a bill in equity in the United States district court for the Northern district of Illinois in 1902 against twenty-six meat packers, charging a combination to restrain competition in violation of the Sherman act. The case came first before K. M. Landis, who, having been attorney for several of the packers before taking his seat on the federal bench, was disqualified, and the case was heard by Judge Peter Grosscup.

The injunction was granted and made permanent and on appeal to the United States supreme court affirmed. Two years later the National Packing company, a holding concern, was organized to take over the stock of numerous independent packing companies and issue its own stock in return. Injunction proceedings were brought against the National Packing company and were pending at the time the indictments were filed against the individual packers. These injunction proceedings have since been withdrawn.

Last July the federal grand jury returned true bills against Louis F. Swift, Edward F. Swift, Charles H. Swift, Frank A. Fowler and Edward Tilden, of Swift & Co.; J. Ogden Armour, Arthur Meeker and Thomas J. Connors, of the Armour Packing company, and Edward Morris and Louis H. Heyman, of Morris & Co. The indictments alleged violations of the Sherman act subsequent to the Grosscup injunction and were in line with the government's policy to attack wronkdoers individually as well as corporately.

Packers Not Yet Arraigned.

Various dilatory motions have been entered since the indictments issued and the packers have not yet been arraigned. The last and most bitterly fought contention was that the government, having obtained an injunction, any subsequent violations of the Sherman act were in contempt of court.

The packers attempted to have the indictments quashed on this ground, thus making the injunction a bar to any subsequent criminal proceedings and themselves immune from punishment other than the court may inflict of its own initiative by way of fine against the corporations enjoined.

Judge Carpenter held that the government, by proceeding in equity to enjoin a continuing violation of the Sherman act, does not thereby confine itself to that procedure but may prosecute criminally for distinctive violations, subsequent to the injunction.

THE SCRATCHED BULLET

By RUTH GRAHAM

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A man sitting in his office heard an explosion. He was counting a pile of bills at the time, but as soon as he had finished and thrust them in his safe he went in next door and found the occupant, Daniel Jones, sitting in his chair with his head down on his desk, dead.

My office was in the same building and hearing of the murder I went into Jones' office. A surgeon was extracting the bullet from the wound, and as soon as he had done so it was seized upon by a detective who stood waiting for it. The detective rolled it up in his handkerchief and was going away with it when I said to him:

"I believe you detectives are humbugs, making a great ado about small things to keep up an appearance of efficiency. I'll bet you a hundred dollars to ten that the bullet you have taken never leads to the discovery of the murderer."

"Since you offer large odds I'll take your bet. I think in about one case in ten the bullet with which a man is murdered will lead to the discovery of the person who shot him."

"Very well," I replied, "if it is so in this case come to my office, tell me the story, and I'll give you a hundred dollars."

We exchanged names and addresses and I thought no more about the matter till I saw it stated in a newspaper that a man had been tried for the murder of Daniel Jones. The jury had not been ten minutes in coming to a verdict of justifiable homicide. The very next morning the detective with whom I had made the bet came into my office and claimed a hundred dollars. I invited him to be seated and tell me the story.

"I examined the bullet with a microscope," he said, "and discovered a tiny scratch on one side, and, looking further, found another scratch twice the breadth of the first about one-third the distance around the circumference. If I could find a pistol with two specks in the barrel at such distance from each other to make those two scratches on a bullet fired from it I would have the weapon with which Mr. Jones was killed.

"The next move was of course to learn of a person or persons who would have a motive for the murder. The family of the murdered man were very loath to point a finger of suspicion at any one, and I had a hard time to get anything out of them. Jones had a debtor, Evans, whom the family admitted to have pressed so strongly for payment that the two had quarreled bitterly about the matter. Then there was a discharged coachman who at the time of his discharge went away muttering curses. These were the only suggestions I could get from the family, and I went to work on both of them at once.

"I effected an entrance to the house of Jones' debtor and found a pistol in his drawer, but of a different caliber from the one with which he (Jones) had been killed. Besides, from other indications I made up my mind that he had nothing to do with the murder. I also found the coachman who had been discharged, but no pistol in his possession.

"I sat down one day, lit a cigar, put my feet up on a desk and did a job of thinking. I can think out any soluble problem with a cigar in my mouth and my feet in the air. The murderer, after shooting Jones, would naturally be worried about the pistol with which he committed the deed, since it might be used as evidence against him. Even the fitting of the ball in it, considered with other incriminating circumstances, might convict him. He would endeavor to get rid of it. How? He would either try to lose it, give it away, sell it or pawn it. I rely greatly on criminals' anxiety to get rid of incriminating articles. There was a chance in this case that the pistol would find its way into either a second hand store or a pawnshop. I concluded to go through all there were of both in the town.

"In a pawnshop I found a new revolver, only one barrel of which had been used, that had been pawned a day or two after the Jones murder. I focused the sun's rays in the barrel with a glass and thought I saw some scratches, but could not be sure. I bought the pistol, loaded the barrel that had been used and fired the ball into a tank full of water. Recovering the bullet I found on it the scratches I was looking for."

The detective paused, and I, taking up my checkbook, wrote him a check for a hundred dollars. Handing it to him I remarked that the rest of his job was doubtless dead easy, but I would like to hear how it was managed.

"I was not long," he continued, folding the check and putting it in his pocketbook, "in finding the person who had pawned the revolver. He was a tramp and said he had been walking on a road toward the city and met a man in an auto driving furiously. The tramp turned to look at the registered number and made a mental note of it. Just then he saw the man in the auto throw something away. He went after it and found a revolver.

"Taking it into the city he pawned it. The man who threw it away was identified by his auto number.

"Jones had broken up his domestic happiness by alienating his wife's affections."

Moral Courage.

As to moral courage, I have very rarely met with the 2 o'clock in the morning courage. I mean unprepared courage, that which is necessary on an unexpected occasion, and which, in spite of the most unforeseen events, leaves full freedom of judgment and decision.—Napoleon.

Augusta, Me., Jan. 5.—Charles F. Johnson of Waterville was nominated for the United States senate to succeed Senator Eugene Hale at the Democratic caucus. The nomination was made on the first ballot, which resulted as follows: Johnson 53, Obadiah Gardner 21, William M. Pennell 17.

RENEWS HIS FIGHT ON HOUSE RULES

Norris of Nebraska Proposes Further Amendments.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Another demonstration over the house rules is assured as a result of the introduction of two resolutions by Representative Norris, the Nebraska progressive, who led the fight against the Cannon organization a year ago.

One of the resolutions provides that the proceedings of all house committees shall be made a matter of public record. It prohibits house committees from meeting behind closed doors under any circumstances. This proposal is regarded as revolutionary by the regulars.

The other resolution proposes an amendment to the new rule under which a committee may be discharged from further consideration of a given bill.

Smith Will Accept Judgeship.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Representative Walter I. Smith of Iowa, whose name has been mentioned in connection with the vacancy in the Eighth judicial circuit, admitted he had been advised the president was considering his name in connection with the judgeship. Mr. Smith, if tendered the nomination, will accept it.

HAD DEPOSITS OF NINE MILLIONS

Carnegie Trust Company of New York Suspends.

NO BAD RESULTS FOLLOW

Institution Was Closed by State Bank Examiner Who Says It Is In an Unsound Condition.

New York, Jan. 8.—The Carnegie Trust company, one of the largest banking institutions in the city, with deposits of nearly $9,000,000, closed its doors by order of State Superintendent of Banks Cheney. The suspension hardly caused a ripple in the financial district, where the trust company was often reported in a shaky condition.

Superintendent Cheney, in an official statement, said an examination of the trust company had caused him to "conclude that it is in an unsound condition to transact business and that it is not safe for it to continue."

State banking officers are now probing the company's books. Officials of the trust company have made no statement and the extent of liabilities is unknown. Bankers, however, say depositors will be paid in full.

The institution was organized in 1907 and after the retirement of Leslie M. Shaw from the office of secretary of the treasury he become its president. The name of Carnegie as applied to the institution attracted to it a great deal of attention, but the adoption of this name was without Mr. Carnegie's authority or approval. It is understood he was not a stockholder and not immediately identified with it. Mr. Shaw's connection with the bank ceased after a few months because of differences with the other officers of the institution.

It is understood that a year ago the institution was in more or less trouble, growing out of the fact that one of its chief officers, in connection with a well known banker of Wall street, had effected a very large loan from it to enable him to buy out and consolidate with it another institution, but this falling through left the Carnegie institution with a large amount of funds locked up.

News of the suspension spread rapidly and hundreds of depositors had assembled about the doors even before the usual hour of opening.

"The superintendent of banks has taken possession of the property and business of the Carnegie Trust company, located at 115 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan.

"Examination of the affairs of the company has caused the superintendent to conclude that it is in an unsound condition to transact business and that it is not safe for it to continue. The examination is not yet complete and no further statement can be made at the present time."

"SUNKIST" BY DAY—MADE SWEETER BY NIGHT

(Special Correspondent)

These are ideal days and nights for rounding out the ripening season of the delicious "Sunkist" California oranges. Few persons, doubtless, among those living remote from the lands "where the orange blossoms grow" are aware of the anxiety of the orchard owners regarding the "weather probabilities" every season. Fortunately the California orange growers can generally rely on a happy combination of warm sunshiny days and cool nights, both of which are important for the production of the most perfect fruit, and the present season's record for these favorable conditions has been exceptionally good. It might, naturally be supposed that cool nights would hardly have a beneficial effect on this product of the tropics, and that a continuous warm temperature, day and night, would be better. Both conditions, however, are necessary—warm days and cool nights. The warm sunshine is what gives flavor to the fruit, while the cool night air is a necessary agent in imparting [illegible]

A Gruesome Bequest.

What is probably the strangest and at the same time the most horrible bequest ever made is to be found in the will of Lieutenant de Pap, formerly an officer in a smart regiment of Austrian hussars, who was executed by strangling some years ago for the murder of his brother.

The Milk in the Cocoanut.

Probably everybody has wondered at times wh[illegible] kind of stuff the "milk" of the co[illegible] is. One inducement generally [illegible] out by the dealer to the prospective purchaser is that the nuts are "all milk." Recent analyses, however, have [illegible] the delusion that the fluid has anything in common with real milk. It contains only 4 per cent of solids, consisting [illegible] of sugars, 2.8 per cent, the rest being made up of mineral mat[illegible] tartaric acid. More than [illegible] sugar present is mannitol, [illegible] of manna, which is sometimes found also in wine as a product of normal grape sugar. The question has been discussed as to whether it would be profitable to extract the cocoanut water for the sake of its cane sugar, but as this amounts to only one-tenth per cent the process would not be commercially successful in spite of the water being a waste product. Even if the water contained 5 per cent of sugar, as some specimens appear to have shown, the recovery of this amount would be unprofitable. The juice of the sugar cane yields nearly 20 per cent of sugar.—New York World.

A Fine Talker.

"I like the looks of this parrot," said the lady who had stepped into the bird store. "Is he a good talker?" The proprietor replied that the bird was an excellent talker, and it was evident the customer was favorably impressed.

"What is your price for him?" she asked.

"The man had noticed the rich apparel worn by his customer, and he judged that there was a chance to make a little "easy money" at the expense of one who would never miss it.

"Ten dollars," he said, with just the slightest possible hesitation.

"Five dollars, madam," instantly croaked the parrot.

"He certainly is a fine talker," she said, "and he also seems to have good sense. I am willing to take him at his own valuation. Do I get him for that?"

The Early Drum.

Drums are probably an eastern idea introduced by the crusaders into Europe. They are frequently mentioned in accounts of the first crusade. When Edward III. of England and his queen made triumphal entry into Calais in 1347 "tambours" were among the instruments which were played in their honor. Another of these was called a "nacaire" or kettledrum, taken, together with its name, from the Arabs. The poet Chaucer also mentioned this instrument in his description of the tournament in "The Knight's Tale." The king generally kept a troop of these bandsmen or minstrels in his employ, and we read that Edward II. on one occasion gave a sum of 60 shillings to Roger, the trumpeter; Janino, the nakerer, and others for their performances. Another minstrel was called the "cheveretter," or player on the bagpipe.

The Plague and the Tan Pits.

Bermondsey's association with the tanning industry was originally due partly to its fine oak woods and partly to the fact that the London slaughterhouses were to a large extent situated in Southwark, on the unfashionable side of the river. For a brief period, however, it enjoyed a certain fame as a health resort. That was, as Sir Henry Trueman Wood reminds us in "Industrial England In the Eighteenth Century," when "terror stricken creatures fled from the ravages of the great plague in the city of London to the Bermondsey tan pits to find strong medicinal virtues in the nauseous smell."

Two Thumbed Gloves.

In so cold a climate as that of Iceland the glove must be put off or on as rapidly and easily as possible, so it is made without fingers, and in order that no time may be wasted in distinguishing between right and left all gloves have two thumbs. You simply thrust your hand into the first glove that comes and your thumb immediately finds its way. There are, of course, drawbacks in the matter of appearance, for the dangling idle thumb looks untidy.—London Chronicle.

The Apocalypse.

There is no other book in the New Testament about which so much has been written and to so little purpose.

Dr. South said of it, "It either finds a man mad or makes him so." It is said of Calvin that he showed his wisdom in not writing a commentary on this, as he did on other books.—Chadwick.

Books.

Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep, for your habits and character will be as much influenced by the former as the latter. —Paxton Hood.

He is no whole man until he knows how to earn a blameless livelihood.—Emerson.

It Was Real.

"My, this must have been exciting!" says Mrs. Bilmers, who is reading the paper. "A twenty foot boa constrictor escaped from the zoo yesterday and was captured after it had climbed halfway up a telegraph pole."

"And I swore off when I saw it as I went downtown!" growled Mr. Bilmers disgustedly.

"What are you muttering?" she asked.

"Nothing. I just said it must have been a ticklish job."—Chicago Post.

Raw Musk.

Musk in the raw looks a good deal like axle grease and smells worse. The popular notion that the musk of commerce is obtained from the muskrat is a mistake. There is obtained a somewhat similar perfume from the muskrat, but most of the supply comes from the musk deer, a creature that is carefully reared in India for the sake of the secretion. The secretion is shipped in the crude state and is used not only in the manufacture of the liquid perfume sold as musk, but also in very small quantities to give strength and staying power to many perfumes made from the essential oils of flowers. Curiously enough, the blossoms of two native plants have a noticeably musky odor. One is the small yellow blossom of a creeping vine known as the musk plant. Its odor is marked and is counterfeited in the commercial perfume called musk. The other is the bloodroot. The pure white blossom of that early spring plant has a distinct though delicate musky odor. A bean known as the musk bean is a cheap substitute for animal musk.

Fine Language.

In the school year of 1866-7, in the town of Topsfield, Mass., there was at least one committeeman whose command of language was unusual. This is shown by the annual report of the school committee for that season, part of which is copied here:

"The primary center school was instructed by Miss ——. Under the guidance of this master hand in genuine philosophic simplicity the school presented the same phase of unvarying successful advancement as in former years, from the dissonant mouthings of half fledged juvenile articulation, through the winding passages of syllabicism to the Mount Hope of spell-reading, the same grateful interspersion of gymnastic, vocal, recessive and studious exaction rendering every exercise equally a pastime and romancing the reality of the first efforts in dry study."—Youth's Companion.

An Ancient Die.

In the museum at Athens is shown what is probably the only genuine antique die used for coinage that is now extant. It was found in Egypt in 1904 and consists of bronze, engraved with the owl that was stamped on Athenian tetradrachma pieces, which contained about as much silver as three quarter dollars. The die is of scientific interest on account of the evidence it gives of the skill of the ancients three or four hundred years before Christ in metallurgy. It contains about 22½ per cent of tin and nearly 70 per cent of copper. It is extremely hard, but at the same time possesses a certain malleability, due to the great purity of the copper and tin, which were carefully freed from all traces of lead and zinc to preserve the hardness and from arsenic and antimony to avoid brittleness.—Harper's Weekly.

Making a Locomotive.

A young lady once visited the Baldwin Locomotice works and then told how a locomotive is made.

"You pour," she said, "a lot of sand into a lot of boxes, and you throw old stove lids and things into a furnace, and then you empty the molten stream into a hole in the sand, and everybody yells and swears. Then you pour it out and let it cool and pound it, and then you put it in a thing that bores holes in it. Then you screw it together and paint it and put steam in it, and it goes splendidly, and they take it to a drafting room and make a blue print of it. But one thing I forgot—they have to make a boiler. One man gets inside and one outside, and they pound frightfully, and then they tie it to the other things, and you ought to see it go!"

Napoleon's Peepholes.

A curious Napoleonic relic still preserved in St. Helena is a pair of shutters, each with a peephole. St. Helena was strongly garrisoned in Napoleon's time for divers reasons, and the British soldiers exercised on Deadwood plain, close to Longwood.

Napoleon liked to look at them, but did not like them to look at him: hence those two shutters, one with a hole on a level with his eye while standing and the other with a hole adapted to his vision while seated.

Hard to Deny.

As Miss Hypatia Squaretoes reached the culminating point of her lecture on "Woman's Rights and How to Wield Them" she threw back her head and stood in an attitude of defiance.

"Talk of man!" she cried. "What has man ever done for woman?"

"He's furnished the model she's trying her best to imitate!" boomed a manly voice from the rear of the hall. And then a palpitating silence reigned for nearly a minute.

Found a Rhyme.

A bold poet once tried to overcome the difficulty of finding a rhyme for carpet by the following: "Sweet maid of the inn, 'tis surely no sin to toast such a beautiful bar pet; believe me, my dear, your feet would appear at home on a nobleman's carpet!"—London Mail.

SENATOR ELKINS PASSES AWAY

West Virginian Dies Suddenly in Washington.

BLOOD POISONING THE CAUSE

Deceased Had Been a Prominent Member of the Upper Branch of Congress for Many Years.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia died here. At his bedside were his wife, his daughter Katherine and four sons, David, Richard, Stephen and Blaine, and the physicians. Death was due to septicaemia, or blood poisoning. He was conscious until within a half hour of death.

Senator Elkins became ill in the early summer at his home at Elkins, W. Va. He was kept in strict confinement there and only the members of his immediate family were allowed to see him. On Nov. 9, when he was removed to Washington in a private car, physicians declared he might be able to take his seat in the senate at the opening of congress.

During a large part of the time of his service in the senate Mr. Elkins was chairman of the important committee on interstate commerce. As the head of this great committee he had charge of the Hepburn rate regulation bill of 1907 and of the administration bill of 1910. A railroad builder and owner himself Mr. Elkins had intimate knowledge of the questions affected by this legislation.

He was the champion of the bill of 1910, and as such fought for its passage for many months. Probably the longest speech ever delivered by the West Virginia senator was made in its support. The bill had been sharply assailed by Democratic and progressive Republican senators, who charged that no one dared raise a voice in its defense. Mr. Elkins was the first to respond to this challenge.

Mr. Elkins was born in Ohio in 1841.

FUNERAL OF SENATOL ELKINS.

Elkins, W. Va., Jan. 8.—Senator Stephen B. Elkins is sleeping his last sleep in the graveyard of this litle mountain town. He was laid to rest within a brief time after the funeral train from Washington had crept into the station, bearing the bereaved family and relatives and the mourning friends, both in official life and out.

Another special train arrived from Charleston, the state capital, practically at the same time. It brought Governor Glasscock, his cabinet and justices of the supreme court and a score or more of state officials.

The town to which the late senator had given his name was crowded with mourners who had thronged there from every direction, many who could not come by rail drove over the mountain roads through hours of darkness to pay the last tribute to the man who had done so much for the state. All business was suspended, flags fluttered at half mast and windows were close-curtained. The body was laid to rest in Maplewood cemetery, which Senator Elkins and former Senator Davis twenty years ago had planned and laid out.

REASON FOR HIGHER RATES

Railroad Cites Higher Wages and Need of Increased Facilities.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Wage advances aggregating $7,096,047 annually and the asserted necessity for increased income to meet demand for improved facilities are the principal arguments of the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg in support of increased freight rates.

The railroad brief has been filed with the interstate commerce commission by counsel for the roads in the investigation of pending rate advances in official classification territory.

Alan Meredith was an inveterate gambler. Hearing he and his mother were in Paris, I went to see them and found only the mother. Alan had gone to Nice. Monte Carlo is not far from Nice, and, understanding my friend's proclivities, I felt sure that he had gone there to indulge his cravings for play.

His mother didn't know enough about the lay of the land in the Riviera to feel worried about her son, but feared that if he stuck to the gaming tables long enough he might ruin himself and her too. I came to a sudden resolution to go down there, and if I found Alan playing I would exert my influence with him to get him away. So the next day I took a train for the principality of Monaco.

I arrived at my hotel in time only for dinner, so instead of searching for Alan at his abiding place I concluded to go where, in case he was at Monte Carlo, I would be sure to find him—the gambling pavilion. There were not many people about the tables, and the place looked lonely. It struck me that those connected with the establishment wore a look of gloom. But soon people began to arrive, the game was opened and silence gave way to the hum of the busy ones about the table.

I was watching to see if Alan would come in when a servant asked me if my name was Butler. On telling him that it was, he informed me that I was wanted at the telephone. I went there and on taking the receiver heard the well known voice of Alan Meredith.

"Is that you, Frank?"

"Yes."

"I'm glad you came down. Take a napoleon to the table, put it on the red and leave it there till you get word from me to take it off."

"I'll do no such thing. I came down knowing that you must be here, and I propose to take you to Paris with me tomorrow."

I listened for a reply, but none came. I called, but still no answer. Central had doubtless shut me off. I waited for awhile, thinking I would be rung up again, but finally got tired and went away. I was disgruntled at not having got Alan's hotel address, for there was now nothing for me to do but hunt him up.

As I passed out I cast a glance into the gambling room, and I was curious to know what would be the result if I carried out Alan's instructions. I thought that he might accuse me of preventing his winning some money if I failed to do as he had asked. It would take me but a few minutes to lose a napoleon, and when I saw him again I could then tell him that I had done his bidding.

I went into the gambling room, elbowed my way to a table and laid a napoleon on the red. I won. I left it there and it won again. I have forgotten how many times in succession I won, but there was a heap of gold on the table for me when a servant came and whispered in my ear that Mr. Meredith had telephoned I was to take the money off the red and make a different bet with the whole amount.

I don't know what it was that induced me to obey this order. I detested gambling, yet on this occasion I was worked up to a frenzy. I got several orders from Alan during the evening all by telephone, and somehow I felt that I would keep on winning. And so I did till I broke the bank.

I scooped my winnings into a light overcoat I had brought with me and, tieing my handkerchief about the gathered corners, set off for my hotel. It is a wonder how I got there without being robbed, but I did. Placing my winnings in the hotel safe, I asked the concierge to telephone to the other hotels to ask at which one of them Alan Meredith was staying.

"Meredith!" he said. "Isn't that the name of the American who committed suicide in his room this morning?"

My heart stood still.

"Did an American of that name take his life today here?" I asked, horror stricken.

"Yes, m'sieur. He lost heavily last night and this morning was found in his room with a bullet in his brain."

It was some time before I was able to go further. When I had regained something of my equanimity I went to the hotel, where I was informed the suicide had taken place and learned, true enough, that my chum, Alan Meredith, had taken his own life.

But the horror of the occurrence was intensified by the fact that I had been playing, or believed I had been playing, under the instructions of a dead man. Had I been so playing? Was not the whole matter a dream? I went back to my hotel and called on the proprietor to show me the gold I had won. He opened the safe, and there it was, a great yellow shining heap.

Two opposite emotions were uppermost in me when I later turned this amount over to Mrs. Meredith—sympathy for her at the loss of her son and satisfaction that he had returned the amounts she had given him.

POISONED FLOUR KILLS SIX

Many Others Made Ill in Telfener Village, Tex.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 8.—Six deaths have occurred and many residents of the village of Telfener, in Victoria county, are ill as a result of eating bread made from flour containing poison.

Several days ago the village grocer poured a dozen sacks of flour into a sugar barrel and one of his first customers was Joe Brown, a negro. After the morning meal the entire Brown family became ill, two of Brown's children dying the same night. Since then four other deaths have occurred in the town. The flour, which a Victoria chemist analyzed, is declared to contain [illegible].

WOULD DECLARE THE SEAT VACANT

Beveridge Submits Minority Report in Lorimer Case.

Washington, Jan. 10.—The fight to prevent Senator Lorimer of Illinois retaining his seat in the United States senate was opened with a contest between Senators Beveridge of Indiana and Owen of Oklahoma, both of whom contested the right to fire the first gun in the same cause.

Senator Beveridge, by virtue of being a member of the committee on privileges and elections, which investigated charges of bribery against Mr. Lorimer, gained a tactical victory by filing a minority report attacking the petition of his colleagues on the committee who voted to exonerate the Illinois senator.

Senator Owen, however, introduced a resolution to declare the election of Senator Lorimer to have been illegal and void, but he was not permitted to address the senate in its support.

The senate held that the resolution under the rules would have to go over for a day. Mr. Beveridge then submitted his report, the conclusion of which was:

"That this election was invalid under any possible view of the law. If the senate so concludes it is our duty so to declare. Therefore I submit the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the senate of the United States by the legislature of the state of Illinois.'"

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL IN

Representative Longworth's Measure Provides Permanent Board.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The tariff commission bill was introduced in the house. It was framed by Representative Longworth of Ohio after conferences with President Taft and with progressive Republicans.

It provides for a permanent tariff board and further powers to make it a thoroughly efficient body, particularly as to facilities for investigations.

Mr. Longworth said he purposed to press his measure, which embodies what he regards as the best features of the Lenroot, Goode and other bills, and hoped to obtain a favorable report from the ways and means committee promptly.

SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE

Senate Judiciary Committee Agrees on Resolution.

Washington, Jan. 10.—At a meeting of the senate committee on the judiciary, a decision was reached to report favorably the subcommittee resolution authorizing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for the election of United States senators by direct vote.

The debate in the committee turned upon the question as to whether the state or the federal government should supervise the elections. The subcommittee's provision directs "that the times, place and manner of holding elections shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof."

A Grewsome Bequest.

What is probably the strangest and at the same time the most horrible bequest ever made is to be found in the will of Lieutenant de Pap, formerly an officer in a smart regiment of Austrian hussars, who was executed by strangling some years ago for the murder of his brother.

Probably everybody has wondered at times what kind of stuff the "milk" of the cocoanut is. One inducement generally held out by the dealer to the prospective purchaser is that the nuts are "all milky." Recent analyses, however, have dispelled the delusion that the fluid has anything in common with real milk. It contains only 4 per cent of solids, consisting [illegible] of sugars, 2.8 per cent, the [illegible] being made up of mineral matter and tartaric acid. More than half of the sugar present is mannitol, the [illegible] principle of manna, which is sometimes found also in wine as a product of normal grape sugar. The question has been discussed as to whether it would be profitable to extract the cocoanut water for the sake of its cane sugar, but as this amounts to only one-tenth per cent the process would not be commercially successful in spite of the water being a waste product. Even if the water contained 5 per cent of sugar, as some specimens appear to have shown, the recovery of this amount would be unprofitable. The juice of the sugar cane yields nearly 20 per cent of sugar.—New York World.

A Fine Talker.

"I like the looks of this parrot," said the lady who had stepped into the bird store. "Is he a good talker?" The proprietor replied that the bird was an excellent talker, and it was evident the customer was favorably impressed.

"What is your price for him?" she asked.

"The man had noticed the rich apparel worn by his customer, and he judged that there was a chance to make a little "easy money" at the expense of one who would never miss it.

"Ten dollars," he said, with just the slightest possible hesitation.

"Five dollars, madam," instantly croaked the parrot.

"He certainly is a fine talker," she said, "and he also seems to have good sense. I am willing to take him at his own valuation. Do I get him for that?"

The Early Drum.

Drums are probably an eastern idea introduced by the crusaders into Europe. They are frequently mentioned in accounts of the first crusade. When Edward III. of England and his queen made triumphal entry into Calais in 1347 "tambours" were among the instruments which were played in their honor. Another of these was called a "nacaire" or kettledrum, taken, together with its name, from the Arabs. The poet Chaucer also mentioned this instrument in his description of the tournament in "The Knight's Tale." The king generally kept a troop of these bandsmen or minstrels in his employ, and we read that Edward II. on one occasion gave a sum of 60 shillings to Roger, the trumpeter; Janino, the nakerer, and others for their performances. Another minstrel was called the "cheveretter," or player on the bagpipe.

The Plague and the Tan Pits.

Bermondsey's association with the tanning industry was originally due partly to its fine oak woods and partly to the fact that the London slaughterhouses were to a large extent situated in Southwark, on the unfashionable side of the river. For a brief period, however, it enjoyed a certain fame as a health resort. That was, as Sir Henry Trueman Wood reminds us in "Industrial England In the Eighteenth Century," when "terror stricken creatures fled from the ravages of the great plague in the city of London to the Bermondsey tan pits to find strong medicinal virtues in the nauseous smell."

Two Thumbed Gloves.

In so cold a climate as that of Iceland the glove must be put off or on as rapidly and easily as possible, so it is made without fingers, and in order that no time may be wasted in distinguishing between right and left all gloves have two thumbs. You simply thrust your hand into the first glove that comes and your thumb immediately finds its way. There are, of course, drawbacks in the matter of appearance, for the dangling idle thumb looks untidy.—London Chronicle.

The Apocalypse.

There is no other book in the New Testament about which so much has been written and to so little purpose.

Dr. South said of it, "It either finds a man mad or makes him so." It is said of Calvin that he showed his wisdom in not writing a commentary on this, as he did on other books.—Chadwick.

Disadvantage In Last Resort.

If you must write love letters, wait until after you are married and write them to your wife. Then you may feel perfectly safe—unless she decides to sue you for divorce on the grounds of insanity.—Puck.

Wear and Tear.

Books.

Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep, for your habits and character will be as much influenced by the former as the latter.—Paxton Hood.

He is no whole man until he knows how to earn a blameless livelihood.—Emerson.

It Was Real.

"My, this must have been exciting!" says Mrs. Bilmers, who is reading the paper. "A twenty foot boa constrictor escaped from the zoo yesterday and was captured after it had climbed halfway up a telegraph pole."

"And I swore off when I saw it as I went downtown!" growled Mr. Bilmers disgustedly.

"What are you muttering?" she asked.

"Nothing. I just said it must have been a ticklish job."—Chicago Post.

Raw Musk.

Musk in the raw looks a good deal like axle grease and smells worse. The popular notion that the musk of commerce is obtained from the muskrat is a mistake. There is obtained a somewhat similar perfume from the muskrat, but most of the supply comes from the musk deer, a creature that is carefully reared in India for the sake of the secretion. The secretion is shipped in the crude state and is used not only in the manufacture of the liquid perfume, sold as musk, but also in very small quantities to give strength and staying power to many perfumes made from the essential oils of flowers. Curiously enough, the blossoms of two native plants have a noticeably musky odor. One is the small yellow blossom of a creeping vine known as the musk plant. Its odor is marked and is counterfeited in the commercial perfume called musk. The other is the bloodroot. The pure white blossom of that early spring plant has a distinct though delicate musky odor. A bean known as the musk bean is a cheap substitute for animal musk.

Fine Language.

In the school year of 1806-7, in the town of Topsfield, Mass., there was at least one committeeman whose command of language was unusual. This is shown by the annual report of the school committee for that season, part of which is copied here:

"The primary center school was instructed by Miss ——. Under the guidance of this master hand in genuine philosophic simplicity the school presented the same phase of unvarying successful advancement as in former years, from the dissonant mouthings of half fledged juvenile articulation, through the winding passages of syllabicism to the Mount Hope of spell-reading, the same grateful interspersion of gymnastic, vocal, recessive and studious function rendering every exercise equally a pastime and romancing the reality of the first efforts in dry study."—Youth's Companion.

An Ancient Die.

In the museum at Athens is shown what is probably the only genuine antique die used for coinage that is now extant. It was found in Egypt in 1904 and consists of bronze, engraved with the owl that was stamped on Athenian tetradrachma pieces, which contained about as much silver as three quarter dollars. The die is of scientific interest on account of the evidence it gives of the skill of the ancients three or four hundred years before Christ in metallurgy. It contains about 22½ per cent of tin and nearly 70 per cent of copper. It is extremely hard, but at the same time possesses a certain malleability, due to the great purity of the copper and tin, which were carefully freed from all traces of lead and zinc to preserve the hardness and from arsenic and antimony to avoid brittleness.—Harper's Weekly.

Making a Locomotive.

A young lady once visited the Baldwin Locomotive works and then told how a locomotive is made.

"You pour," she said, "a lot of sand into a lot of boxes, and you throw old stove lids and things into a furnace, and then you empty the molten stream into a hole in the sand, and everybody yells and swears. Then you pour it out and let it cool and pound it, and then you put it in a thing that bores holes in it. Then you screw it together and paint it and put steam in it, and it goes splendidly, and they take it to a drafting room and make a blue print of it. But one thing I forgot—they have to make a boiler. One man gets inside and one outside, and they pound frightfully, and then they tie it to the other things, and you ought to see it go!"

Napoleon's Peepholes.

A curious Napoleonic relic still preserved in St. Helena is a pair of shutters, each with a peephole. St. Helena was strongly garrisoned in Napoleon's time for divers reasons, and the British soldiers exercised on Deadwood plain, close to Longwood.

Napoleon liked to look at them, but did not like them to look at him; hence those two shutters, one with a hole on a level with his eye while standing and the other with a hole adapted to his vision while seated.

Hard to Deny.

As Miss Hypatia Squaretoes reached the culminating point of her lecture on "Woman's Rights and How to Wield Them" she threw back her head and stood in an attitude of defiance.

"Talk of man!" she cried. "What has man ever done for woman?"

"He's furnished the model she's trying her best to imitate!" boomed a manly voice from the rear of the hall. And then a palpitating silence reigned for nearly a minute.

Found a Rhyme.

SENATOR ELKINS PASSES AWAY

West Virginian Dies Suddenly in Washington.

BLOOD POISONING THE CAUSE

Deceased Had Been a Prominent Member of the Upper Branch of Congress for Many Years.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia died here. At his bedside were his wife, his daughter Katherine and four sons, David, Richard, Stephen and Blaine, and the physicians. Death was due to septicaemia, or blood poisoning. He was conscious until within a half hour of death.

Senator Elkins became ill in the early summer at his home at Elkins, W. Va. He was kept in strict confinement there and only the members of his immediate family were allowed to see him. On Nov. 9, when he was removed to Washington in a private car, physicians declared he might be able to take his seat in the senate at the opening of congress.

During a large part of the time of his service in the senate Mr. Elkins was chairman of the important committee on interstate commerce. As the head of this great committee he had charge of the Hepburn rate regulation bill of 1907 and of the administration bill of 1910. A railroad builder and owner himself Mr. Elkins had intimate knowledge of the questions affected by this legislation.

He was the champion of the bill of 910, and as such fought for its passage for many months. Probably the longest speech ever delivered by the West Virginia senator was made in its support. The bill had been sharply assailed by Democratic and progressive Republican senators, who charged that no one dared raise a voice in its defense. Mr. Elkins was the first to respond to this challenge.

Mr. Elkins was born in Ohio in 1841.

FUNERAL OF SENATOL ELKINS

Elkins, W. Va., Jan. 8.—Senator Stephen B. Elkins is sleeping his last sleep in the graveyard of this little mountain town. He was laid to rest within a brief time after the funeral train from Washington had crept into the station, bearing the bereaved family and relatives and the mourning friends, both in official life and out.

Another special train arrived from Charleston, the state capital, practically at the same time. It brought Governor Glasscock, his cabinet and justices of the supreme court and a score or more of state officials.

The town to which the late senator had given his name was crowded with mourners who had thronged there from every direction, many who could not come by rail drove over the mountain roads through hours of darkness to pay the last tribute to the man who had done so much for the state. All business was suspended, flags fluttered at half mast and windows were close-curtained. The body was laid to rest in Maplewood cemetery, which Senator Elkins and former Senator Davis twenty years ago had planned and laid out.

POISONED FLOUR KILLS SIX

Many Others Made Ill in Telfener Village, Tex.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 8.—Six deaths have occurred and many residents of the village of Telfener, in Victoria county, are ill as a result of eating bread made from flour containing poison.

Several days ago the village grocer poured a dozen sacks of flour into a sugar barrel and one of his first customers was Joe Brown, a negro. After the morning meal the entire Brown family became ill, two of Brown's children dying the same night. Since then four other deaths have occurred in the town. The flour, which a Victoria chemist analyzed, is declared to contain arsenic.

WOULD DECLARE THE SEAT VACANT

Beveridge Submits Minority Report in Lorimer Case.

Washington, Jan. 10.—The fight to prevent Senator Lorimer of Illinois retaining his seat in the United States senate was opened with a contest between Senators Beveridge of Indiana and Owen of Oklahoma, both of whom contested the right to fire the first gun in the same cause.

Senator Beveridge, by virtue of being a member of the committee on privileges and elections, which investigated charges of bribery against Mr. Lorimer, gained a tactical victory by filing a minority report attacking the petition of his colleagues on the committee who voted to exonerate the Illinois senator.

Senator Owen, however, introduced a resolution to declare the election of Senator Lorimer to have been illegal and void, but he was not permitted to address the senate in its support.

The senate held that the resolution under the rules would have to go over for a day. Mr. Beveridge then submitted his report, the conclusion of which was:

"That this election was invalid under any possible view of the law. If the senate so concludes it is our duty so to declare. Therefore I submit the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That William Lorimer was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the senate of the United States by the legislature of the state of Illinois.'"

TARIFF COMMISSION BILL IN

Representative Longworth's Measure Provides Permanent Board.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The tariff commission bill was introduced in the house. It was framed by Representative Longworth of Ohio after conferences with President Taft and with progressive Republicans.

It provides for a permanent tariff board and further powers to make it a thoroughly efficient body, particularly as to facilities for investigations.

Mr. Longworth said he purposed to press his measure, which embodies what he regards as the best features of the Lenroot, Goode and other bills, and hoped to obtain a favorable report from the ways and means committee promptly.

SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE

Senate Judiciary Committee Agrees on Resolution.

Washington, Jan. 10.—At a meeting of the senate committee on the judiciary, a decision was reached to report favorably the subcommittee resolution authorizing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for the election of United States senators by direct vote.

The debate in the committee turned upon the question as to whether the state or the federal government should supervise the elections. The subcommittee's provision directs "that the times, place and manner of holding elections shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof."

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

An Important Law Case

By CARL SARGENT CHASE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Driving lazily along a country road, I saw ahead of me an old man and a girl running as for dear life. Hastening my pace, I came up with them. They turned, with despair in their faces. The girl clasped her hands, assuming a posture of entreaty, and began a number of incoherent sentences.

"I beseech you not to take him back. He will really go mad if you shut him up again in that terrible place. Let us go on and say you couldn't find us."

The girl begging for the old man's liberty was so beautifully feminine that had she not also moved my sympathies I might have let her go on begging for some time longer. As it was I stopped her.

"You are losing valuable time. I am not your pursuer, and if any one is after you you'd better tell me about it in few words. If you need help I will help you."

The change on her countenance from despair to hope was even more winning than her expression of supplication. She told me that her grandfather—the man who was with her—was very rich; that his nephew in order to secure possession of his property had secured his incarceration in a lunatic asylum; that she had been admitted to see him and had surreptitiously taken him away. They were sure when they heard the wheels of my buggy that I was coming to take the old man back to the asylum.

I had no doubt from the girl's story the old man was a lunatic who had persuaded his granddaughter that he was of sound mind and was being persecuted for his estate. There was certainly nothing of the millionaire in his appearance, and he had probably imagined the story of her wrath—or, rather, it was a part of his lunacy. Nevertheless I was so attracted to the girl that I resolved to get the couple away from the asylum authorities long enough to look into the case.

An exclamation of terror from the girl attracted my attention, and, looking behind me, I saw a horse and buggy coming at a brisk trot. I took the couple into my wagon, but did not make an attempt at flight, jogging along at a quiet gait.

"Oh, heavens!" exclaimed the girl. "We will be taken. Do go faster."

"Not without my knowing just why," I replied. "I promise you to interest myself in your case and if your grandfather is improperly confined to move heaven and earth to accomplish his release."

The pursuer, an official of the lunatic asylum, soon overhauled us. He told me that the old man was a patient at the asylum and he wanted him. I invited him to continue with us into the city toward which we were going, promising to hold the patient for him in order that the asylum authorities might substantiate their legal claim to him. He could only accept the terms, and I drove on, he following.

On reaching the city I pulled up at the office of my attorney, and we all went in together. By my action I had won the confidence of not only the runaways, but the asylum official, and a compromise was effected by which the former should remain in my keeping while the lawyer investigated the case. Since I lived with my mother in a house plenty large enough for all of us this was a very satisfactory arrangement, enabling me to be constantly with the girl, whose sweetness and devotion to her grandfather won me completely.

At the end of a week my lawyer told me that he had unearthed what he believed to be one of the most nefarious plots he had ever encountered. The old man, Jonathan Gooding, possessed an immense fortune. Being without wife or children, he had taken his granddaughter Grace to live with him when she was a little girl and had made a will bequeathing her his fortune. His nephew, a man of forty-five and a lawyer, had known what legal steps to take to secure the old man's removal to the asylum and had managed the matter very adroitly, his plan being at his uncle's demise to secure distribution of his estate among his heirs, which would give the nephew the lion's share.

Fortunately I was possessed of sufficient property to advance what money was necessary to a thorough legal investigation of the case. A long suit followed, during which Mr. Gooding was committed to a private sanitarium. That his granddaughter was devoted to him on account of her affection for him became apparent from a test I made. I told her that the case could be settled and her grandfather go free if she would relinquish all claim to his estate. The lighting of her face as she replied that she would gladly do so was delightful to look upon.

I confessed that I had only been testing the disinterestedness of her affection for her grandfather and assured her that we would be able to keep him out of a madhouse without her surrendering any of her rights.

My whole being becoming absorbed in Grace Gooding, I made her cause my chief business. Notwithstanding my efforts I came very near being beaten, but by dint of perseverance and using the best legal talent I finally established not only Mr. Gooding's sanity, but his perfect fitness to make a will. I married his granddaughter, but arranged with Mr. Gooding that he should leave the bulk of his property to charity.

Sounded Bigger.

"How did you get that new clerk? He wouldn't accept an offer from me."

"Probably I offered him larger inducements."

"I told him his wages would be $10 a week."

"That's it, then. I told him his salary would be $40 a month."—Cleveland Leader.

The Santa Ysobel Mine

By ANDREW C. EWING

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Adrian Burge, a young New Yorker, not satisfied with the prospect ahead of him and craving a more independent life than could be achieved in the east, determined to go to the southwest and grow up with the country. But Burge soon found that while the country was growing he was standing still. He tried clerking for awhile; but, though he found it easier to obtain a position there than in the east, the salary was not much better than that paid at home, and he could not save any more money. He concluded that if he couldn't get a better living than in New York he could at least get a more independent one, so he turned himself into a cowboy.

His employer, recognizing his superiority over the common run of cowpunchers, made quite a pet of him till he found that Adrian was making up to his daughter Gertrude, then turned against him. Adrian was discharged. He did not complain. Indeed, he thought his discharge the best thing that could happen to him. What business had he to be in love? It was all he could do to put bread and butter into his own mouth without trying to feed others.

Adrian said goodby to Gertrude McGregor—it nearly broke both their hearts to part—and, mounting his horse, rode away to find some other rancher who would employ him. The country he was passing through was old Spanish territory, whose original occupants were Aztecs, they giving place to Spaniards or a mingling of Aztecs and Spaniards. The Spaniards had come to America thirsting for the precious metals and had opened up a great many gold and silver mines, some of which had paid largely, but all had eventually been abandoned, and the site of many of them had been lost.

Adrian had heard of one of these mines, the Santa Ysobel, the tradition said had been worked successfully till the early part of the nineteenth century, when the Indians in the neighborhood determined to drive out the whites and commenced a course of pillage and murder. The mouth of the Santa Ysobel was closed and concealed so that neither the Indians nor any one else except the owners could find it again. When the Indian troubles were over, whether those who had worked the Santa Ysobel mine were dead, whether they had failed to mark the entrance so that the subsequent owners could find it, certain it is that for three-quarters of a century it had been lost.

Adrian was riding along, dreaming of some day securing the papers describing these lost mines and making a search for some of them. He was a visionary fellow, much more attracted by will-o'-the-wisp schemes than solid drudgery. Like Johnny-Look-in-the-Air in the nursery tales, he was building castles when suddenly his horse went down into a hole. Adrian succeeding in extricating himself and by pulling hard on the bridle rein induced his horse to make an effort to clear the hole. It was successful, and Adrian was about to mount and ride on when he became interested to know what kind of a hole he had fallen into.

It looked to him as if the earth over a subsurface cavity had fallen away and thus formed the hole. But what kind of a cavity? The idea of a lost mine occurred to him. The only mine of which he had ever seen a description was the Santa Ysobel, and he remembered that this description located it under an orchard of quince trees. There were a few old trees near by, and upon examination they proved to be quince.

Adrian resolved to investigate the hole.

Riding to a ranch, he borrowed pick and shovel and, returning to the hole, dug deeper. It was not long before he found himself, sure enough, in the tunnel of a mine. At one end of the tunnel was a pile of silver ore. A number of tools lay about, and Adrian saw at once from their make that they were very old.

One day a wagon drawn by four mules drove up to the McGregor ranch and a young man well dressed and with a prosperous air alighted and went to the house. Gertrude saw him coming, and, although at first she doubted her perceptive faculties, she soon saw that the comer was Burge. She opened the door for him. They stood looking for a moment at each other, then flew into each other's arms.

That evening Adrian made a formal application for Gertrude's hand from her father. He told him how he had stumbled on, or, rather, into, the Santa Ysobel silver mine; how he had taken a capitalist into his secret, bought the property and upon investigation had found that when it was closed up the owner had just struck a rich vein of ore. Adrian's partner had furnished him with means to go east and organize the Santa Ysobel Mining company. He had returned, and the mine was now in good working order, turning out tons of silver.

There being no longer reason to separate the lovers, McGregor gave his consent, and the three celebrated the betrothal by a visit to the mine. Gertrude looked down into the hole into which her lover had sunk and shuddered. Then she said:

"Had you passed a few feet on that side"—

"You would have never been my wife," replied Adrian.

The Swedish Almanac.

The Swedish name almanac differs from English almanacs in giving, besides the usual information, a Christian name for each sex for every day of the year. The names set forth have to receive the approval of the king. The object aimed at is to secure a greater choice of names for parents and to avoid the endless repetition of a dozen or so names. A similar name almanac is issued under royal authority in one of the German states.—London Graphic.

HER JUDICIAL FRIEND

By SARAH BRYCE VAUGHAN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Well, Ruth, tell me frankly, what do you think of my lover?"

"Oh, heavens!"

"I am sorry I said it. Don't let it trouble you for an instant. You asked me for my opinion of him, not some one else's opinion. Try again; ask others. If they agree with me, drop him. If they do not, pay no attention to what I have said."

"That's just like you, Ruth. You have taken a wise course—a judicious course—I may say a judicial course. Men say that we women should never be judges or jurymen. Your action disproves this. You have given me the benefit of your impressions, but have admonished me that unless I get confirmatory evidence to pay no attention to them."

"I trust you will show yourself as worthy to receive them as you consider me worthy to give them."

"What do you mean?"

"That you are under no consideration to reveal to your lover the fact that I have even given you any opinion."

Amy Brickwell thought a moment, then said, "I suppose I shouldn't, so I won't—that is, if you won't let me."

"Certainly, I won't let you! Do you promise?"

"Yes; I promise."

"If you tell, that will end our friendship forever."

Miss Brickwell asked a number of persons what they thought of her lover, and not one confirmed the opinion of her friend. Indeed, all those she consulted told her that they had been very much pleased with his personnel, and those who knew him spoke very highly of him. This lifted a load from her shoulders. She religiously kept faith with her friend, refraining from mentioning the matter between them to her lover or any one else.

But a time came when she began to wonder if Ruth were not right, after all. The lover's calls became less and less frequent. He grew undemonstrative. There could be no doubt that he was preparing to throw off the chain that bound him to his fiancee. One evening when he showed this disposition she said to him:

"I was warned against you soon after we became engaged."

"Who warned you?"

"I have promised not to tell that."

"Was your friend man or woman?"

"Woman."

"Well, why didn't you take her advice and shake me?"

"The person who warned me was a very superior woman. After warning me she told me to get the opinion of others, and if they did not confirm hers I was to pay no attention to what she had said. You see, she had a judicial mind."

"And you asked the others?"

"I did, but it turned out she knew better than they."

"I should like to know the name of this judicial person."

"That you can't know."

"And you supposed that the people you asked for their impressions of me, knowing that you were engaged to me, would tell you the truth?"

"I asked them all to be frank."

"Stupid!"

It's not pleasant to be called a fool. Miss Brickwell pouted, but said nothing.

"I'm going to tell you something," said her fiance. "I have heard reports about you that have needed investigation. After a man is married he should scout evil reports about his wife; before marriage it is better that they should be cleared up. I'm going to make a confession as well. An old flame of mine has appeared on the scene, and I've been with her a great deal lately."

"You have?"

"Yes, I have, my reason being that I suspected she was the author of these reports about you. I concluded to renew my devotion to her for detective purposes. I have found out nothing as yet, but I hope to soon. She supposes me to be on the eve of breaking with you and renewing my engagement to her."

"The horrid thing! Who is she?"

"I am not just yet ready to tell you. I may suspect her wrongfully. If so you will never know. But this person whose judicial talent you appreciate so highly—I'm not going to ask you to break a promise, but I'm going to mention the name of a woman I suspect. You need make no reply. I caught all the information I require without one. I suspect Ruth Swain."

The young lady started.

"I am confirmed in the opinion," her lover continued, "that your judicial friend and my former fiancee, who expects soon to be re-engaged to me, are one and the same person."

The girl first turned red, then pale. Her lover clasped her in his arms.

"Sweetheart," he said, "whether or no Miss Swain has a judicial mind, you have not. It was her object to exercise her judicial faculties to send you to Coventry. But she overreached herself by trying to do too much. Had you been as dishonorable as she I would have got at the bottom of it all long ago. But I would rather have you stupid than dishonorable. Now let us dismiss it from our minds."

Indeed, there was nothing more to say.

A Lazy Man's Scheme

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Jonathan Strong was the village cooper of Ellenville—that is, when he had an order and was not too lazy he constructed a barrel or a firkin. He was fat, good natured and utterly without ambition. As in most such cases, the wife earned most of the support. Jonathan had reached his forty-fifth year and wasn't worrying at all as to how the future years were going with him when a stranger entered his shop one day and found him chewing at a shaving. The stranger introduced himself as Brown. He was the homeliest man in the village. Brown said:

"Mebbe you want a job that will pay you good money?"

It was all of two minutes before Jonathan asked if there was any hard work connected with it.

"Not a bit," was the answer. "You are simply to travel around with me. You'll be my secretary and take down names and dates. That will be all for the present. Twenty dollars a week and expenses, and you are to keep your mouth shut. Can you start in tomorrow?"

He said he would try it for a week anyhow. After another talk with Brown it was settled that way, and then the latter said:

"We will now take a walk around the village together. Here is a notebook and pencil, and your duties as secretary begin at once. I shall talk to people in a way, and they will have something to say in return. Write it down. Write down the names of any other persons overhearing the remarks. Be sure of your figures."

Jonathan and Brown walked to the postoffice. There was quite a crowd hanging around the place. It was soon understood that the stranger was deaf and dumb, and Mr. Johnston, the merchant, remarked in the hearing of three or four others:

"Well, of all the man-gorillas I ever heard tell of this fellow takes the cake! Jonathan, where did you pick him up?"

"Oh, he's a purty smart feller," was the reply.

"Smart!" echoed the grocer. "Why, you have only to look at him to see that he's a born fool. It ought to be against the law for such critters to be at large."

Then the other dry goods man had a slurring remark to make, and the railroad agent had something to say, and Brown's secretary filled three pages of his notebook with good evidence. Before the day was over he had twelve pages. No one had a word in favor of Brown. He was called all sorts of names, and when he appeared to ask questions in the deaf and dumb language he was almost hooted at.

The next day the pair started off in a horse and buggy and did not return until they had visited every village in two counties.

By and by that notebook was full of memoranda to the last page and then there was a return to Ellenville. There was but one lawyer in the place. It was afterward remembered that he had never said aught against Brown. He had listened to others, but had said nothing himself. When he and Brown and Jonathan drove over to the county seat town in company one day nothing strange was thought of it, but a surprise party was on hand. Within a couple of days all the constables in the county were serving summonses on people who had slandered Brown. When Ellen county was finished the constables in Rockaway county took up the work. The number of summons served in both counties was 368. Each one was for defamation of character and asked for $10,000 damages. The recipients of these legal papers greeted their service with laughter, but the laughing did not last long. Those who engaged lawyers and started in to fight the matter were confronted with dates, names and expressions used and had to admit they were correct. When they had done this they had no defense, and in each and every case were advised to settle.

There are always clients who will pay lawyers' fees and then take their own way. A few of the victims banded together and resisted the suits. Then it came out that Brown had been referred to as a fool, a dummy, an idiot, a hedge fence, a gorilla, a monkey, a skunk, a lunatic, a what-is-it, a coon, a freak and some forty other names, and those who had refused him food and shelter because he was not pretty to look upon found ruin staring them in the face. The verdict on the contested suits was for the plaintiff, with heavy damages, and the others fell over themselves to settle.

Brown and Jonathan were not too hard hearted. No extortion was practiced, but at the end of six months, when the last case had been settled, there was a goodly pot of money. Jonathan received his salary and a good bit more, and when Brown was ready to depart he said to him:

"Jonathan, never work when you can avoid it."

"I never have and never shall," was the reply.

"But if you have to work—if circumstances drive you into it and you can see no possible way out, then"—

"Then work with the head instead of the hands. The wear and tear of it comes on the other fellow's suspenders instead of your own."

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF DRIVING OUT THE CRIMINAL.

Tuesday afternoon, a Leonard Mooney of Grand Forks, who has been ordered out of that place for questionable conduct entered H. K. Strand's grocery store and proceeded to put his personal desire in the form of demands.

He insulted Miss Hovelsaas a sister of Mrs. Strand and left his markes of violnece on Elmer Severson a clerk in the store and even Mr. Strand bore some smaller marks which he received in a scuffle while attempting to eject Mooney from his place of business.

He was taken in custody by Chief Lang and will answer for his conduct before Judge Bishop today. We trust that if the sentence is hard work the officers will see to it that he does the work.

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 11.—(Special.)—In the midst of yesterday's blizzard while the storm was at its height and all the trains were held up by the drifting snow, a baby boy was born on a car standing on the Louis bridge.

When the train reached Emerson, Man., among the passengers taken aboard were Mrs. Bahlen and her 14-months-old girl. She had been deserted by her husband and was on her way to a Winnipeg hospital.

A freight train ahead, buried in the snow, blocked the "flyer's" progress, and in the meantime the poor forlorn woman in the colonist car was taken ill.

Other Women in the car, learning of her plight, became interested, summoned a doctor who happened to be on the train and removed the invalid to the Pullman car, where the baby was born at 10:30.

On reaching Winipeg all were taken to the hospital, but in the meantime the passengers had subscribed a handsome sum for the new arrival.

The Site of the White House.

The site for the president's palace, as the first maps name it, was selected by President Washington and Major L'Enfant when they laid out the federal city in 1792. They purposed to have the president's house and the capitol reciprocally close to the long vista formed by Pennsylvania avenue, and they also laid out a parklike connection between the two great buildings. The plans for the house, selected by Washington and Jefferson as the result of a competition in which L'Enfant took part, were drawn by James Hoban, a native of Dublin and a medal man of the Society of Arts of that city.

But the nightingale, another of my airy creatures, breathes such sweet loud music out of her little instrumental throat that it might make mankind to think miracles are not ceased. He that at midnight, when the very laborer sleeps securely, should hear, as I often have, the clear airs, the sweet descants, the natural rising and falling, the doubling and redoubling of her voice, might well be lifted above earth and say, Lord, what music hast thou provided for the saints in heaven when thou affordest bad men such music on earth!—Walton's "The Complete Angler."

Phil May's Habits.

The all night and next day habits of Phil May, the artist, have furnished material for many a story. Joe Tapley, the singer, said that he came across May one night and heard that the latter had not been to bed for four nights and days. He remonstrated, and May said: "Never mind, Joe; we'll make a bargain. Don't you lose any sleep on my account, and I'll promise that as soon as I feel tired I'll go to bed."

THEY COME HUNDREDS OF MILES TO SEE HIM. NOTHING SO WONDERFUL IN THE DAYS OF SPECIALISM.

The success of Dr. Rea is attributed to his special study of specialism. Dr. Rea, student philanthropist and man of wide reputation, having given his entire time and practice to a line of special diseases, which enables him from long experience in handling these troubles to certainly come forward as a master specialist. His faculty for mastering diseases, his ability to diagnose, and his plan of treatment is not to be excelled by few other physicians. Dr. Rea, although a young man in life, a plain man, and one who is used to the ups and downs of life, puts himself on a level with his patients, and does not profess or pretend to practice the old plan or fashion, which is to look wise and say nothing. He knows disease; he knows how to explain the symptoms of disease; he knows where to look for disease, and the spot where located, and most of all he knows from experience from what he has done in the past, he can certainly do for others in the future. It is said by Dr. Rea's friends that he can diagnose a disease of any patient without asking them a single question; that being the case, he is not likely to doctor them for the wrong ailment; he will not take an incurable disease and lead the patient to believe that he can cure them when there is really no hope for them. His business is large and he has plenty to do, even, at times, more than he can do, without taking incurable diseases and deceiving his patients. Dr. Rea is a graduate from one of the best English universities, as well as being a graduate from two of the best schools in America. He has practiced his profession in some of the principal hospitals in this country. His specialty comprises that class of diseases which the ordinary home doctor fails to cure. His practice is mostly among the plain, hard-working people, who are unable to come to his city office for treatment; he is reasonable in his charges, and very lenient with those who are unable to pay. He is charitable, and it is said has never been known to refuse to treat a patient who is worthy and in need. A number of important cases that we hereby take the liberty to publish, which might be of interest to some who wish to nkow more of Dr. Rea's great work.

Mrs. Michael Murphy, Emmetsburg, Iowa., cured of chronic blood disease, that other doctors had all failed to cure, even after years of experimenting with her.

Wm. F. Myer, Dexter, Minn., cured of chronic stomach and bowel troubles by Dr. Rea's Cascarine treatment.

Mike Curran, Minto, N. Dak., says Dr. Rea's treatment worked donders on him; after taking it a short time felt better than he had for years.

Mrs. G. W. Varco, Austin, Minn., cured of a large cancer of the breast without cutting or without the plaster cured with Dr. Rea's new plan of treatment, which is one of the grandest discoveries the world has ever known for completely curing cancer, so that it never returns again.

A. C. Meyer, Ormsby, Minn., cured of bad cancer of the lip in two treatments. Cured by the injection plan.

Mrs. N. F. Johnson, Morton, N. D., cured of nervous prostration and epilepsy, after all other treatments had failed.

Mrs. Martha Murphy, St. Cloud, Minn., says Dr. Rea saved my life, was the doctor who knew where to look for disease, where to find it and to cure it after it was found.

A. Fullwhiler, Round Lake, Minn., cured of chronic Bright's Disease.

Mrs. H. C. Dorman, Miniski, Minn., cured of bad case of protruding piles.

Mrs. B. A. Moore, near Grantsburg, Wis., cured of floating kidney that had almost taken her life.

Mrs. Christ Wethal, 3821 Halifax St. West Duluth, Minn., cured of cross eyes in five minutes.

Mrs. Alexander Swanson, Oakes, N. Dak., cured of bad cancer of the face. Had had it cut out and it came back. Three of Dr. Rea's injection treatments cured her.

S. M. Moore, Gladstone, N. Dak., writes: "Dr. Rea, you cured my son over a year ago. I have another sick boy, and want you to doctor him."

Fred L. Dicker, Gilby, N. Dak., cured of disease of the kidney. Was very bad. A few months treatment completely cured him.

Mrs. Maurice Miller, Beaver, Minn., cured of epilepsy.

Mrs. N. C. Olson, East Grand Forks Minn., cured of big knee, varicose vein and rheumatism.

O. H. Larson, Bue, N. Dak., cured of chronic rheumatism.

Miss Emma Geving, McIntosh, Minn., cured of consumption.

W. H. Nulph, Wyndmere, N. Dak., cured of cancer of the face in two treatments.

Joe McGowan, St. Anthony Park, Minn., cured of gall stones of the liver. Doctors said he wanted die. Dr. Rea cured him in three months.

Charles Grondysee, Slayton, Minn., cured of consumption by Dr. Doran with Dr. Rea's celebrated cure for consumption.

Mrs. Nels Carlson, Buffalo, Minn., cured of large cancer of the breast Cured by the hypodermic injection plan discovered by Dr. Rea. There is no failing with this treatment.

Dr. Rea & Co., will be at Thief River Falls, Evelyn Hotel, Monday Jan. 16th from 9 A. M. until 3:30 P. M. Consultation and examination to those interested $1.00.

Dr. Rea & Co., 327-Century Bldg., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Monster Banquets.

At the wedding feast of Richard, brother of Henry III., there were no fewer than 30,000 dishes, and scarcely less imposing must have been the banquet given on the occasion of the enthronement of Archbishop Neville in the fifteenth century, for mention is made, among other comestibles, of 3,000 dishes of jelly, 2,000 hot custards, 400 swans, 6 wild bulls and 100 pigs. At the noted feasts of the gay and hospitable Prince Hal a favorite dish was what the "epicurean cooks" called "pondorrage." It was a savory jumble of partridge, pork and the yolks of eggs boiled first and afterward baked in batter. But the most hospitable entertainer on record was surely Richard II. Ten thousand of his subjects were daily bid to the banquet. In order to cater adequately for such a vast assembly of guests never were there less than 28 oxen supplied, 300 sheep, besides innumerable fowls and choice game. These were handed over each morning at daybreak to the 2,000 cooks employed in the king's kitchen and the prodigious preparations for this huge medieval banquet began.—London Globe.

ST. PAUL'S BANQUET TO STATE OFFICIALS

Six Hundred Guests are Royally Entertained by the Capital City.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 19.—"I never smoked one of the things before in my life and I don't know what the folks at home would think if they could see me doing it now, but I'll do it tonight if it kills me," remarked a gray haired member of the Minnesota legislature from up state as he lighted a cigarette at the banquet given by the citizens of St. Paul to the Governor, the members of the legislature and the state officers.

This little incident may be taken by "the folks at home," as an indication of the spirit of good fellowship which prevailed from the time the 600 guests took their places at the table until the curtains were drawn on the last vaudeville act of the evening's entertainment. Incidentally, it may be stated here that the legislator to whom reference is made, had turned down all but his water glass and the spirit of good fellowship he showed had not been aroused by imbibing in any of the sparkling liquid refreshments.

> "In a spirit of good will and hospitality, extending the hand of friendship and fellowship, St. Paul welcomes the governor and his staff, the state officials, and the members of the Thirty-seventh Legislature of Minnesota, honors you with its belief in your wisdom and earnestness of purpose, and proud in being your host wishes you to feel at home here and join with our citizens in mutual good will and cheer. This is St. Paul's toast to you all: "May your worst day of the new year be better than your best day in the old year."

From the moment H. A. Noble, in the guise of Saint Paul under a glaring spotlight in the darkened palm of the Hotel St. Paul uttered the foregoing words of welcome and the toast of the evening the fun was on. The entertainment lasted more than six horus and there was'nt one dull moment in the whole time. Every known trick of the culinary art and some that were never revealed before were brought into play to please the inner man and loud were the praises of Charles G. Roth, Manager of the hotel and his aides when the last of the many courses was eaten and the speeches began. A. W. Lindeke, chairman of the general committee on arrangements and those who served with him on this and other committees have been generally commended for their efficiency as entertainers and their efforts no doubt will long be remembered by those fortunate enough to have sat at the festive board.

J. N. Jackson, toastmaster, after briefly stating the object of the banquet to be only a desire on the part of the citizens of St. Paul to bring closer friendship between the people of St. Paul and their state officials, and lawmakers was loudly applauded when he expressed the desire that something may be done to keep on the farms and thus improve the vast agricultural resources of Minnesota.

Mayor Keller of St. Paul, having delivered the address of welcome on behalf of the city, Lieutenant Governor Gordon was introduced. His subject was "Senatorial Courtesy" and his brief talk contained the only political note uttered when he remarked: "When I say perhaps I am not thoroughly familiar with the subject of 'senatorial courtesy' there are no doubt some here who will agree with me." Everybody laughed and everybody believed the lieutenant governor was referring to his recent appointment of senate committees.

The ovation given Governor Eberhart lasted fully five minutes. As he arose to speak the room was again darkened and the spotlight was thrown on his good natured countenance. When at last he was allowed to to speak he at once drew a laugh when he said: "This is the first time in my life I was so unexpectedly pushed into the limelight. I can't see many of you but I want to say that this is the best looking legislature I ever saw. It is even better than the Illinois legislature, and the press reports say that that was the best that money could buy.

Since coming to St. Paul to live I have learned to love and esteem the people of St. Paul and I believe they have the same feeling for me- if I may be permitted to judge from the elections returns. My only fear of this banquet is that the members of the legislature will come to think so highly of St. Paul that they will want to remain here."

After telling a joke on Mayor Keller, who, in his boyhood while trying to sell a plow to a farmer guaranteed not to "scour," the governor said: "This banquet this evening is not given as a means for lobbying for any thing, but to show the members of the legislature the real feeling of hospitality that animates the people of this city. The only 'touch' that should affect the members of the legislature is the touch of the elbow and that is what you are feeling here."

Beginning with a wrestling match between Henry Ordeman, champion of America and Dr. Jorgens of Minneapolis, which was won by Ordeman without much trouble, the vaudeville bill included some of the cleverest acts presented on St. Paul stages during the work. "That Is'nt All," sung by one of the girls was particularly appropriate for a stag affair and judging from the applause, pleased the members from the city as much as it did those from the rural districts.

There was plenty to drink, much to smoke, and much in the speeches to think about and lots in the stage attractions to please any fancy, but on the morning after there were neitehr "sore heads" nor "swollen-heads."

MARRIED

Last Thursday afternoon occurred the marriage of Miss Minnie Olivia Larson and Charles M. Sandberg both of Hallock, Minnesota.

The ceremony was performed at the Ogahmah Hotel by Judge Bishop.

SAW-MILL NOT GOING OUT

Other Industries Would Take Place If Lumbering ever is Discontinued.

"If the mill goes out." These words fell upon the editors ear the other day. It is true that a large amount of the logs owned by the Thief River Falls Lumber Company have been recently transfered to another firm but that is absolutely no indication that the local mill will be shut down. The sawmill in this city has as good a location as any mill in the state, everything considered. Further than that there is as much available timber tributary to this mill as there is to any one mill in our state. Hence we may safely deduct that the local mill will run just as long as any other sawmill.

Now we all realize that the time will come, in spite of all talk of conservation and reforestration, when there will be no more logs to saw anywhere. And we truly believe that everyone of us will be glad to see that day.

The first thot that enters ones mind is that there will be a scarcity of building materials. This we predict will absolutely not be the case. Instead of having millions of tons of hay and straw going to waste or being burned each year we will have these raw materials carefully gathered and hauled to pulp factories where the straw, whether oats, wheat barley, rye or flax or hay of any kind will be put thru the pulping process and then in a few hours come out as completed boards or fancy trimmed lumbers accordingly as the machinery was designed.

All this work instead of being merely a process of going out to rob the forests would be a gathering of natural resources and putting them into their proper place. This work, while the material used would be very inexpensive, would require a far larger crew of men to produce a given number of feet of lumber than is required at the present time so that the price of lumber might be expected to advance to some extent and yet it would be worth far more than the materials used in our day. For these manufactured boards would be absolutely perfect in size and thickness and without a single knot or blemish of any nature whatsoever. Further than this, the pulp being prepared with the addition of certain non- combustible chemicals would be made absolutely fireproof and hence for commercial puposes would be worth more than twice as much as ordinary lumber.

In addition to this beams or sleepers to be laid in positions where they would be liable to rot or become decomposed could be manufactured with that idea in view and be saturated with asbestic preparations that would prevent decay so that the buildings of the future would be almost indestructable.

The Press predicts that whenever the time comes that logs will become so scarce as to make the sawing of lumber unprofitable we will have in our city on the same site where our now busy sawmill stands a still busier plant manufacturing lumber of a better character, more beneficial in its nature, and the company manufacturing this modern material will be returning for labor twice as much in the production of a like amount as they are doing at the present time.

ELECTION SCANDALS IN CONGRESS

Sentiment Strong on Question of Parcel Post. New Pension Bill Passes House.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 19, 1911—The Lorimer bribery case is calling attention to the necessity for a direct primary law for United States senators. It is altogether probable that one result of the recent airing of the methods employed in the election of United States Senator Lorimer will be the enactment this session of a direct primary bill. Should this be an accomplished fact the Progressive Republicans will have gained a great victory, for it is largely due to their efforts that the agitation for the direct primaries has kept this all-important topic before the people.

• • •

Evidence in the Lorimer case, which is absorbing more attention at present than any other public question before the Senate, has revealed a situation in the State of Illinois, which is little short of startling and will undoubtedly hasten legislation to remedy the evils growing out of the present systems in vogue in the several States employed in the elections of United States senators. The Lorimer forces are apparently thoroughly aroused over the prospects of situation, which point to the unseating of Lorimer at this session. Many of his former friends have deserted him and have gone over to the opposition. At this writing only five Democratic Senators are expected to vote for him. These include Senators Bailey, Paynter, Johnston, and Fletcher, who signed the majority report of the committee on Privileges and Elections, and the strengthy support of Lorimer as thus reduced is looked upon by the Anti-Lorimer Senators as proof that his situation is precarious.

The Anti-Lorimer forces are trying to force a vote at this session. Unquestionably if the matter were put to a vote at this time Lorimer would be the loser. On the other hand, those who are opposed to Lorimer and are leaders in the opposition fight think that if the matter is allowed to drag along and put over until next session public 'sentiment' would be less aroused, with the probabilities against unseating him.

• • •

Following close on the heels of the Lorimer case the news from Wisconsin casting about on the propriety of the methods employed in the election of Senator Stephenson, who was elected to the United States senate to fill out the unexpired term of Hon. J. C. Spooner, who resigned in 1907. Senator Stephenson was re-elected in 1909. He has given out a statement in which he says that the charges against him coming from the special committee of the Wisconsin state senate are false. This committee declares that Stephenson's nomination in the primary and election are void because of attempted briberies and corrupt practices by agents and workers. Unless a resolution should go through the Senate directing an investigation the indications are that the Committee on Privileges and Elections will be slow to do anything about the charges.

• • •

Insurgency is steadily on the gain. The latest acquisition to the ranks of the Progressives comes from California. The term of United States Senator F. P. Flint expires March 3, 1911. Flint is a standpatter and a regular of the most pronounced type. He will be succeeded by Judge John B. Works of Los Angeles, who was recently elected to the United States Senate by the California state legislature.

• • •

A perfect flood of petitions, resolutions and letters is rolling in upon members of Congress protesting against the establishment of a parcels post law through the action of Congress? The campaign against this legislation is well organized and is nation-wide in its scope. Most of the petitions come in the form of printed circulars to which are attached the names of the signers. The campaign is being conducted by the American League of Associations at 2008 Calumet Avenue, Chicago. It has been intimated that this Association is backed by the big express companies. It is well known that their influence has been in opposition to the parcels post in the past. The country merchant is made the chief instrument of opposition, since most of the petitions contain the signatures of the smaller dealers in the country towns and cities.

• • •

The circular makes much of the claim that the "Rural free delivery system, inaugurated for the educational advancement of the people, would thus (by the enactment into law of a parcels post bill) be subverted from its original purpose, and would become a mere instrument or agency in the hands of the great retail mail order trust— a trust that would eventually control all sources of supply and all channels of distribution for everything the people must eat, wear and use in their daily lives."

• • •

The parcels post legislation, with its load or responsibilities, is apt to be one of the matters that the Republicans will be willing to pass on to the Democrats for a heritage, thereby giving the next Democratic House the opportunity to shoulder this legislative burden. Neither party has declared for a parcels post, although the administration has recommended it. The rural districts of the country are overwhelmingly in favor of this legislation, while on the other hand the merchants and retail dealers are just as bitterly opposed.

• • •

Hammond of Minnesota is being prominently mentioned in connection with membership on the committee on ways and means in the next House. It is understood that Mr. Hammond would not be opposed to being placed on a committee which is one of the most important in the lower branch of Congress, and is bound to be thrown in the lime-light next session, if the Democrats keep their promise and revise the tariff. There is this about Hammond's prospective appointment to this committee which might offset to some extent the advantage resulting from a position on the Ways and Means committee. He would be held responsible, to a certain extent, at least, by his constituency for any short-comings in the resultant tariff legislation.

• • •

The House has passed a pension bill which, if passed by the Senate and signed by the President, will add approximately $45,000,000 to the annual pension expense of the government, bringing the total up to almost $200,000,000. Although the watch-word this session is economy, the Republicans rushed to the assistance of the Fuller pension bill and passed it with scarcely any opposition. It has been intimated that the bill was put thru to strengthen the party and to secure the old soldier vote in the next presidential election. This bill as passed by the House grants $15 per month to veterans at the age of 62 years, $20 per month at 65, $25 at 70 and $36 at 75 or over.

ROSETH—WOLD

Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock occurred the marriage of Miss Inga Wold and John Rosseth at the home of the bride on the East side. Only a few of the intimate friends and relatives were present at the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Rosseth have the best wishes of all who know them to take with them to their new home. They will reside on a farm near Northwood, N. Dak.

WILL STOP PRINTING ENVELOPES

Postal Department Will Print no More Envelopes after Jan. Thirtyfirst.

Postmaster General Hitchcock announced that after January the government will discontinue the printing of stamped envelopes and recommends that the same be done by the local newspapers and by special permit for the towns nearest the newspaper where a town has no paper of its own. No large town will be allowed to have a monopoly on the printing of the envelopes to the detriment of the smaller newspapers.

A uniform scale of printing will be prepared by the postoffice department and insist upon or the newspapers will not be sold stamped envelopes for printing. The scale of printing will be such that a reasonable profit can be made by the office printing them. The department will also soon make a ruling that no first class mails will be allowed transmission through the mails until it has a return card written or printed thereon. The above means that the envelope printing business will take on a big boom soon, which is sure to continue.

The order relating to the printing of envelopes is a correction for an evil of long standing and against which the newspapers throughout the country have fought many years, for the reason that the price charged for the envelopes was far less than the stock could be purchased by printers and the rate charged was such that a profit on the printing could be made by the government. Hundreds of millions of stamped envelopes printed by the government are used annually throughout the country and the contemplated change will be greeted with pleasure by every printer and publisher who has felt the loss of this class of business.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT TAKING EFFECT

Committee on House Rules Take Backwater. Reverse First Action.

Publicity has scored again. Some of the statesmen began to hear from home regarding their support of the Cannonistic regulations reported, and railroaded thru by the Committee on Rules. Fearful of further fights and further publicity, there were consultations and then the decision that public opinion was an influence too powerful to be opposed by politicians in their untenable position. Accordingly the Rules Committee recommended for adoption three of the vital reforms demanded by the progressives.

• • •

Two insurgents, Kerry C. Conely of Rochester and W. A. Campbell of Minneapolis championed amendments intended to end the loose business methods that have prevailed in the purchasing of supplies for the House. For years the Chief Clerk has operated, almost without check of any kind, under the following order from the House:

"RESOLVED, That the Chief Clerk be and is hereby instructed to purchase such supplies as are necessary for expediting the business of the House, including a copy of the annotated statutes."

The new rules contemplated no change in this condition and Mr. Conley secured the adoption of an amendment requiring the Chief Clerk to get an itemized invoice in triplicate of all supplies purchased by him and file one with the State Auditor for each bill paid. Mr. Campbell's amendment was of the same nature. It provides that no bill for supplies shall be paid until audited and approved by the Committee on Legislative Expenses, and requires this Committee to keep a public record of its meetings.

These two important amendments marked hte first onslaught on the new rules, and their adoption was the first real victory won by the insurgents:

• • •

Next came an honest concession in reference to the "concession" discussed last week. It will be remembered that the progressives insisted upon a rule limiting the time committees could hold business from the House. The Committee on Rules "conceded" this reform and reported a rule on the subject which contained no less than four jokers, as follows:

1. It was to apply only to bills, omitting resolutions.
2. It was intrepreted by good parliamentarians to mean that it would require a two-thirds vote to force a bill from a committee within twenty days after it was referred.
3. It was not automatically operative, but a bill could be forced out five days after a member demanded it, if he made the demand after the twenty-day limit.
4. When a bill is forced out of a committee, under this marvelous rule instead of taking its regular course, it shall "lie on the table", which has little parliamentary advantage over being in a committee.

Knowing that W. A. Campbell had an amendment ready and that a general attack on Rule 20 was pending, the Committee on Rules themselves backfired by reporting an amendment which removes joker No. 2. This concession clearly establishes the right of a majority to recall a bill from a committe at any time and is o'tfhe greatest importance. Perhaps the progressives will be satisfied with this, but the other ambiguities of the Rule 20 should be removed.

• • •

The third victory of the progressives was more clearcut and decisive. It was undeniably due to the power of publicity. The politicians did not dare to face another roll call on the question. Here is the story.

After the amendment to the rules requiring committees to keep a record of their actions had been defeated, 46 to 62- the vote as given last week-W. I. Nolan kept up the fight by offering the following, which was of course referred to the Committee on Rules:

> "RESOLVED, That each Committee of the House shall keep a record of its meetings, which shall include a roll call on all final action on bills and the names of members present. Any member who is unable to attend a committee meeting can have his reasons for not being present made a part of the record. The record of all committee meetings shall be filed for public use with The Chief Clerk within twenty-hours after the committee has met and at the close of the session shall be filed with the Secretary of State for public use. Any part of the record of the committee meeting shall be made a part of the Journal of the House upon request of the committee or a majority of the House."

This was on January tenth. Two days later the Committee on Rules, refusing to recognize Mr. Nolan's initiative in the matter, recommended the new rule as tho it represtented their own idea and desires. It was printed and laid over for a day, but will undoubtedly be adopted before this is read.

• • •

Nolan, Campbell, Conley and 43 other progressives made a seemingly hopeless fight to reform the rules. They won on the three points explained above because public opinion sustained and supported them.

• • •

"Why are the progressives in a minority," asked a friend; I supposed they would be in control of the House, as they are of the Senate?" So did I. It happens that there are two kinds of progressives-conscientious and counterfeit. When the real crisis came the spurious progressives unmasked and marched with the politicians.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives occupies a position more important in its relation to legislation than does the Governor of the state. A Speaker must be judged by four things: (1). The basic laws

RUSHING THEIR BUSINESS

Northwestern Drainage Company Has 50 men Preparing for Summer Work.

A casual observer could hardly pass thru this city these days without noticing the thrift, bustle and industry displayed considering the season of the year. While we have many and varied interests all struggling for a supremacy in their line credit is particularly due to the Northwestern Drainage Company for their untiring efforts these days.

The Northwestern Drainage Company not only keeps a fine office and an ample office force to look after the business end of their work in a businesslike way but they have had for several weeks past two or more men at work in the Sash and Door Factory building and making models and other wood work necessary in connection with their dredges. Principally, however, we note the splended Machine Shop at the West end of 2nd Street in which they employ at the present time a dozen men and are ready to employ more at any time that they can secure the proper help. In this modern Machine Shop you find all the modern conveniences for doing iron and steel repairing and construction work. Three huge forges breathe their fiery breaths upon the steel and it is easily changed to any desired form. One large automatic drill works persistantly at the job of drilling holes for various appliances. A huge turning-lathe is busy day and night fitting shafts and sprockets to suit each particular need. One steel leveler silent as the dead of night is constantly cutting down any uneven surface and bringing it to the exact size that it is wanted. While a busy bustling little hack-saw is cutting off one rod, pipe or shaft after another in just the lengths that are wanted and all this is accomplished by merely pressing a button and allowing a current of electricity to enter the four ever ready little motors that are attached nearly up at the ceiling of the building. A modern steam-heating plant is also built in conjunction with this building and the workmen never knew anything about our late cold snap.

In addition to the shop and its heating-plant the company also has a storage shop and yards and here are stored some $5,000 worth of all manner of conceivable repairs and extra materials for the construction of dredges.

The workmen in this shop are now and have been for the last two weeks busy building a large dredge to be hauled to Grygla and there erected ready to begin work in the spring..

In addition to the above mentioned work the company has at the present time twenty seven teams and as many men busy all the time hauling coal, gasoline and construction materials out onto the northeast country so as to be prepared to do things out there next summer.

There are now six dredges belonging to this company at work in this locality and before the season of 1911 opens they will have at least one more ready for action and probably two.

This will without a doubt indicate that during the season of 1911 there will be more drainage work done in Thief River Falls territory than there ever has been and thus we may confidently look forward to greater improvements and more flourishing times.

How We Paid The Mortgage

BY WILLIAM SMITH.

Our side was now at bat, but fared no better than did Dave's men.

This was repeated for eight straight innings, it true was a battle royal between the two pitchers.

In the last half of the eighth inning, however, we got a man around to third base, Jay Rodney made a safe single and scored him.

Excitement was at fever heat now, as there was but half an inning left for them to score in; and how near they did come to it!

The first two men up fanned and Sam was putting on every ounce of steam he had left, but the next man to bat made a single, the one following him made a double hit, advancing the man on first base to third and he going to second. Dave Bennett was at the plate, and now came his chance for victory or defeat.

He foul-tipped two short inshoots, then Jay signaled for two balls but Dave was not to be fooled, he had two strikers and two balls with a man on third and one on second base, could he but make a safe hit and score one man it would tie the game.

The next ball thrown he met squarely, it started on a gradual rise from the bat, and was lined to pass inside of first base about four feet, it would surely go too high for the first baseman to get it and would fall short for the right fielder.

Hardly had the ball started from the bat when Mr. Cook was where he could get a line on it and pronounced it a fair hit, as it was.

Dave waved his arms frantically, for the man on third and second to score, threw his head down low and startd for first.

Ben Woodbury our first baseman, who had been dubbed Weasel on account of his quickness, was in the game however, and with one leap went up in the air, reached the last inch with his bare right hand, but it was enough, the ball stuck like glue, and Dave called out.

After the noise had subsided Mr. Cook climbed upon a platform, that had been used during fair time and said.

"Boys that is as well a fought game as I have ever had the pleasure of seeing and here is Twenty-five dollors for the winning team; and I want both teams to come to the Nationtl hotel and take dinner with me."

"When are you going to give us a return game ? asked Dave of Sam, when we were about to start for home."

"I think we can play you next Saturday, if you can come out then, I will see and let you know in time."

Oh I don't know whether we will come out in the country or not; you had better come in here. "You have no back-stop or grand-stand; I was past there the other day and it is all grown up to weeds."

"No, said Sam, you must play us on our home ground next, if at all, we will try and find time to mow it, and if we play again it will have to be next Saturday, as that is the last day we will have off." "We will have to commence work in the corn the following Monday, and cannot play after that, as the summer term of school begins then and we wish to attend every day and work in the corn before, and after, school hours."

"Pooh" said Dave, don't see why you are so anxious about your old corn, you will lose the place this fall anyway."

Sam turned away and bit his lip to keep back the storm about to break within him.

"I'd like to thrash that fellow, and, I would do it to if it was'nt for the mortgage." But he wisely held his temper.

"This, however, ended our baseball for the season, and in fact most all of our amusemtnt; as the corn was sprouting, and we commenced Monday morning to barrow it.

We went over it four times with the harrows, and during the summer, cultivated it over five times with the corn plows, there was hardly a weed in the field and the crop looked excellent.

It had been a dry season but our cultivating the ground had held the moisture near the surface; this had acted the same as the system used in dry farming, forming a blanket of dust on top and thus holding every drop of moisture at the roots.

"I was in the village one afternoon for the mail, when Mr. Cook approached me and said; That's a dandy crop of corn you lads are raising out there, got anything in the county skinned seven ways for Sunday.

"How are you going to harvest it? that's a big field to cut by hand.

"I'm sure I don't know but I guess mother and Sam will manage it some way."

A CHECK BOOK

The right way to pay is by check.

You will be right all the time if you pay your bills by check. There is no chance for dispute over a settlement if you have a checking account with us and pay your obligation by Check. Each check is a receipt. The endorsement on the back of the check is evidence that the person received the money. A checking account insures you against paying a bill twice; gives you a record of your business; puts system into your transactions. You have method and convenience in your affairs with a checking account at the PEOPLES STATE BANK.

"TWELFTH NIGHT" COMING

To be presented here Monday Jan. 23rd.

An announcement of more than ordinary interest to the lovers of the best in dramatic literature is that of the engagement of the superior company of players headed by William Yule and Violet Eddy, in "Twelfth Night".

Seats are now selling for the engagement of "Twelfth Night" the best picturesque and delightful of all the Shakepearian comadies which appears here one night, Monday January 23rd, under the direction of C. P. Walker. Presented by a company of experienced Shakesperian actors, with a mos elaborate costume and scenic equipment, (Twelfth Night) is ideal entertainment. The company are the famous English Players with Wm Yule, the popular Canadian comedian, and Violet Eddy, a winsome young actress, especially engaged for the roles of Sir Toby Belch and Viola.

AN ELABORATE PRODUCTION.

Twelfth Night, to be presented at, in Five Acts and Sixteen Scenes. When William Yule, Violet Eddy, and their supporting company of Shakesperian Players appear at the Auditorium on January 23rd, 1911 in the ideal comedy (Twelfth Night), theatre-goers will see probably, the most elaborate and complete scenic production ever handled on the local stage. Manager C. P. Walker has furnished with a lavish hand an equipment sufficient to supply five acts, divided into sixteen scenes. Every inch of scenery, every piece of furnitrue every platform and stage brace is carried by the company, together with special lighting effects. The scenery has been built especially for this territory, and can be readily adjusted to any stage. Manager Walker is particular in his instructions to his stage carpenters, and insists that the scenery be used in each and every town.

(To late for last week)

Well snowstorms seem to sing around ones ears quiet saucy these days. Wonder where all that wind is coming from anyhow.

Mrs. Walnofer and children from Fergus Falls, spent a few days here visiting with her sisters, Mrs. John Haider and Mrs. Carl Steiner.

A crowd of young people spent last Sunday at Frank Coppay's and an enjoyable time was had by all present. Call at Coppay's for a good time.

Dora, Celia and Arthur Olson, Frank Heiser and Miss Johnson spent Sunday at B. Sagmoen's.

Miss Louisa Bux is home now but will soon leave for Thief River Falls where she will attend school.

The Christmas fools were fools this year. It was tried but without success.

A peddler was seen here lately; the first for a long time. Guess he came along with one of our snowstorms.

Our winter seems to be just as cold as our summer was not, it being 32 below zero.

News and snowstorms don't agree very well so Goodbye everybody, but I will soon come back again and have my say. May I? Ed.— Sure.

(To late for last week)

The snow is deep and the roads are rather bad in our neighborhood.

Ernest Ackerlund and Emil Larson attended a meeting of the board of directors of the Wylie Elevator and Mercantile Co., Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Nels Person of Polk Centre visited at Ed. Crown's Saturday evening.

Mike Ault transacted business at St. Hilaire Friday.

Ed. Crown and son, Willie drove to St. Haliare Thursday the latter took the train from there to Thief River Falls.

Oscar Akerlund and George Swanson, two of Bray's young scions, went to Thief River Falls Monday where they will take a course at the Commercial Normal school during the winter months.

In the last issue of the Press we noticed that Pennington county has been divided into commissioner districts. We have nothing to remark against it as it looks to us like a fair and square deal. This puts us in the 3rd district with Olof Larson of Numedahl as our representative at the County Capital. Mr. Larson is an honest and capable man and we feel that we will be ably represented by him.

(To late for last week)

A party was held last Sunday Jan. 8th in the honor of S. Knutson and L. Nelson. A big oyster supper was served and all kinds of refreshments (its no use talking, the bachlors are better cooks than many of the women folks). Several games were played. The champions of the players, were: J. Markuson and G. Nelson. They all reported a good time.

Thedor Nelson has been busy helping S. Knutson drilling a weel. They had good luck by stricking a vein inside of forty feet so the water flowed two feet feet above the surface.

L. Rummestrand has been on business the last week with the petition for a bigger school district.

A BOOK BINDERY IN T. R. FALLS

I wish to announce that I have established a bookbindery in Thief River Falls and I am now ready to do any work you want done in that line.

During my stay here I have heard much talk from people who have books at home that are useless and worthless too on acount of broken binding; such books that they want in their libraries if they knew where to get them rebound. It makes no difference how old and worn out your books may be, let me show you what can be done to them. Many people are saving magazines and papers that contain good reading matter. Have them bound into a beautiful book and place them in your library.

My bindery is at present in my home 704—Main Ave No.; where you can find me by calling in person or, Phone 295 and I will be pleased to call on you for your work.

Respectfully yours for business,
Lewis O. Lasseson.

DEITZ COMMITTEE IS SUED

Socialist Printing Firm After Money for Job Work.

Milwaukee, Jan. 17.—The Deitz defense committee of this city has been sued for $200 covering a printing bill of the Socialist Democratic Herald Printing company for circulars and other printed matter sent out when the committee was trying to raise money to pay the Deitz lawyers.

At that time the Socialists were greatly interested in the Deitz case, using it as a political argument to aid in securing Socialist votes in Milwaukee, but after the campaign the Socialists ceased to pay as much attention to the case.

TROOPS FIRE INTO THE MOB

Eighteen Persons Killed in Rioting at Bombay.

As usual the occasion of the Muharram festival brought about a clash between Sunnites and the Shiahs and troops called out to restore order fired several volleys into the mobs.

Sleet and Rain Cripple Wires.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Telephone and telegraph companies found their service severely crippled in Iowa, Western Illinois and Southern Minnesota. Sleet and rain which swept across the country also delayed to some extent train service.

MADAM! "SUNKIST" ORANGES ARE BEST!

The sure way to get good oranges is to call for "Sunkists." They vary in price according to size, but all "Sunkists" are supreme in quality. All dealers sell them. Each "Sunkist" comes in a paper wrapper labeled "Sunkist." Save wrappers and get valuable silverware premiums—orange spoons, dessert spoons, fruit knives, etc. See "Sunkist" Orange advertisements in this paper.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the blood you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. MILITARY HAZING.

Carried to Brutal Extremes in German Army Schools.

CADETS MAIMED AND KILLED.

The Most Dangerous Punishment Meted Out to Erring Freshmen Is "the Gantlet of Fire," and the Most Repulsive Is "Bacon Swallowing."

Germany is, of all countries, the one in which the science of hazing in military schools has attained the greatest development. The army plays in the fatherland's life a part the importance of which can hardly be realized by an untraveled American. Military service is compulsory, and in time of peace 600,000 men are kept armed, uniformed and drilled. To command that huge contingent 80,000 commissioned officers are necessary.

This large officer corps has developed customs, ethics, even a morality, of its own. These customs and ethics are imitated at an early age by the boy who aspires to enjoy the veneration which German officers generally receive from the populace. Imitation in a young man usually means exaggeration, and some of the little military snobs are on their first day at school a joy to behold. Very soon, however, the precocious stiffness is taken out of them.

A harmless though repulsive form of hazing cadets whose appetite verges on gluttony is called "bacon swallowing." The plebes to be victimized are lined up on the grounds surrounded by a group of second year men. A slice of raw bacon is tied to a piece of string, and the plebe whose name is drawn first is made to swallow the unappetizing morsel. When the sickening sensation of the twine tickling his throat threatens to nauseate him the bacon is pulled out. The name of another unfortunate is drawn, and he is in turn obliged to swallow the bacon, the appearance of which has not been improved by the first man's chewing. On it goes along the line to the next man and up to the last one, and for days and days the sight of bacon, a staple article in German cuisine, will, if it does not spoil the healthy youngsters' appetites, at least remind them that undue haste in assimilating food lacks refinement.

After a few hours spent in "frog's squat" the most dignified and snobbish plebes assume the good natured and perfectly chummy attitude which means that they have been tamed. Swelled heads are quickly noted and their owners made to sit on the floor with their chins resting on their knees, and their ankles and wrists are bound together. A solid stick passed under the knee joints and forcing the forearm back prevents them from moving arms or legs, and they are left there facing one another in an unnatural, cramped and ridiculous position.

Other forms of hazing are the stomach dance, with or without obstacles: finding the keyhole, tossing in a blanket and star gazing. In the stomach dance the cadet is put flat on his stomach on a high table and four tormenters take him by the hands and feet and whirl him around on the table. In the case of serious offenses a few hard objects or "obstacles" are scattered over the table, making the "dance" rather painful.

Then comes finding the keyhole. The cadet stands in front of a locker and is blindfolded. He has to feel for the keyhole with his forefinger. Then another cadet places his head between the locker and the finger, opens his mouth and bites the finger till its owner howls.

Star gazing consists in being made to watch the stars at night through a coat sleeve held like a telescope by two cadets. A third cadet then pours a glass of muddy water in at top of the sleeve.

When a cadet is guilty of behavior unbecoming to a gentleman, disgraces his class by some breach of etiquette or commits some petty theft he is generally sentenced by the "holy vehm," or "court of honor," to the rod. The penalty is applied ruthlessly, a gag being placed in the punished man's mouth to stifle his cries for help.

Of all the forms of hazing the most brutal perhaps is the "gantlet of fire." The freshman upon whom this punishment is to be visited is kept in a dark room astride a wooden chair, to which he is securely fastened. In the next room his tormentors are twisting newspapers into imitation torches, which at a given signal they light with matches. When the torches are burning brightly they form themselves in two lines; another signal is sounded, the door of the dark room is thrown open, and the freshman is ordered to ride between the lines, while he is mercilessly lashed with flaming brands.

However quickly he may run the gantlet, by the time he has reached the end of the blazing pathway his hair, his eyebrows and lashes have been singed to the skin, his eyelids are seared and swollen, his lips blistered, his uniform hopelessly damaged.

One of the surgeons in attendance covers up the sores with bandages and sends the singed plebe to the infirmary for a couple of days. The official report mentions the explosion of an alcohol lamp or some other accident of like nature.

Not infrequently those "boyish pranks" have a tragic ending. More than once cadets have been crippled for life, and there are two cases on record where death was the direct result of horseplay carried too far.—New York Tribune.

Rosa Bonheur's Humble Lover.

When asked why she had never married Rosa Bonheur always answered: "Nobody ever fell in love with me. I have never been truly loved." More than one man, however, really worshiped her. But she inspired such deep respect that no man seems to have dared to reveal his feelings to her. There is a curious example of this fact, taken from the humble walks of life. On several occasions Rosa Bonheur had done service for a workingman who throughout his life spent his savings in buying engravings of her principal pictures and photographs of herself. His simple dwelling was a temple to her kindness. He described himself as "the earthworm in love with a star." The person here referred to—E. A. Bautray of Clermont-Ferrand—tells me that Rosa Bonheur once asked him why he was not married, and he replied by asking her the same question. Here was her answer: "Well, sir, it is not because I am an enemy of marriage, but I assure you that I have never had time to consider the subject."—"Reminiscences of Rosa Bonheur."

Paternalism In Groceries.

Paternalism with a vengeance is practiced in certain New York groceries. It is benevolent paternalism, though.

"Ma wants two pounds of sugar," said a child to a patriarch in the trade.

He consulted a calendar on the wall.

"I guess you'd better take only a pound today," he said, "and go kind of slow on that. The week is only half gone, but you have already eaten up three-fourths of your allowance. Tell your mother so."

The child promised to deliver the report on financial depression.

"That is the only way on earth to keep those people from running into debt," said the grocer. "The system is common in this neighborhood. I do it at the customers' request. Every pay day women with spendthrift husbands and an extravagant disposition of their own deposit enough money with the grocer and butcher to see the family through the week. They instruct us to let no one overdraw the amount, and except in cases where extra food is actually needed we stick to our end of the bargain."—New York Times.

Horrors of Bokhara.

The terrible deeds that once made Bokhara a byword are now prohibited by the Russian government. Prisoners are not permitted, for instance, to be dragged through the streets by galloping horses. Nor are they thrown from the top of the high tower called the Minar Katan. This was the usual punishment meted out to evildoers in the old days. Watched by thousands of spectators, the poor wretches were flung from that giddy height on to the flagstones beneath.

Bokhara has many chambers of horrors, unwholesome for western eyes to see and the description of which would certainly be unfit for publication. Perhaps the most horrible of these is a pit where prisoners were tortured by vermin, which were so numerous and ravenous that in the absence of human prey they were fed on chunks of raw meat.—Wide World Magazine.

The Retort Legal.

"Sometimes the law seems unjust for the reason that it isn't comprehended," said a judge. "Take the case of the woman prisoner before Sir Edward Coke. This woman appeared in court with her hat on. The judge said sternly:

"'A woman may be covered in church, but not when arraigned in a court of justice.'

"To this the woman replied:

"'It seems singular that I may wear my hat in the presence of God, but not in the presence of man.'

"And she would appear, in her legal ignorance, to have got the better of the argument until Sir Edward Coke retorted:

"'It isn't singular at all. Man, with his weak intellect, cannot discover secrets known to God, and therefore in investigating truth the court must see all obstacles put aside. Accordingly it is fitting that the prisoner's hat be removed and with it the shadow that it casts on her face.'"

He Didn't Like Connecticut.

"I have always had a mild interest," said the lawyer, "in the origin of the Connecticut Yankee's reputation, but I had no idea that it extended so far back until I ran across in the surrogate's office the other day the will of Lewis Morris of Morrisania, made in 1760 and admitted to probate in 1762. It contains this paragraph:

"'It is my desire that my son, Gouverneur Morris, may have the best Education that is to be had in England or America but my Express Will and Directions are that he be never sent for that purpose to the Colony of Connecticut, least he should imbibe in his youth that low Craft and cunning so incident to the people of that Country which is so interwoven in their [illegible] that all their art cannot disguise it from the world, tho' many of them under the Sanctifyed garb of Religion have Endeavoured to Impose themselves on the World for honest Men.'"—New York Sun.

Parrots In a Fire.

In all likelihood no fireman on duty is going to stand around with his hand in his pockets long enough to read the warning, nevertheless it is printed in large type above the bird fancier's desk:

"In case of fire save the parrots last. They are best able to take care of themselves."

"Looks like hard luck for the parrots," remarked a visitor.

"I have no grudge against them," said the bird man. "I am only trying to protect the smaller and more delicate birds. When a fire starts in a bird store most persons who join the rescue party make a grab for the parrots. First aid should be extended to the canaries. They and other small birds are mighty soon overcome by the smoke. The parrot is no phoenix, but unless he is actually reduced to ashes he can put up a pretty stiff fight against a fire and can hold his own until the rescuers make a second invasion."—New York Sun.

The Menu Card In Its First Form.

In its old fashioned form the menu was usually written large on cards of such imposing dimensions that room for one only could be found at each end of the board. In the medieval dinner this aid to selection must have been an absolute necessity, for the medieval dinner was a mine of surprises. It was divided into courses, as are our own dainty meals; but, whereas nowadays the diner has a general idea that fish will follow soup and that entree is succeeded by releve and can conceive generally the sort of demand that each course will make upon his appetite and digestion, there was no possible arguing as to what was going to happen at an early English dinner, and close study fails to reveal the existence of any principle of arrangement.

No Law's Delay Here.

In Perak, in the Malay peninsula, lawyers find no business, for a modified form of trial by ordeal decides all disputes. In place of the legal practitioner the pleader is a native boy who is assigned to one or the other of the sides and is given a bamboo tube in which is sealed the pleading of the person or party whom he represents. When all is ready two stakes are driven into the bed of a stream, and by aid of a bamboo pole the heads of the two boys are submerged at the same time. By grasping the stakes they are enabled to remain under water for quite awhile after their natural inclination would bring them to the surface, but at last one of them gives in and, releasing his hold of the stake, comes to the air. He is immediately seized, and the tube he holds is cast aside. The other lad is led ashore, his tube opened, and the document contained therein stands as the decision in the case.

Scott Relics at Abbotsford.

The present estate of Abbotsford was formed during the years 1811 to 1817 from various small farms, the first one purchased bearing the "inharmonious designation" Clarty Hole. After Sir Walter Scott's death in 1834 a committee of friends collected £8,000 toward the redemption of the estate, and Mr. Cadell, the publisher, contributed the rest on receiving the rights over Scott's works. The library and museum had been given some years before by the creditors. As his son, Lieutenant Colonel W. Scott, died on his way home from India, the property descended to J. R. Lockhart, his son-in-law, and thence to his daughter's husband, J. R. Hope-Scott, whose daughter held the estate for some years. Many Scott relics are preserved in the house, notably his chair and writing table in the study and his hat and gloves in the hall.—London Standard.

There Was No Applause.

Just before the operation began the operating surgeon said to the students, "Now, gentlemen, no applause, if you please."

When he was convalescing the patient declared that that warning remained his most vivid impression of the ordeal.

"I wondered then how any human being could have the heart to applaud an act that had brought another face to face with death, but later I understood. On account of heart trouble they did not dare administer an anaesthetic, so I was conscious of everything, and in spite of the pain I realized that the surgeon was doing a mighty skillful piece of work. No wonder the students wanted to applaud. They were justified in it.

"'Some years ago they would have clapped the house down after an exhibition of that kind,' an old hospital attendant told me, 'but nowadays doctors discourage any such demonstration.'"—New York Sun.

Forgery In Excelsis.

The most remarkable literary forgery on record was perpetrated in 1870 on Michael Chasles, a French scientist of European reputation. Chasles, who was in his dotage, purchased within a few years from one Vrain-Lucas no fewer than 27,000 autographs. A. M. Broadley tells the story in his "Chats on Autographs:" "Beginning with a supposed correspondence between the youthful Newton and Pascal, Vrain-Lucas proceeded to fabricate letters of Rabelais, Montesquieu and La Bruyere. Before he had finished M. Chasles became the possessor of letters in French, and written on paper made in France, of Julius Caesar, Cleopatra, Mary Magdalene and even of Lazarus after his resurrection." Vrain-Lucas was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and among other forged manuscripts from his pen there were produced in court letters from Alexander the Great, Herod, Pompey, Judas Iscariot, Sappho, Pontius Pilate and Joan of Arc!

LINCOLN'S QUESTION.

"A friend of mine told me that when a boy he attended with his father one of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates in Illinois. My friend's father was a Lincoln man, but the place in which that particular debate took place was a Douglas stronghold.

"Douglas spoke first, and he was frequently interrupted by vociferous applause. The cheering and the handclapping at the end lasted four or five minutes. When Lincoln was introduced the crowd broke out into cheers for Douglas and kept it up for several minutes. Lincoln meanwhile waited patiently.

"When at length the enthusiasm had subsided Lincoln extended his long right arm for silence. When he had partly got this he said in an impressive tone, 'What an orator Judge Douglas is!'

"This unexpected tribute to their friend set the audience wild with enthusiasm. When this applause had run its course Lincoln, extending his hand again, this time obtained silence more easily.

"'What a fine presence Judge Douglas has!' exclaimed the speaker earnestly. Again tumultuous applause followed the tribute.

"'How well rounded his sentences are! How well chosen his language is! How apt his illustrations are!' ending up with, 'What a splendid man Judge Douglas is!'

"Then when the audience had again become silent at his call Lincoln leaned forward and said:

"'And now, my countrymen, how many of you can tell me one thing Judge Douglas said?'

"My friend told me he searched his own heart for an answer and found none. Afterward he asked his father if he could remember anything Judge Douglas had said, and the latter remembered practically nothing. 'But,' my friend said to me impressively, 'even now, half a century later, I can recall practically all that Lincoln said.'"—Exchange.

THE USE OF ARSENIC.

How the Poison Acts When Taken as a Complexion Beautifier.

"You no doubt have observed the lily white complexion of some women. These women are sacrificing years of their lives for that beautiful skin by the use of arsenic," said a chemist of Manchester, England.

"It is a well known fact that thousands of women in all countries of the world use the poison in small quantities to bleach their skin. It is an effective means of whitening and clearing the complexion, but the complexion given by its use has no permanency unless the absorption of the drug be continued.

"Arsenic, as science has long told us, is an accumulative poison. When one takes it either by prescription for the upbuilding of an appetite or for the bleaching of the skin he does not feel any ill effects for several years. The effect of the drug is bracing and makes a person feel like eating. It also aids the digestion. The average user of the poison takes it in such small quantities that he does not realize how much of it will accumulate in his system in the course of four or five years.

"Being an accumulative poison, it often takes that length of time to see the results of the drug. Then the user may complain of not being able to control his fingers or toes. Subsequently he loses control of his hands and arms. Paralysis, superinduced by arsenical poisoning, is the fearful result.—Washington Post.

That Was Enough.

They were talking about the nosey women who knew everybody in the middle of the block.

"Apparently she's got it in for those people who moved away from 35 last week," said he. "What did they do to her?"

"Nothing," said she, "except to borrow her opera glasses the day before they moved and keep them till the day after, so she couldn't get a chance to train them on their back room furniture."—New York Times.

LONDON'S HISTORIC TOWER.

And the Egg From Which Was Hatched the Great Charter.

King John, it would seem, though legally married to Isabella of Angouleme, fell desperately in love in 1214 with "Matilda" or "Maud," "the Fair," the beautiful daughter of Robert, Lord Fitzwalter. This lady, remaining deaf to his entreaties, was treacherously abducted from her father's seat at Dunmow by the king's order and shut up in the round turret of the White tower. On this Fitzwalter made a vain attempt to rouse the people to revolt, but was forced to fly to France with his wife and remaining children. Maud once safe in the tower, King John renewed his suit, but only succeeded in driving her to utter silence, which so infuriated him that he sent her a poisoned egg for her breakfast, and she died early in 1215. A year later her remains were translated to the family vault at Dunmow.

When the news of this crafty murder came to the ears of Fitzwalter he forthwith returned to England and discovered to his joy that the barons were on the point of declaring war against John. He at once placed himself at their head, hoping, it is said, to combine his personal revenge with his duty as an English peer and is indeed supposed to have forced the king to sign the great charter for the express purpose of humiliating his daughter's murderer. Thus from an egg was hatched the great charter. Whether the story be true or false, it is a certified historical fact that the barons held the tower in pledge till John consented to accept the charter and affixed his reluctant signature to the deed.

About a year later, when the war with the barons was at its height and John once more a power, the tower again fell into his hands, and, though the barons laid siege to it, they were repulsed by the king's men. To complete its strange vicissitudes during this strenuous reign the tower became on Nov. 1, 1215, the temporary court of King Louis of France, whom the rebellious barons had summoned to assist in the adjustment of their grievances. Appearing before the gates with a large body of men, he so completely awed the officials that they handed over the keys without striking a blow for their rightful monarch.

The Open Fire.

The open fire is a primitive, elemental thing. It cheers with more than mere heat; it is a bit of the red heart of nature laid bare; it is a dragon of the prince docile and friendly there in the corner. What pictures, what activity, how social, how it keeps up the talk! You are not permitted to forget it for a moment. How it responds when you nudge it! How it rejoices when you feed it! Why, an open fire in your room is a whole literature. It supplements your library as nothing else in the room does or can.—John Burroughs in Country Life in America.

Out or In.

"What's that noise?" asked the visitor in the apartment house.

"Probably some one in the dentist's apartments on the floor below getting a tooth out."

"Ah, then it's probably the Popleys' baby getting a tooth in!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

MILITARY HAZING.

Carried to Brutal Extremes in German Army Schools.

CADETS MAIMED AND KILLED.

Germany is, of all countries, the one in which the science of hazing in military schools has attained the greatest development. The army plays in the fatherland's life a part the importance of which can hardly be realized by an untraveled American. Military service is compulsory, and in time of peace 600,000 men are kept armed, uniformed and drilled. To command that huge contingent 30,000 commissioned officers are necessary.

This large officer corps has developed customs, ethics, even a morality, of its own. These customs and ethics are imitated at an early age by the boy who aspires to enjoy the veneration which German officers generally receive from the populace. Imitation in a young man usually means exaggeration, and some of the little military snobs are on their first day at school a joy to behold. Very soon, however, the precocious stiffness is taken out of them.

A harmless though repulsive form of hazing cadets whose appetite verges on gluttony is called "bacon swallowing." The plebes to be victimized are lined up on the grounds surrounded by a group of second year men. A slice of raw bacon is tied to a piece of string, and the plebe whose name is drawn first is made to swallow the unappetizing morsel. When the sickening sensation of the twine tickling his throat threatens to nauseate him the bacon is pulled out. The name of another unfortunate is drawn, and he is in turn obliged to swallow the bacon, the appearance of which has not been improved by the first man's chewing. On it goes along the line to the next man and up to the last one, and for days and days the sight of bacon, a staple article in German cuisine, will, if it does not spoil the healthy youngsters' appetites, at least remind them that undue haste in assimilating food lacks refinement.

After a few hours spent in "frog's squat" the most dignified and snobbish plebes assume the good natured and perfectly chummy attitude which means that they have been tamed. Swelled heads are quickly noted and their owners made to sit on the floor with their chins resting on their knees, and their ankles and wrists are bound together. A solid stick passed under the knee joints and forcing the forearm back prevents them from moving arms or legs, and they are left there facing one another in an unnatural, cramped and ridiculous position.

Other forms of hazing are the stomach dance, with or without obstacles; finding the keyhole, tossing in a blanket and star gazing. In the stomach dance the cadet is put flat on his stomach on a high table and four tormenters take him by the hands and feet and whirl him around on the table. In the case of serious offenses a few hard objects or "obstacles" are scattered over the table, making the "dance" rather painful.

Then comes finding the keyhole. The cadet stands in front of a locker and is blindfolded. He has to feel for the keyhole with his forefinger. Then another cadet places his head between the locker and the finger, opens his mouth and bites the finger till its owner howls.

Star gazing consists in being made to watch the stars at night through a coat sleeve held like a telescope by two cadets. A third cadet then pours a glass of muddy water in at top of the sleeve.

When a cadet is guilty of behavior unbecoming to a gentleman, disgraces his class by some breach of etiquette or commits some petty theft he is generally sentenced by the "holy vehm," or "court of honor," to the rod. The penalty is applied ruthlessly, a gag being placed in the punished man's mouth to stifle his cries for help.

Of all the forms of hazing the most brutal perhaps is the "gantlet of fire." The freshman upon whom that punishment is to be visited is kept in a dark room astride a wooden chair, to which he is securely fastened. In the next room his tormentors are twisting newspapers into imitation torches, which at a given signal they light with matches. When the torches are burning brightly they form themselves in two lines; another signal is sounded, the door of the dark room is thrown open, and the freshman is ordered to ride between the lines, while he is mercilessly lashed with flaming brands.

However quickly he may run the gantlet, by the time he has reached the end of the blazing pathway his hair, his eyebrows and lashes have been singed to the skin, his eyelids are seared and swollen, his lips blistered, his uniform hopelessly damaged.

One of the surgeons in attendance covers up the sores with bandages and sends the singed plebe to the infirmary for a couple of days. The official report mentions the explosion of an alcohol lamp or some other accident of like nature.

Not infrequently those "boyish pranks" have a tragic ending. More than once cadets have been crippled for life, and there are two cases on record where death was the direct result of horseplay carried too far.—New York Tribune.

Rosa Bonheur's Humble Lover.

When asked why she had never married Rosa Bonheur always answered: "Nobody ever fell in love with me. I have never been truly loved." More than one man, however, really worshiped her. But she inspired such deep respect that no man seems to have dared to reveal his feelings to her. There is a curious example of this fact, taken from the humble walks of life. On several occasions Rosa Bonheur had done service for a workingman who throughout his life spent his savings in buying engravings of her principal pictures and photographs of herself. His simple dwelling was a temple to her kindness. He described himself as "the earthworm in love with a star." The person here referred to—E. A. Bautray of Clermont-Ferrand—tells me that Rosa Bonheur once asked him why he was not married, and he replied by asking her the same question. Here was her answer: "Well, sir, it is not because I am an enemy of marriage, but I assure you that I have never had time to consider the subject."—"Reminiscences of Rosa Bonheur."

Paternalism in Groceries.

"Ma wants two pounds of sugar," said a child to a patriarch in the trade. He consulted a calendar on the wall.

"I guess you'd better take only a pound today," he said, "and go kind of slow on that. The week is only half gone, but you have already eaten up three-fourths of your allowance. Tell your mother so."

The child promised to deliver the report on financial depression.

"That is the only way on earth to keep those people from running into debt," said the grocer. "The system is common in this neighborhood. I do it at the customers' request. Every pay day women with spendthrift husbands and an extravagant disposition of their own deposit enough money with the grocer and butcher to see the family through the week. They instruct us to let no one overdraw the amount, and except in cases where extra food is actually needed we stick to our end of the bargain."—New York Times.

Horrors of Bokhara.

The terrible deeds that once made Bokhara a byword are now prohibited by the Russian government. Prisoners are not permitted, for instance, to be dragged through the streets by galloping horses. Nor are they thrown from the top of the high tower called the Minar Katan. This was the usual punishment meted out to evildoers in the old days. Watched by thousands of spectators, the poor wretches were flung from that giddy height on to the flagstones beneath.

Bokhara has many chambers of horrors, unwholesome for western eyes to see, and the description of which would certainly be unfit for publication. Perhaps the most horrible of these is a pit where prisoners were tortured by vermin, which were so numerous and ravenous that in the absence of human prey they were fed on chunks of raw meat.—Wide World Magazine.

The Retort Legal.

"Sometimes the law seems unjust for the reason that it isn't comprehended," said a judge. "Take the case of the woman prisoner before Sir Edward Coke. This woman appeared in court with her hat on. The judge said sternly:

"'A woman may be covered in church, but not when arraigned in a court of justice.'

"To this the woman replied:

"'It seems singular that I may wear my hat in the presence of God, but not in the presence of man.'

"And she would appear, in her legal ignorance, to have got the better of the argument until Sir Edward Coke retorted:

"'It isn't singular at all. Man, with his weak intellect, cannot discover secrets known to God, and therefore in investigating truth the court must see all obstacles put aside. Accordingly it is fitting that the prisoner's hat be removed and with it the shadow that it casts on her face.'"

He Didn't Like Connecticut.

"I have always had a mild interest," said the lawyer, "in the origin of the Connecticut Yankee's reputation, but I had no idea that it extended so far back until I ran across in the surrogate's office the other day the will of Lewis Morris of Morrisania, made in 1760 and admitted to probate in 1762. It contains this paragraph:

"'It is my desire that my son, Gouverneur Morris, may have the best Education that is to be had in England or America but my Express Will and Directions are that he be never sent for that purpose to the Colony of Connecticut, least he should imbibe in his youth that low Craft and cunning so incident to the people of that Country [illegible] so interwoven in their [illegible] that all their art cannot disguise it from the world, tho many of them under the Sanctified garb of Religion have Endeavoured to Impose themselves on the World for honest Men.'"—New York Sun.

Parrots In a Fire.

In all likelihood no fireman on duty is going to stand around with his hand in his pockets long enough to read the warning, nevertheless it is printed in large type above the bird fancier's desk:

"In case of fire save the parrots last. They are best able to take care of themselves."

"Looks like hard luck for the parrots," remarked a visitor.

"I have no grudge against them," said the bird man. "I am only trying to protect the smaller and more delicate birds. When a fire starts in a bird store most persons who join the rescue party make a grab for the parrots. First aid should be extended to the canaries. They and other small birds are mighty soon overcome by the smoke. The parrot is no phoenix, but unless he is actually reduced to ashes he can put up a pretty stiff fight against a fire and can hold his own until the rescuers make a second invasion."—New York Sun.

The Menu Card In Its First Form.

In its old fashioned form the menu was usually written large on cards of such imposing dimensions that room for one only could be found at each end of the board. In the medieval dinner this aid to selection must have been an absolute necessity, for the medieval dinner was a mine of surprises. It was divided into courses, as are our own dainty meals; but, whereas nowadays the diner has a general idea that fish will follow soup and that entree is succeeded by releve and can conceive generally the sort of demand that each course will make upon his appetite and digestion, there was no possible arguing as to what was going to happen at an early English dinner, and close study fails to reveal the existence of any principle of arrangement.

No Law's Delay Here.

In Perak, in the Malay peninsula, lawyers find no business, for a modified form of trial by ordeal decides all disputes. In place of the legal practitioner the pleader is a native boy who is assigned to one or the other of the sides and is given a bamboo tube in which is sealed the pleading of the person or party whom he represents. When all is ready two stakes are driven into the bed of a stream, and by aid of a bamboo pole the heads of the two boys are submerged at the same time. By grasping the stakes they are enabled to remain under water for quite awhile after their natural inclination would bring them to the surface, but at last one of them gives in and, releasing his hold of the stake, comes to the air. He is immediately seized, and the tube he holds is cast aside. The other lad is led ashore, his tube opened, and the document contained therein stands as the decision in the case.

Scott Relics at Abbotsford.

The present estate of Abbotsford was formed during the years 1811 to 1817 from various small farms, the first one purchased bearing the "inharmonious designation" Clarty Hole. After Sir Walter Scott's death in 1834 a committee of friends collected £8,000 toward the redemption of the estate, and Mr. Cadell, the publisher, contributed the rest on receiving the rights over Scott's works. The library and museum had been given some years before by the creditors. As his son, Lieutenant Colonel W. Scott, died on his way home from India, the property descended to J. R. Lockhart, his son-in-law, and thence to his daughter's husband, J. R. Hope-Scott, whose daughter held the estate for some years. Many Scott relics are preserved in the house, notably his chair and writing table in the study and his hat and gloves in the hall.—London Standard.

There Was No Applause.

Just before the operation began the operating surgeon said to the students, "Now, gentlemen, no applause, if you please."

When he was convalescing the patient declared that that warning remained his most vivid impression of the ordeal.

"I wondered then how any human being could have the heart to applaud an act that had brought another face to face with death, but later I understood. On account of heart trouble they did not dare administer an anaesthetic, so I was conscious of everything, and in spite of the pain I realized that the surgeon was doing a mighty skillful piece of work. No wonder the students wanted to applaud. They were justified in it.

"'Some years ago they would have clapped the house down after an exhibition of that kind,' an old hospital attendant told me, 'but nowadays doctors discourage any such demonstration.'"—New York Sun.

Forgery In Excelsis.

The most remarkable literary forgery on record was perpetrated in 1870 on Michael Chasles, a French scientist of European reputation. Chasles, who was in his dotage, purchased within a few years from one Vrain-Lucas no fewer than 27,000 autographs. A. M. Broadley tells the story in his "Chats on Autographs:" "Beginning with a supposed correspondence between the youthful Newton and Pascal, Vrain-Lucas proceeded to fabricate letters of Rabelais, Montesquieu and La Bruyere. Before he had finished M. Chasles became the possessor of letters in French and written on paper made in France of Julius Caesar, Cleopatra, Mary Magdalene and even of Lazarus after his resurrection." Vrain-Lucas was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and among other forged manuscripts from his pen there were produced in court letters from Alexander the Great, Herod, Pompey, Judas Iscariot, Sappho, Pontius Pilate and Joan of Arc!

LINCOLN'S QUESTION.

Professor James [illegible] McLeary of Mankato, Minn. [illegible]

"A friend of mine told me that when a boy he attended with his father one of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates in Illinois. My friend's father was a Lincoln man, but the place in which that particular debate took place was a Douglas stronghold.

"Douglas spoke first, and he was frequently interrupted by vociferous applause. The cheering and the handclapping at the end lasted four or five minutes. When Lincoln was introduced the crowd broke out into cheers for Douglas and kept it up for several minutes. Lincoln meanwhile waited patiently.

"When at length the enthusiasm had subsided Lincoln extended his long right arm for silence. When he had partly got this he said in an impressive tone, 'What an orator Judge Douglas is!'

"This unexpected tribute to their friend set the audience wild with enthusiasm. When this applause had run its course Lincoln, extending his hand again, this time obtained silence more easily.

"'What a fine presence Judge Douglas has!' exclaimed the speaker earnestly. Again tumultuous applause followed the tribute.

"'How well rounded his sentences are! How well chosen his language is! How apt his illustrations are!' ending up with, 'What a splendid man Judge Douglas is!'

"Then when the audience had again become silent at his call Lincoln leaned forward and said:

"'And now, my countrymen, how many of you can tell me one thing Judge Douglas said?'

"My friend told me he searched his own heart for an answer and found none. Afterward he asked his father if he could remember anything Judge Douglas had said, and the latter remembered practically nothing. 'But,' my friend said to me impressively, 'even now, half a century later, I can recall practically all that Lincoln said.'"—Exchange.

THE USE OF ARSENIC.

"You no doubt have observed the lily white complexion of some women. These women are sacrificing years of their lives for that beautiful skin by the use of arsenic," said a chemist of Manchester, England.

"It is a well known fact that thousands of women in all countries of the world use the poison in small quantities to bleach their skin. It is an effective means of whitening and clearing the complexion, but the complexion given by its use has no permanency unless the absorption of the drug be continued.

"Arsenic, as science has long told us, is an accumulative poison. When one takes it either by prescription for the upbuilding of an appetite or for the bleaching of the skin he does not feel any ill effects for several years. The effect of the drug is bracing and makes a person feel like eating. It also aids the digestion. The average user of the poison takes it in such small quantities that he does not realize how much of it will accumulate in his system in the course of four or five years.

"Being an accumulative poison, it often takes that length of time to see the results of the drug. Then the user may complain of not being able to control his fingers or toes. Subsequently he loses control of his hands and arms. Paralysis, superinduced by arsenical poisoning, is the fearful result.—Washington Post.

That Was Enough.

They were talking about the nosey women who knew everybody in the middle of the block.

"Apparently she's got it in for those people who moved away from 35 last week," said he. "What did they do to her?"

"Nothing," said she, "except to borrow her opera glasses the day before they moved and keep them till the day after, so she couldn't get a chance to train them on their back room furniture."—New York Times.

What Damp Means.

Learn to know what damp means, especially when used upon polished woodwork. Think it means wet and you will be reviling valuable information as "newspaper rubbish." Dip a cloth in hot water, wring it as hard as you can, then shake it in the air and it should have about the right amount of moisture.—Exchange.

The Silver Lining.

"Oh, John," exclaimed Mrs. Shortcash, who was reading a letter, "our son has been expelled from college. Isn't it awful?"

"Oh, I don't know," answered Mr. Shortcash. "Perhaps I can pull through without making an assignment now."—Chicago News.

Getting On.

"Splendidly, splendidly! She's got so now that she can say 'I can't sing without my music' just beautifully."—Detroit Free Press.

No Whiskers on His Sea Food.

Two colored porters paused to rest a moment on their mops in a downtown office building recently. "Boy," said one, smacking his lips, "did you ever eat mushrat?" "Mushrat?" returned the other. "No; I never eat any mushrat. The only fancy sea food I ever fussed with was lobster."—New York World.

LONDON'S HISTORIC TOWER.

And the Egg From Which Was Hatched the Great Charter.

Richard Davey in "The Tower of London" connects the historic edifice with the wresting of the great charter from King John [illegible] King John, it would seem, though legally married to Isabella of Angouleme, [illegible] with "Matilda" or "Maud," "the Fair," the beautiful daughter of Robert, Lord Fitzwalter. This lady, remaining deaf to his entreaties, was treacherously abducted from her father's seat at Dunmow by the king's order and shut up in the round turret of the White tower. On this Fitzwalter made a vain attempt to rouse the people to revolt, but was forced to fly to France with his wife and remaining children. Maud once safe in the tower, King John renewed his suit, but only succeeded in driving her to utter silence, which so infuriated him that he sent her a poisoned egg for her breakfast, and she died early in 1215. A year later her remains were translated to the family vault at Dunmow.

When the news of this crafty murder came to the ears of Fitzwalter he forthwith returned to England and discovered to his joy that the barons were on the point of declaring war against John. He at once placed himself at their head, hoping, it is said, to combine his personal revenge with his duty as an English peer and is indeed supposed to have forced the king to sign the great charter for the express purpose of humiliating his daughter's murderer. Thus from an egg was hatched the great charter. Whether the story be true or false, it is a certified historical fact that the barons held the tower in pledge till John consented to accept the charter and affixed his reluctant signature to the deed.

About a year later, when the war with the barons was at its height and John once more a power, the tower again fell into his hands, and, though the barons laid siege to it, they were repulsed by the king's men. To complete its strange vicissitudes during this strenuous reign the tower became on Nov. 1, 1215, the temporary court of King Louis of France, whom the rebellious barons had summoned to assist in the adjustment of their grievances. Appearing before the gates with a large body of men, he so completely awed the officials that they handed over the keys without striking a blow for their rightful monarch.

The Open Fire.

The open fire is a primitive, elemental thing. It cheers with more than mere heat; it is a bit of the red heart of nature laid bare; it is a dragon of the prince docile and friendly there in the corner. What pictures, what activity, how social, how it keeps up the talk! You are not permitted to forget it for a moment. How it responds when you nudge it! How it rejoices when you feed it! Why, an open fire in your room is a whole literature. It supplements your library as nothing else in the room does or can.—John Burroughs in Country Life in America.

Out or In.

"What's that noise?" asked the visitor in the apartment house.

"Probably some one in the dentist's apartments on the floor below getting a tooth out."

"Ah, then it's probably the Popleys' baby getting a tooth in!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Dolly and Doris.

Nurse—Come, Doris. It is time for you and dolly to go to bed.

Doris—What's the use? Dolly's so tired she can't sleep, and I've got a touch of insomnia.—London Punch.

Not Familiar With the Quotation.

"Ah, Mr. Blinks," said the fair one lightly, "I see you wear your heart upon your sleeve."

Mr. Blinks looked bewildered and hastily pulled down his cuffs.

"I guess maybe it was my red flannel underwear you noticed," he lamely remarked.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In order to get you to try "Sunkist" Oranges and "Sunkist" Lemons and thus learn their excellent quality, we will send you free the beautiful Rogers Orange Spoon here pictured on receipt of 12 "Sunkist" wrappers and 12c to cover charges, packing, etc.

Three-fourths actual size

You will find both "Sunkist" Oranges and Lemons at nearly every dealer's, packed in individual paper wrappers that bear one of the trademarks shown below. If they are not packed thus, they are not the "Sunkist" kind, but an inferior fruit.

"Sunkist" Oranges—Choicest Fruit

"Sunkist" Oranges are California's choicest fruit—the select inspected crop of 5,000 orange growers. No other orange is so sweet, rich and juicy. They are thin-skinned, seedless, fibreless, tree-ripened, firm and solid. All are hand-picked. No fallen, bruised or over-ripe oranges. Each "Sunkist" is a perfect specimen, as delicious as if plucked fresh from the tree.

Buy "Sunkist" Lemons which are of the same high quality as "Sunkist" Oranges—solid and sound. "Sunkist" Lemons are so juicy that two of them go farther than three of any other kind, in the preparation of desserts, sauces and temperance drinks. Tell your dealer you want "Sunkist" Oranges and Lemons.

SUNKIST ORANGES

BRAVERY

I might be brave enough to face
A bitter foe equipped to slay,
I might go valiantly to place
My county's colors high, to play
Upon the bloody field a hero's part,
Inspiring lay or ode,
And win such praise as is bestowed
Upon the strong of heart.
But I were braver if I dared to speak
Alone for virtue where the crowd
Scoffed at me and declared me weak,
Where rich and powerful and proud
Men sought to sway me with their favors, where
I might not hope to hear
A word of praise or win a cheer
For being just or fair.

Yet after he turned traitor, he became an arrant coward and murderer, and no woman even was safe.

United States Senator Moses E. Clapp was re-elected to continue his seat in theCongressional body by a vote of 55 in the Senate while only seven votes went astray. In the House he received 106 to 19 for all other candidates. It is evident that Senator Clapp is the most popular man in our state to-day even tho several others may think they are.

It is indeed interesting to note that the negro race is to have an independent Y. M. C. A. building in Chicago. This will be the grandest negro effort of its kind in the world and will be worth $200,000. Of this amount $66,026.93 were raised by the negroes themselves within ten days and Julius Rosenwald, N. W. Harris and Cyrus H. McCormick each gave $25,000. This leaves less than $25,000 for the Central Committee to raise and they have promised to erect the building if they were not required to furnish more than that amount.

FARMERS SHORT COURSE

The first of the series of six meetings for the farmers of this section was held at the high school gymnasium on Wednesday of this week. By reason of the brief time in which to announce this first session, not very many farmers were present. Mr. C. W. Hale represented the college of agriculture and delivered two addresses, one being on farm conditions and the other on corn growing. Mr. Pope of Rocksbury town gave an interesting account of his experiences with the raising of hogs, and claimed that this branch of farming pays in this country. W. C. Spratt of the department of agriculture in the local high school presented a statement of what the federal and state governments are doing to co-operate with farming operations.

The next meeting will occur on beginning at 10:30 a. m. This ses- Wednesday Feb. 1st at the came place sion will be devoted exclusively to dairying and C. O. Carlson of Erskine will act as director. It is expetced that State Dairy and Food CommissionerWinkjer will also be present and take an active part in the meeting. Local dairymen and creamery workers have promised to assist. This convention promises to be the best of the kind ever held in Thief River Falls and every farmer should make it his business to attend. No fee is charged for this or any other part of this farmers' short course, and the meeting place is large, comfortable and convenient. Citizens of Thief River Falls are also urged to attend at least a portion of the sessions. There is room for all and every person interested in the development of this part of the state ought to encourage the great dairying industry by being present. The meeting begins promptly at 10:30 and closes at 3:30.

The school enrollment for the current year to Dec. 31, 1910 was 1066. Of this number about 75 were nonresidents, most of whom were classed as high school students. Since school opened on January 9th: 25 new pupils have entered making the total to date 1091. The usual spring additions of from 40 to 80 will further increase this to at least 1150. And there are still more than a few persons in this city under 18 not in school.

A visit to the high school special departments this week reveals this information: The boys in manual training are making hat racks, footstools, dining chairs, library tables, wheelbarrows with the wheel to some, towel rollers, etc. The high school cooking classes are making bread, and good bread too; while the 8th grade girls are serving as good pancakes as mother used to make. The sewing classes are taking measurements of class members, drafting patterns, cutting and making useful garments for their own wear. The normal, agriculture and commercial departments are solving problems just as practical. The members of the "short course" are busily engaged with their three months' studies, and the ordinary high school work moves along as usual. The whole machine is working smoothly and without a jar.

The 7th and 8th grade classes are now organized into four rooms and are conducted on the department plan. Each room enrolls about 40 pupils. Miss Porter of Lake Benton is the new teacher in this department and is an instructor of several years of experience. She arrived Monday morning. It might be stated that this is the first year in this city when the total enrollment of the sixth grade has continued through the seventh and eighth. About 37 high school students graduate this year, but almost twice that number will enter from 8th grade.

Some inquiry is made as to what is done with the dishes which the cooking classes prepare. These dishes are of small size to save expense, but curious people should remember that the ordinary girl does not leave herappetite at home when she goes to school. The domestic science teacher is authority for the information, that on Tuesday the aroma of real old fashioned pancakes penetrated the halls of the Lincoln and brought the boys swarming to the kitchen after dismissal like a lot of flies. Nothing is really wasted in the cooking line.

Every child in the grades in this city either drinks out of his own cup or drinks not at all. The water jars are also regularly scalded and an abundance of fresh drinking water is supplied.

Physical exercises are presented to all the children, grades and high, every day, unless the weather permits of intermission in the grades below the seventh.

Dedication of the Lincoln will take place just as soon as the electric lights are in place. This has been stated before, but to satisfy numerous inquiries School Notes will repeat it.

This week closes the first semester and the programs will be rearranged Monday to suit the needs of the students for the second half year.

The state library commission has supplied the departmens of agriculture and household economics with useful libraries. These will be retained six months and cost nothing but the expenses on them.

Many visitors are calling at the various rooms this term. They are all heartily welcome and are urged [illegible] at liberty to enter and leave the rooms without any ceremony. This will conserve the time of teachers and pupils and be more satisfactory to callers.

SUGAR CONSUMPTNON IN THE UNITED STATES.

The people of the United States consume half their own weight in sugar every year. This may seem a startling statement, but if we take the quantity of sugar produced in the United States and add to this the quantity brought from our own islands and the quantity imported from foreign countries, and substract there from the amount exported, we get a grand total of considerably more than 7 billion pounds consumed in the country; and by dividing the population into this grand total, we get an average of 81½ pounds per capita, speaking in rounds terms, for 1901, and about the like quantity for 1909. It is not assumed, of course, that each person necessarily consumes sugar equal to one-half his individual weight; but taking the total consumption and comparing it with the total population in the section known as continental United States, the average yearly consumption of sugar is found to be about 81½ pounds per capita.

In fact, the people of the United States are larger consumers of sugar per capita than those of any other country of the world except England, for which the latest figures show a consumption averaging 86 pounds per capita, against our own average of 81½ pounds per capita. The next largest per capita consumption is in Denmark, 77¾ pounds; followed by Switzerland, 65 pounds; Sweden, 54 pounds; and Germany and Holland, each about 43½ pounds.

Not only is the United states the second largest sugar consumer per capita, but the total amount consumed annually is much greater than that of any other country, aggregating, as above indicated, more than 7 billion pounds per annum, against about 4 billion pounds in England and about 3 billion pounds in Germany.

About one-half of the sugar consumed in the United States is brought from foreign countries, about one-fourth from our own islands, and the remaining one-fourth produced in this country. The total production of sugar in the United States now amounts to 1¾ billion pounds a year, of which more than 1 billion pounds is beet sugar and about three-quarters of a billion cane sugar. It is only recently that the production of beet sugar in the United States has come to exceed that of cane sugar. In 1900 domestic production of cane sugar was twice as great as that of beet sugar, and 20 years ago was more than 60 times as great; but the growth of beet sugar production has been very rapid in recent years, and in 1907, for the first time, exceeded in quantity that produced from cane and has so continued since that time.

Of the sugar brought from other countries, nearly all is made from cane. While about half of the world's sugar is made from beets, most of it is produced in Europe and consumed in the country of production or in other parts of that grand division, while most of the world outside of Europe obtains its sugar supply from cane, grown of course, in the tropical and subtropical sections. Of the cane sugar which we consume, most of that coming from foreign countries is drawn from Cuba, the Dutch East Indies; and smaller amounts from the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America. All of that coming from our own islands—Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines—is cane sugar, while of the domestic product about 40 per cent is produced from cane. The beet sugar of the United States is grown chiefly in Colorado, California, and Michigan, and some in Utah, Idaho, and Wisconsin, while most of the cane sugar is produced in Louisiana, with smaller quantities in Texas, Florida, Georga, and South Carolina.

The sugar "habit" is evidently a growing one with the people of the United States and probably with those of other countries, since the total world production of sugar, including all countries for which statistics are available, has increased 50 per cent in the last decade and about doubled in 15 years. In our own case the consumption has shown a rapid growth, per capita consumption having been, in 1880, 40 pounds; in 1890 51 pounds; in 1900, 59 pounds and in 1901, approximately 81½ pounds.

What is the cost of this enormous quantity of sugar consumed in the United States? This is more difficult to answer. The valuation of that brought from foreign countries and our islands is set down at about 175 millions dollars in 1910, and the stated value of that produced in the United States, at approximately 75 million dollars; though this comparatively high figure when considered by the price per pound, is due to the fact that the valuation is based upon the refined article, while that of the sugar from abroad is the value of the unrefined article in the country of production. If, however, we accept a general average of 5 cents per pound as the retail price paid by our people for the 7 1-3 billion pounds of sugar consumed by them in 1910, we should get a total of $366,000,000, or an average of approximately $1,000,000 a day paid for sugar by the people of the United States.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES.

A rare treat is in store for the Sunday School workers of this section of the State at Crookston on Jan. 28-29, 1911, in a Sunday School Institute held by a combination party of two International workers and two State workers.

THE TOUR PARTY

W. A. Brown, Chicago, superintendent of Missions of the International Sunday School Association. Mr. Brown spent quite a number of years in the Phillipine Islands. He is one of the best informed men on Missions we have ever heard. He is a platform man of rare ability. He is a whirlwind of enthusiasm. Any one who hears Mr. Brown and does not get enthusiastic on Sunday School work especially along the line of missions, is certainly beyond redemption. We want every pastor Sunday school superintendent and officer to hear Mr. Brown.

HUGH CORK, Chicago, assistant general secretary of the International Sunday School Association. Mr. Cork has been general secretary of Minnesota and Pennsylvania and city superintendent of Philadelphia. He is a specialist on House to House Visitation and has written all the leaflets for the International Sunday School Association on this subject. His knowledge of World-Wide work is second to none in the world to-day. He gathered the Sunday School statistics of the world last year for the Worlds. Sunday School Convention. His address on "World-Wide Sunday School Work" should be heard by every Sunday school worker in Minnesota.

A. M. Losker, general secretary, and Paul S. Dietrick, Field worker of the Minnesota Sunday School Association.

Be sure to come the first day and stay through to the last as there will be something good every minute of the time. The citizens of Crookston will entertain, free of charge all who come.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

By the County Superintendent of Schools Pennington County

The teacher's examination that ordinarly would have been held in February have been postponed by order of the State Superintendent, and will be held May 4, 5, and 6th.

Teachers holding certificates that expire March 1st, 1911 if they are now teaching in the county, should write the undersigned at once at his office in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls, so that their certificates may be properly extended, to the time of a later examination.

All teachers now teaching in the new county of Pennington must file their certificates with the County Superintendent in order to be valid. Please attend to this matter at once.

Teachers of schools entitled to State High School examinations should report at once the number of pupils in their respective schools expecting to take these examinations in order to provide the necessary number of questions for examinations. The schools in our county entitled to these examinations are districts No. 25, 219, 37, 54 and 154 or such others as may have pupils sufficiently advanced to take said examinations.

I will be at my office in the Auditorium at Thief River Falls, on the second and fourth Saturdays of each month, until further notice. I respectfully solicit your inquiries as regards school matters, and will be glad to answer same in person or by correspondence.

Respectfully submitted,

E. A. Mostue,
Co. Supt. of Schools,
Pennington Co

that he hands down for the regulation of the House thru his Committees on Rules: (2) The Committees he appoints: (3) His legislative lieutenants: and (4) the manner in which he conducts the business of the session.

• • •

"To the victors belong the spoils" was the policy of the Speaker in the appointment of committees. At least that was the way it worked out. The leading supporters of Burnquist—members like J. N. Johnson, W. J. Nolan, Kerry Conley and Earnest Lundeen-fared slimly in the assignments. On the other hand, leading lieutenants of Speaker Dunn- like L. C. Spooner, R. C. Dunn, Geo. H. Mattson, John G. Lennon, C. E. Stone and Thomas Kneeland- carried away the choicest plums. All of the most important committees, such as appropriations, reapportionment, railroads, taxes, temperance, rules, elections and general legislation, appear to be packed with unprogressives.

Take the committee on general legislation, for example, to which is given all manner of important bills. This committee is composed of Mattson, Fowler, Congdon, McKenzie, Washburn, White, Henion, Westcott, Perry, Nash, C. E. Stone, Lennon, Reed, Nye, Spooner and Bouck. There are two or three progressives in this list, but hardly a fighting progressive among them.

Speaker Dunn named the following Temperance Committee: Palmer, White, Pfaender, J. E. Peterson, Virtue, McKenzie, Webb, Fuchs, A. Nelson, Just, L. D. Brown, Whitting, Hoffman, Westcott and Crane. On county option the committee stands six for nine against. But that does not express the difference, as five of the six are new, inexperienced members, while the nine antis are practically all trained in all the tricks of committee room controversy. It is the general impression that the Temperance Committee was "loaded" to safeguard the liquor people against other things than County Option.

The situation was summed up by a Senator who said: "The Senate has never been organized so good, nor the House so bad, as at this session."

SEEN ON THE SIDE

It looks like a real live session. Tony Manley has appeared on the scene.

John G. Lennon is contagious. Every congressional district seem to be developing at least one legislator of his type.

One of the new members who will bear watching is Clint Robinson, Representative from Winona County. Mr. Robinson is a youngster and a Clapp democrat. He has some good legislative ideas in his head and will fight for them with all enthusiasm of a crusader.

A county option bill will appear in the House before this is read. Although the House Temperance committee is unfriendly to the idea, the bill will be reported out speedily and will then fall into the hands of an adverse organization. I am wondering whether the crowd in control will dare to shut off debate on this question as they did in 1909.

It is a pity that a big, vital issue like reapportionment cannot be determinated on its merits. The new districts are to be manipulated with three things in mind: (1) County option: (2) a tonnage tax or iron ore: (3) the ambitions of numerous politicians. Reapportionment, if it comes, will bring about more harmony among the brewery organization, the steel trust and dozens of dependent politicians.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future referance is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

The city council has taken the initiative in causing a Commercial Club to be organized by calling a mass meeting for that purpose at the Auditorium tonight. Due credit for this should be given Emil Sedlacek the new alderman who was recently appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of A. H. Fasel when he took the county auditorship.

Halvor Levos returned home from Nebraska on Wednesday after spending about three months visiting with friends and relatives in that part of the state. He says that they had a good crop last year and that they are having some winter now. They have almost as much snow as we do and it has been very cold lately.

FIRE WEDNESDAY MORNING

A defective chimney in the residence of Anton Jensen was the cause of a fire last wednesday morning that threatened to consume the entire building before the fire department could supply the water. Three hydrants were tried before one was found that was not frozen. This condition can positively not be laid to the fire boys but whatever the cause or whatever the solution it is very essential that the department study the problem thoroughly and as soon as the cure is discovered that they see to it that it is applied most vigorously.

MARRIED

A happy event of more than ordinary interest took place last Thursday evening when Mr. Oscar H. Liden and Miss Julia Rhodegaard were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Bredeson at the home of the bride. Miss Clara Liden and Miss Caroline Rhodegaard were honored as bridesmaids. Mr. Ole Rhodegaard and Mr. Theo. Liden as bestmen.

With congratulations and wishes to good health of the bride the evening was passed by a jolly crowd with great enthusiasm. The happy couple will make their home at Thief River Falls where the folks of Mr. Liden reside.

MUSIC CLUB MEETS

The music club organized by the ladies of this city gave their first program at the home of Mrs. Halvorson's last Thursday afternoon. The program follows:

Paper, Origin of Music, Miss Alldrind.
Piano Solo, Prelude in Cminor by Rachmaninoff, Ruth E. Godward
Vocal Solo, Elsie Robbecke.
Current events, Mrs. Almen.

Several prelimary business meetings have been held but this was the first program given. The club intends to give short programs at each meeting and also take up a course of study.

The school had a spelling match last Friday afternoon. It lasted 1 hour. The last one on the floor being Lizzie Furstnau. The spelling words were taken from the work that has been given to the spelling classes in the fourth and fifth grades since school started last fall.

The school house was banked up last Saturday of which we are very glad as we can now keep our feet warm.

The attendance in our school is improving with the roads and weather.

Olga Koglin was back to school to day after two days of absence.

The only one we are missing in the school on account of the cold weather is Eevelyn Saugen.

We will be politicians soon if we keep on discussing politics as we have done during the past few days. The subject under discussion is: "Protective tariff" and "internal improvement at government expense.

ALVIN HALSETH DEAD

Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 occurred the death of Alvin Halseth, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert G. Halseth, at the home of his parents on the East side. The deceased had been sick with typhoid fever for several weeks and his death therefore was not entirely unexpected.

Mr. Halseth has lived in this city the past six years and in his work has had his son's assistance. During his work here Alvin has made a host of friends who with his family deeply mourn the death of such a promising young man.

The funeral was held from the home yesterday afternoon.

ELKS CELEBRATED

Four of the local boys went to Crookston last Wednesday evening and were there permitted to ride the proverbial goat of the Elks Lodge. The new members from here were Torrison, Flynn, Lambert and Fealey. They were escorted by H. E. Ives an old member of the lodge. The report is that Torrison proved a worthy and valiant Indian Chief while it is quite certain that Flynn knows considerable more about a barber-shop now than he did before.

THE 1910 CENSUS

A report is out in the city papers giving Pennington county 9506 population and ascribing to this city only 3714 of this number. Well this city has always been a curiosity ever since it was named and now they tell us that one-third of our entire population is attending school and our birth-rate shows over 600 in the past five years. It certainly must be true that we are a young and growing town.

Here we are again, after a long pause.

The frigid weather we now have makes everything come close up to the fireside.

Misses Annie and Laura Stengelson, Lizzie Thompson and Emma Skjolsvold were callers at the home of O. B. Hall last Sunday, and in the evening they visited with the Sagmoen young people.

Anton Gulseth and Johnie Sorenson were business callers in Thief River Falls last week.

Miss Emily Bjorsness who is teaching school in district No. 137 spent Sunday in Thief River Falls.

Mrs. P. Skjorsvold and son Edwin and her grand daughter, Elinda Anderson, were visitors at P. Hagen's place Sunday of last week.

Miss Mabel Skjosvold visited with Inga Hall last Sunday.

Olaf and Tilda Hagen were callers at B. Sagmoen's last Sunday.

Where was Anton last Sunday evening? We won't know, but we presume he was somewhere making either a hit or a frost. That's right Anton, we like to see you make things blow your way.

A number of friends were invited to dine with Joseph Alby in the shanty on his homestead, and at 6 o'clock a bountiful dinner was spread The guests that were present were: Jhon. Hans and Nils Bjornstad, Hjalmar and Albert Olby, Ed Skosvold, Cristian. Johan and Bestefar.

LEAVING THE FARM

An examination of the essays written by boys and girls—in competition for the prizes offered by Messrs. Chapman and Loring, on the topics, "Why I want to Leave the Farm" and "Why I Remain on the Farm," reveals a preponderance of sentiment none the less gratifying because in the presence of recent movements it was to have been expected, in favor of remaining on the farm. More than four-fifths of the writers voiced that sentiment; and they supported it with such an abundance of reasons, that no one need fear that, in Minnesota at least, the drift of the young people away from the farm will hereafter take on discouraging dimensions.

It is doubtful, however, if this gratifying preponderance of sentiment "on the right side" would have been seen, had not the young essayists found the stock arguments of twenty years ago—such as the superior healthfulness of the country the better food, the attractiveness of the scenery and the fascinations of plant and animal life—supplemented by such new arguments as these:

1. That "modern improvements" in the home are now practically as available in the country as in the city. That is, running water, electric hot-water heating plants, electric lights, new kitchen and laundry appliances, etc., can be found in the home of the farmer as well as in that of the townsman; or, if not already there, they are easily "within sight."

2. That the consolidated school is bringing to the country districts educational advantages equal at least to those afforded by the graded schools of the cities; to which is added, in many cases, a special agricultural course which the city school cannot afford. The cheerful optimism of youth, pending the more general "arrival" of the consolidated school, is willing to make the best of the schools as they now exist.

3. That the telephone, the daily free delivery of mails, the daily paper and the automobile, have already made the isolation of farm life, in large areas, a thing of the past, and promise to destroy it everywhere.

4. That the recent improvement in tillage, and in stock-raising and dairying have so increased the profitableness of farm pursuits as to make them compare more favorably than ever before with the gains in other pursuits.

Add to these fresh arguments the fact that the new light which is thrown on Agriculture by the educational work of the Farm School—of the Farmers' Institutes, and by the various instrumentalities of the Extension Division—has so clothed it with attractions for the aspiring among our boys and girls as largely to counterbalance the meretricious allurements of the city callings, and we do not wonder that more than four-fifths of the bright young people who contributed those 2,000 essays decide to "remain on the farm."

TO AILING WOMEN.

No woman can be healthy and well if the kidneys are sick. Poisons that pass off in the secretions when the kidneys are well, are retained in the body when the kidneys are sick. Kidneys and bladder become inflamed and swollen and worse troubles quickly follow. This is often the true cause of bearing down pains, lameness, backache, sideache, etc. Uric poisoning also causes headaches, dizzy spells, languor, nervousness and rheumatic pain.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, a remedy that cures sick kidneys. You will get better as the kidneys get better, and health will return when the kidneys are well. Let a Thief River Falls woman tell you about Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. O. Christofferson, 414 St. Paul Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results and they have also been taken with benefit by other members of our family. We keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house all the time and do not think we could get along without them."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Rember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

OLD SOLDIER TORTURED.

"For years I suffered unspeakable torture from indigestion, constipation and liver trouble." wrote A. K. Smith, a war veteran at Erie, Pa., "but Dr. King's New Life Pills fixed me alright. They are simply great." Try them for any stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Only 25c at all druggists.

GREAT WARSHIP TAKES TO WATER

Battleship Arkansas Launched at Camden, N. J.

IS MONSTER FIGHTING SHIP

Pronounced to Be the Most Formidable Vessel in Gun Power of Any Now Afloat.

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.—Splashed with the traditional bottle of champagne the battleship Arkansas, the largest warship ever constructed in this country, was launched from the yards of the New York Shipbuilding company at Camden, N. J. Miss Mary Macon, daughter of Representative Robert B. Macon of Helena, Ark., was the sponsor for the ship.

There was one unusual feature to the launching, the absence of an official delegation representing the state government of Arkansas. The failure of Governor Donaghey or other official representatives to attend was due to a controversy between the governor and the navy department at Washington over the date of the launching, the governor wanting the launching postponed so that the state could make adequate arrangements to send an official party.

The principal dimensions of the latest and largest addition to the navy are: Length over all, 562 feet; beam over armor, 93 feet 2⅝ inches; draft, 28 feet, 6 inches; displacement, 26,000 tons.

When complete the Arkansas will have the greatest gun power in broadside fire of any ship afloat. The main armament will consist of twelve twelve-inch breechloading guns mounted in six heavy armor protected turrets. For defense against torpedo boat attacks there will be a battery of twenty-one five-inch rapid fire guns. There will also be two submerged torpedo tubes and ten small guns. The total weight of broadside fire will be about 11,000 pounds. The armor belts will have an average thickness of three inches.

The Arkansas will be turbine driven and will have 28,000 horsepower. The vessel will be fitted for a flagship and her complement will consist of eighty-five officers and 1,030 men.

The keel of the Arkansas was laid last January and at present the ship is about 60 per cent completed.

Eighteen Others Seriously Hurt in New York Central Collision.

Batavia, N. Y., Jan. 14.—In a collision between train No. 49, the Boston and Buffalo special, and train No. 23, on the New York Central railroad, at Batavia, four persons were killed and eighteen seriously injured, some of them perhaps fatally. The accident occurred when train 40 was standing in the station waiting for its time of departure. Train No. 23, the Western express, crashed into the waiting train from the rear.

With one exception the bodies of passengers in the wreckage of the crushed sleeping car are so mutilated as to make identification difficult.

ARE INDICTED FOR PERJURY

Four Members of Auditing Committee of New York Bank.

New York, Jan. 15.—The four members of the auditing committee of the Washington Savings bank, one of the Robin institutions which was recently closed, were indicted on a charge of perjury.

The men are Charles K. Lexow William P Youngs, Thomas G. Murphy, assistant postmaster of New York, and Dr. Harry James.

It is alleged the men certified, July 29, in the bank's semi-annual statement, that they had examined all the books of the bank, whereas they had not done so.

SPEAKER AGAIN IS OVERRULED

Progressives Join Democrats In Vote Against Him.

APPEAL MADE BY FITZGERALD

Sustained by the Combined Votes of the Democrats and the Progressive Republicans.

Washington, Jan. 17.—The stirring scene of the last session of congress when the house overthrew Speaker Cannon and took the making of its rules into its own hands, was re-enacted on the floor of the house.

Threatened with what they believed to be an effort to "draw the teeth" of one of the most important of the new rules, Democrats and insurgents by a vote of 145 to 126 rallied to the support of Representative Fitzgerald (Dem., N. Y.) and sustained him in his appeal from the speaker's ruling.

The fight developed as the result of the second attempt to use the new rule which gives the house power to discharge a committee from further consideration of a bill that has been referred to it. The insurgents and the Democrats believed that this rule was iron clad.

When the house convened Speaker Cannon gave recognition to Representative Hull of Iowa, chairman of the military affairs committee, who moved that the house take up the consideration of the military appropriation bill. Mr. Fitzgerald insisted upon the consideration of a motion to discharge a committee, which was upon the calendar, but Speaker Cannon ignored him.

The Democratic member declared that he was entitled to recognition and yelled "You'll overrule me if I make a point of order."

Debate Is Lively.

Insurgents, Democrats and regulars jumped into the free debate that followed. Upon the speaker's refusal to recognize Mr. Fitzgerald the latter raised a point of order against the taking up of the army appropriation bill.

The speaker read his ruling from manuscript. He held that Mr. Hull had the right of way.

"I appeal from the decision of the chair," cried Mr. Fitzgerald, but Congressman Payne of New York, Republican leader of the house, moved to lay the motion on the table.

The Payne motion was the first test of strength. It was defeated by a vote of 155 to 124. When the vote finally was taken upon the appeal from Speaker Cannon's decision, twenty-three insurgents and all but one of the Democrats present voted against the speaker. The result was the defeat of his ruling by a vote of 145 to 126. Congressman Steenerson was the only Minnesota member to vote against the speaker's ruling. The Wisconsin members who voted against Cannon were Cary, Kopp, Kusterman, Lenroot, Morse, Nelson and Stafford.

Representative Saunders of Virginia was the only Democrat voting against Mr. Fitzgerald in the appeal from the chair's decision.

PEARY DIDN'T REACH POLE

Observations Show He Came Within About a Mile.

Washington, Jan. 12.—Testimony before the house committee on naval affairs tended to show that Captain Robert E. Peary had not succeeded in getting closer than a mile and a sixteenth of the North pole. Hugh C. Mitchell of the coast and geodetic survey told the committee that he had handled Peary's observations and the best he could make out of them was that the explorer was honest in his computations but that he had not actually reached the pole. Admiral Chester will review the testimony so that the committee may be in a position to act on the bill proposing Peary's retirement as a rear admiral.

EXPLOSION WRECKS STORE

Number of Persons Killed and Many Injured.

Connellsville, Pa., Jan. 13.—Three young women missing, four persons severely burned and about a dozen girls more or less seriously burned, represent the known casualties attending an explosion and fire which destroyed McCrory's Five and Ten-Cent store here, with a property loss of about $75,000. The assistant manager of the store, a store carpenter and two clerks are the most seriously injured of those who escaped from the burning structure.

New York, Jan. 15.—At the closing session of the National Civic Federation resolutions were adopted advocating the extension of the Erdman act to include all interstate public utilities, especially telegraph and telephone companies, and advocating extended powers to all state departments of labor so that compulsory arbitration might be brought about.

His Strong Point.

"This is a pretty bad report card," said the father of the young hopeful as he looked over the teacher's figures. "You seem to be 'poor' in pretty much everything."

"That's 'cause teacher only puts down th' studies I ain't good in. I ought to have 'excellent' in one thing."

"And what's that?" hopefully inquired the father.

CZARINA OF RUSSIA.

Court Social Fetes Postponed by Her Serious Illness.

FEARS SHE IS NEAR DEATH

Russian Court Anxious About Czarina's Condition.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 17.—Gloom has settled down upon the court circles because of the serious illness of the czarina, whose condition is such that she cannot at present leave her bed. Partial paralysis is said to have attacked her feet and is spreading to her legs and arms. All court fetes planned for the immediate future have been postponed. Specialists and nurses are in constant attendance.

When the czarina returned from taking the cure at Bad Nauheim she was in much improved health, although she still suffered from the extreme depression that had alarmed the czar and the royal family. Recently, it has just become known, the czarina suffered a relapse, following which paralysis in her extremities is said to have developed.

The czarina is said to be possessed of a fear that the life of the czarevitch is in danger, fear for whose safety haunts her constantly.

Ulterior Motives.

"See, here," said the kind hearted lady. "I gave you a piece of pie two weeks ago, and you have been sending one or more of your friends here every day since."

"Youse do me a injustice, ma'am," replied the husky hobo. "Dem guys wot I sent wuz me enemies."—Chicago News.

SHEEHAN CHOICE OF NEW YORK DEMOCRATS

Nominated in Caucus for United States Senator.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 17.—William F. Sheehan was nominated as the Democratic candidate for United States senator at the joint caucus of Democratic legislators, receiving sixty-two votes, four more than a majority of all the Democratic members of both houses. The fact, however, that twenty-five members refused to attend the caucus leaves a strong possibility that when the legislature votes in regular session he may fail to receive the number of votes necessary for election.

Besides Mr. Sheehan's the names of Edwin M. Shepard of Brooklyn and D. Cady Herrick of Albany and New York were the only ones presented to the caucus. Mr. Shepard received 22 votes and Judge Herrick 7.

Senator Depew received fifty-eight of the sixty-seven votes cast in the Republican caucus and his selection was made unanimous.

With peace restored in these shops the strike leaders prepared to continue the fight against the other clothing manufacturers who still hold out.

BATTLE OCCURS IN MEXICO

Fighting Said to Have Continued Sixteen Hours.

This report has reached General Hernandez, commanding the military zone. No details were given, but from the duration of the engagement it is presumed the losses were considerable.

MEASURE FACES DEFEAT IN HOUSE

Compromise Tariff Bill Likely

[illegible] than authorizes [illegible] bill but will not be as sweeping in its terms in this respect as the Longworth bill. There is one feature of the Longworth bill that will be conspicuous by its absence from the committee bill. That is the provision authorizing the board to certify to the house the names of individuals or corporations that refuse to submit data upon the request of the board.

At the last conference an attempt was made to persuade President [illegible] that time would not permit of the passage of a bill creating a permanent tariff board. It was pointed out [illegible] senate Democrats had given notice they would filibuster against [illegible] board legislation if such action [illegible] necessary to defeat it. The president replied that promises had been [illegible] to the country and that it was [illegible] duty of the party to try and pass [illegible] bill providing for a permanent [illegible] board; if the legislation was defeated by the Democrats then the [illegible] would rest on them.

The [illegible] are the president will be [illegible] if he succeeds in [illegible] ing the services of the present [illegible] board.

Where He Drew the Line

Thomas was an old gamekeeper on Sir Greville's Scotch estate, says Sir William Kennedy in "Sport In the Navy." When he was sixty years old he contracted measles and was very ill for a time. Sir Greville, with characteristic kindness, sent the old man some hothouse grapes and a pineapple. The next time the two met Sir Greville asked Thomas how he liked the fruit.

"Weel, Sir Greville," answered the gamekeeper, "the plums was good, but I dinna think much of the turnip."

SENATOR LODGE.

Choice of Massachusetts Republicans to Succeed Himself.

SENATOR LODGE ENDORSED

Massachusetts Republicans Would Return Him to Senate.

Boston, Jan. 17.—When the Republican legislative caucus met to nominate a candidate for United States senator there were present 123 of the 153 members of the two houses. The absentees will not be bound by the action of the caucus. On joint ballot 141 votes will be necessary to elect.

Speaker Walker presented the name of Senator H. C. Lodge for renomination.

The Democratic caucus began business with 120 members present. The total number of Democrats in both houses is 125. A secret ballot for senator was begun.

Two additional Republicans appeared, making twenty-eight absent. The caucus unanimously renominated Mr. Lodge. Seven of the absentees, it was announced, are in favor of the return of Senator Lodge.

The first four ballots at the Democratic caucus were without result, but on the fifth, Sherman L. Whipple of Boston was nominated by a vote of 64 to 34 for John R. Thayer, 11 for Joseph H. O'Connell and 2 for Eugene N. Foss. The vote was made unanimous for Whipple.

STRIKERS BACK AT WORK

Twelve Thousand Employes of One Chicago Firm Return.

Chicago, Jan. 17.—Twelve thousand workers who have been on strike since Sept. 29 besieged the forty-eight factories controlled by Hart, Schaffner & Marx.

As quickly as possible they were put back to work.

With peace restored in these shops the strike leaders prepared to continue the fight against the other clothing manufacturers who still hold out.

BATTLE OCCURS IN MEXICO

Fighting Said to Have Continued Sixteen Hours.

This report has reached General Hernandez, commanding the military zone. No details were given, but from the duration of the engagement it is presumed the losses were considerable.

MEASURE FACES DEFEAT IN HOUSE

Compromise Tariff Bill Likely

[illegible] broader [illegible] than authorized by the Dalzell bill, but will not be as sweeping in its terms in this respect as the Longworth bill. There is one feature of the Longworth bill that will be conspicuous by its absence from the committee bill. That is the provision authorizing the board to certify to the house the names of individuals or corporations that refuse to submit data upon the request of the board.

At the last conference an attempt was made to persuade President T[illegible] that time would not permit of the passage of a bill creating a permanent tariff board. It was pointed out [illegible] senate Democrats had given [illegible] they would filibuster against tariff board legislation if such action [illegible] necessary to defeat it. The president replied that promises had been made to the country and that it was the duty of the party to try and pass a bill providing for a permanent [illegible] board. If the legislation was defeated by the Democrats then the [illegible] would rest on them.

The indications are the president will be lucky if he succeeds in [illegible]ing the services of the present [illegible] board.

Where He Drew the Line

Thomas was an old gamekeeper on Sir Greville's Scotch estate, says Sir William Kennedy in "Sport in the Navy." When he was sixty years old he contracted measles and was very ill for a time. Sir Greville, with characteristic kindness, sent the old man some hothouse grapes and a pineapple. The next time the two met Sir Greville asked Thomas how he liked the fruit.

"Weel, Sir Greville," answered the gamekeeper, "the plums was good, but I dinna think much of the turnip."

SENATOR LODGE.

Choice of Massachusetts Republicans to Succeed Himself.

SENATOR LODGE ENDORSED

Massachusetts Republicans Would Return Him to Senate.

Boston, Jan. 17.—When the Republican legislative caucus met to nominate a candidate for United States senator there were present 123 of the 153 members of the two houses. The absentees will not be bound by the action of the caucus. On joint ballot 141 votes will be necessary to elect.

Speaker Walker presented the name of Senator H. C. Lodge for renomination.

The Democratic caucus began business with 120 members present. The total number of Democrats in both houses is 1[illegible]. A secret ballot for senator was begun.

Two additional Republicans appeared, making twenty-eight absent. The caucus unanimously renominated Mr. Lodge. Seven of the absentees, it was announced, are in favor of the return of Senator Lodge.

The first four ballots at the Democratic caucus were without result, but on the fifth, Sherman L. Whipple of Boston was nominated by a vote of 64 to 34 for John R. Thayer, 11 for Joseph H. O'Connell and 2 for Eugene N. Foss. The vote was made unanimous for Whipple.

MAY HOLD AN EXTRA SESSION

Congress Likely to Have to Work Overtime.

SUCH IS VIEW OF LEADERS

Row Over the House Rules Indicates the Probability of an Extra Session of Congress—Impossible to Dispose of all the Measures Presented on Scheduled Time.

Washington, Jan. 17.—The outcome of another row over the rules in the house indicates the probability of an extra session of congress. At least, this is the view given by the leaders of the body from Speaker Cannon down.

Representative Tawney of Minnesota, chairman of the appropriations committee, was more communicative on the subject than those associated with him in the leadership of the house organization. While he would not permit himself to be quoted he admitted that as a result of the action of the house there was slim chance of the regular business of that body being concluded by March 4.

The experience of many years has demonstrated that appropriation bills require a lot of time for consideration in the house. The leaders of the house at an informal conference following the adjournment of that body figured out that the house is many days short of the time required to pass its annual money matters, exclusive of the programme outlined by President Taft.

Only Eighteen Days Remain.

In the remaining six weeks there are eighteen days left for the consideration of appropriation bills. The army bill now before the house will in all probability require two more days. The diplomatic bill will require not less than two days. The agricultural bill will require six days, the fortifications bill probably two days, the naval bill about six days and the sundry civil bill, carrying nearly $150,000,000, probably twelve days. Then there remains the general deficiency bill, which will take from one to three days. Mr. Tawney figures that at least thirty legislative days will be required for the passage of appropriation measures alone.

The possibility of relieving the congestion of business by frequent night sessions was suggested at the informal conference of the house leaders following the day's adjournment. Mr. Tawney threw cold water on that proposition by declaring that he did not believe a quorum of members could be maintained in the house at night during the considering of important legislation.

APPEARS BEFORE ENGINEERS

Gopher Delegation Urges Improvement of Minnesota River.

Washington, Jan. 17.—Senator Clapp, Representatives Volstead, Stevens and Davis, Attorney G. C. Rasch and State Senator C. A. Johnson appeared before the board of engineers on river and harbor improvements at the war department and urged the improvement of the Minnesota river in conformance with the recommendation of Major Shunk, the division engineer. This contemplates the expenditure of $1,280,000 on the construction of reservoirs at the headwaters of the river and of a series of locks and dams as aids to navigation.

The delegation told of the benefits to commerce that would result from the improvement and also urged the importance of controlling the flow of water in the Minnesota in order to minimize damage from floods.

No announcement was made relative to the decision of the board, but it is believed it will approve the Shunk improvement, and that the improvement will be recommended to congress.

TWO CHILDREN CREMATED

Minnesota Man Builds Fire in Kitchen Stove With Fatal Results.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Jan. 17.—According to telephone information received by Everette Stiles of this city, the home of his brother-in-law, E. L. Botts of Frazee, was destroyed by fire which originated from the kitchen stove and two of the Botts children were cremated before their parents' eyes.

Botts went into the kitchen after arising and, building the fire, started for the barn to do the morning chores. He returned in ten minutes to find his home in flames and barely had time to save his wife from the fiery furnace. The children, Estel, a boy aged five, and Charles, a baby, were burned to death while their parents looked on in hopeless agony. A daughter escaped from the burning structure.

Mother Kills Her Own Child.

The Donkey's Choice.

The vexed question of the future life of animals has troubled the Mohammedan, as it has other religions. The question, it seems, was considered by Allah a long time ago, and all the animals were asked if they wished to enter paradise. They at once said yes, except the donkeys. These were cautious and asked if little boys went to heaven. The answer being yes, they replied, "In that case we prefer to go to—the other place." S. H. Leeder vouches for the fable in "The Desert Gateway."

SENATOR HUGHES IS DEAD

Colorado Member of Upper House Expires at Denver.

Denver, Jan. 12.—Charles J. Hughes, Jr., United States senator from Colorado, is dead at his home here after an illness extending over several months.

Death is believed to have resulted from paralysis. The senator had been ailing for two years, but his real breakdown came at the "chuck dinner" given by the Denver Press club to Colonel Roosevelt here last August.

FURTHER CUSTOMS FRAUDS ALLEGED

Importers of Oriental Goods Under Arrest at Frisco.

San Francisco, Jan. 15.—Serious charges of attempting to defraud the United States customs by undervaluations of imports occasioned the arrest of two prominent importers of Oriental goods in this city. The prisoners are Carl J. Cutting, who has a store in this city, and W. A. Wilson of Oakland, who operates between this port and Yokohama as an importer and tea expert.

A secret agent sent to Japan by the customs department last year is said to have laid the foundation of the present prosecution. Upon his advice that imports were being marked far below their value shipments of Oriental art goods to Cutting's store were held at the local customs house.

Shipments valued by the importer at $20,000 are involved in the present proceedings, but customs officials express the belief that wholesale frauds in the undervaluation of imports from the Orient have been perpetrated in the last few years. They estimate the government's loss by these operations at $200,000 a year.

Friendships.

There are three friendships which are advantageous and three which are injurious. Friendship with the upright, friendship with the sincere and friendship with the man of much information—these are advantageous. Friendship with the man of specious airs, friendship with the insinuatingly soft, friendship with the glib tongued—these are injurious.—Confucius.

HEMMED IN BY LIONS.

A Bad Case of Stage Fright and a Record Stunt In Singing.

Stage fright of the sort that afflicted Whit Cunliffe, at one time a prominent singer in English music halls, is not avoidable. Fortunately also it is not common. At a place where he was engaged in Birmingham one of the attractions was a lion show, some of the beasts being really wild and untamed. Nearly the whole stage was taken up with the "setting"—the animal show.

"Just as I was going on," said Cunliffe in telling the incident, "I heard a hurried rush and confused shouting, and some one slammed an iron gate. I heard a voice say, 'Just in time; he was nearly out.' My music was starting, so I had no time to inquire. I went on the stage.

"In a moment I heard ominous growls and savage snarls mixed with much whip cracking and strenuous breathing. I am never fond of a wild animal show, and I felt distinctly nervous that night. The cloth behind me sagged and swayed, and then, to my horror, suddenly in the wings I saw the huge head and front of a lion.

"I was singing a song called 'I Would,' which had a lot of short verses. As I sang them, my blood running cold, I watched the lion. It seemed slowly to advance, and its baneful eyes glittered in a truly horrible way. I could not go off that side without passing it, so I prepared to 'exit' with haste.

"Turning, I was doubly horrified to see another lion on the other side.

"I was caught like a mouse in a trap. I dared not go off the stage; I dared not show my discomfiture to the audience. There was only one thing for me to do—sing. So I sang in desperation, hoping that some one would come and take those lions away. They told me afterward that I sang ninety-eight verses. But I think that was unkind.

"I wondered how long it would take those two brutes to make up their minds to come into the full glare of the footlights, and I had just prepared to leap into the stalls, regardless of the consequences, when I heard the hoarse voice of one of the stage hands say: ''Ere, Bill, these two chaps are too far forward. Give a 'and with them, will yer?' And, coming up between the two lions, they lifted them bodily. They were papier mache!"

LIFE IN SANTIAGO.

Curious Customs That Prevail In the Capital of Chile.

They have women conductors on the electric cars of Santiago, the capital of Chile. This was made necessary by a war, which took so many men to the front and imposed upon women the work usually done by men. The custom has been kept up, the women having proved equally as efficient as the men had been.

One of the most peculiar customs seen here is the evening promenade in the plaza or park, which is attended by young ladies and young men and quite small boys and girls. They do not mix, but keep quite separate paths.

Yet even the little girls at seven or eight years are finished coquettes. Their eyes languidly observe every man and boy in the plaza, and they take care that each shall receive a due share of their smiles.

Another curious custom which prevails in Santiago and which is joined by those fortunate enough to have fine horses and carriages is the promenade at the Parque Causino, a beautiful park near the center of the city.

A company of mounted police stands in single file in the center of the drive, and the carriages, with uniformed coachmen and footmen and beautifully gowned women and fashionably dressed men occupying the carriages, ride around and around these mounted police.

Sometimes there are two or as many as six rows of carriages, some going in the opposite direction and alternating, the ladies smiling and the gentlemen tipping their hats in a polite manner. This promenading lasts from 5 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 o'clock in the evening.—Logical Point.

The Moslem's Exalted Month.

Ramadan is the month exalted by Moslems above all others. In that month the Koran—according to Moslem tradition—was brought down by Gabriel from heaven and delivered to man in small sections. In that month Mohammed was accustomed to retire from Mecca to the cave of Hira for prayer and meditation. In that month Abraham, Moses and other prophets received their divine revelations. In that month the "doors of heaven are always open, the passages to hell are shut, and the devils are chained." So run the traditions.—Christian Herald.

HOME OF FALCONRY.

The Kirghiz Hunt Wolves and Foxes With Great Golden Eagles.

All wanderers are lovers of the chase, but for sheer love of sport and daring exploits the Kirghiz take the palm. Central Asia is the home of falconry, which was not introduced into Europe until the crusaders brought back falcons with them from their eastern wanderings. But imagine the ambition of the men who fly their birds at wolves and foxes instead of at quails and partridges! Not content with hunting game birds with small falcons, the Kirghiz capture and train the great golden eagles, with which they hunt such game as gazelles, foxes and even wolves.

A well mounted Kirghiz falconer, carrying on his wrist one of these magnificent birds, is a fine sight. The weight of the eagle is such that the owner requires a support for his wrist, and the hunters are usually to be seen with a little wooden bracket that supports the arm against the hip. The eagles are hooded, as all falcons are, but can be used only in winter, when they are hungry and keen. In summer they are fed on marmots and live a restful life, sitting in the sun in front of the tent doors.

When gazelles or wolves are the objects of the chase the eagles are aided by long, sleek greyhounds of a small breed, the dogs running in and pulling down the quarry when the eagles have sufficiently bewildered it.—Wide World Magazine.

A BRILLIANT FOP.

The Youthful Disraeli, Elegant and Eloquent.

AN INTELLECTUAL EXQUISITE.

His Airs and Graces, His Frills and Laces and His Dazzling Oratory In His Early Political Battles—A Pen Picture of His Remarkable Face.

Benjamin Disraeli's career in practical politics began with a series of reverses that might have discouraged a less persistent fighter. Five times the youthful novelist and versatile budding statesman attempted to break into parliament before he succeeded in winning an election, going down to defeat three times at Wycombe and once at Taunton.

In William Flayvelle Monypenny's "Life of Benjamin Disraeli" the author declares that tales are still told in Wycombe of Disraeli's famous first speech from the portico of the Red Lion:

"The youthful orator was now at the height of his dandyism, and his 'curls and ruffles' played no small part in the election. Standing on the top of the porch beside the figure of the lion, with his pale face set off by masses of jet black hair and his person plenteously adorned with lace and cambric, he must have seemed to the spectators better fitted for his role of fashionable novelist than for that of strenuous politician. Great, then, was their surprise when this 'popinjay,' as a hostile newspaper called him, began to pour forth a torrent of eloquence with tremendous energy of action and in a voice that carried far along the High street. He had an instinct for the dramatic effects which hold the attention of the mob. 'When the poll is declared I shall be there,' he exclaimed, according to a Wycombe tradition, pointing to the head of the lion, 'and my opponent will be there,' pointing to the tail. By the admission even of the opposite party the speech was a complete success, and his popularity with the crowd was thenceforth assured."

As to the young orator's appearance at Taunton, Mr. Monypenny gathers these comments of an eyewitness from an almost forgotten book of that time:

"Never in my life had I been so struck by a face as I was by that of Disraeli. It was lividly pale, and from beneath two finely arched eyebrows blazed out a pair of intensely black eyes. I never have seen such orbs in mortal sockets either before or since. His physiognomy was strictly Jewish. Over a broad, high forehead were ringlets of coal black, glossy hair, which, combed away from his right temple, fell in luxuriant clusters or bunches over his left cheek and ear, which it entirely concealed from view.

"There was a sort of half smile, half sneer playing about his beautifully formed mouth, the upper lip of which was curved as we see it in the portraits of Byron. He was very showily attired in a dark bottle green frock coat, a waistcoat of the most extravagant pattern, the front of which was almost covered with glittering chains, and in fancy pattern pantaloons. He wore a plain black stock, but no collar was visible. Altogether he was the most intellectual looking exquisite I had ever seen.

"He commenced in a lisping, lackadaisical tone of voice. He minced his phrases in apparently the most affected manner and while he was speaking placed his hands in all imaginable positions, not because he felt awkward and did not know, like a booby in a drawing room, where to put them, but apparently for the purpose of exhibiting to the best advantage the glittering rings which decked his white and taper fingers. Now he would place his thumbs in the armholes of his waistcoat and spread out his fingers on its flashing surface; then one set of digits would be released and he would lean affectedly on the table, supporting himself with his right hand; anon he would push aside the curls from his forehead.

"But as he proceeded all traces of dandyism and affectation were lost. With a rapidity of utterance perfectly astonishing he referred to past events and indulged in anticipations of the future. The Whigs were, of course, the objects of his unsparing satire, and his eloquent denunciations of them were applauded to the echo. In all he said he proved himself to be the finished orator. Every period was rounded with the utmost elegance, and in his most daring flights, when one trembled lest he should fall from the giddy height to which he had attained, he so gracefully descended that every hearer was wrapped in admiring surprise. His voice, at first so finical, gradually became full, musical and sonorous and with every varying sentiment was beautifully modulated. His arms no longer appeared to be exhibited for show, but he exemplified the eloquence of the hand. The dandy was transformed into the man of mind, the Mantalini looking personage into a practiced orator and finished elocutionist."

Her Declaration.

"Have you anything to declare?" asked the customs inspector.

A RECORD FALL.

It Was Remarkable Not For Distance, but For Results.

Writing in 1841 of a fall from an immense altitude which did not result in death, a French observer, M. Manzini, declares that he had searched in vain in the annals of science for a similar case. We can well believe it.

The victim or patient was a tapissier who had been engaged in putting up decorations on the occasion of the belated obsequies of Napoleon the Great in the lofty dome of the Church of the Invalides in Paris. When busy moving a ladder on the top of a high scaffolding he overbalanced himself and, in obedience to some obscure instinct, jumped clear of the ladder and the platform, crying to his fellow workmen as only a Frenchman would, "Behold me quit!" With these cheerful words on his lips he fell eighty-two feet, bounding in one place off the roof of a little dome, which caused him to describe a second parabola in the air, and landing finally, feet first, on the slate roof of a small sacristy.

Crashing through the slates, he landed astride a rafter, where he was found sitting, surprised but coherent, for he was able to give his name and address when asked for them. He had no recollection of this and became unconscious when put to bed shortly afterward under the care of the great Pasquier. His insensibility lasted a very short time, however, and he made an extraordinary rapid recovery, having sustained no apparent injuries, either external or internal. At the end of a month Pasquier found him quite well.—London Lancet.

THE SQUAW'S SHAWL.

It Must Be Just So to Suit Her Fastidious Taste.

The Indian wears his blanket on the hottest summer days. His theory is that if it keeps out the cold in winter it will keep out the heat in summer, says Ben M. Myers of Oklahoma City.

While he might not care to buy anything else expensive, the price of a suitable blanket is never questioned, but it would be difficult indeed to deceive him as to the texture of any robe.

"A squaw will imitate almost anything that pleases her fancy, but in the matter of her blanket or shawl she exhibits an unusual amount of individuality. With great care and patience she designs her blanket, and when she places the order with the mill man he does not dare duplicate it until she has had an opportunity to wear it.

"If she makes the request that it shall not be duplicated her wishes are regarded, because it is the one article she possesses in which exclusiveness is much coveted and also because what would please one squaw would not appear at all attractive to another.

"The lightweight shawl or blanket is thrown over the head of the squaw, and unless she is able to purchase a bright colored silk kerchief it will serve as her only bonnet as well. It is just as common a sight now to see the papoose securely bound on the back of its mother by a portion of her blanket as it used to be to see the wee head of the Indian babe peeping from the tekas, or frame cradle." - Washington Herald.

Confidence In the Mails.

Having sent a strong box key by mail in an unregistered letter, a clerk was told by his employer that the key "arrived O. K.," but that the means of transportation adopted showed too much confidence. In answer the clerk said, "Ever since a New Year's eve incident of two years' standing my confidence in the postoffice is great." And pressed for an explanation he said: "That evening, or early in the morning rather, a man came out of a restaurant rather the worse for celebrating. He had a wallet in his pocket containing considerable money and was uncertain as to the honesty of his companions. He went to a letter box, forced the wallet through the slot and continued to make a night of it. It required considerable red tape to recover his property, but he got it."—New York Tribune.

Tipping and Treating.

There are two practices in this country that are being justly condemned. One is tipping and the other treating. To be sure, we are not responsible for originating either. Away back in the days of Queen Elizabeth every coffee house had a box bearing the inscription; "To Insure Promptness:" hence T. I. P. Neither is treating an innovation. Some of the Caesars, so says history, used to get huffy when their guests could not see the bottom of the glass often enough. But both have got such a hold on Americans that they have come to be recognized as national habits, and the latter sometimes as a national evil.—Indianapolis News.

NATURE'S PAINT BRUSH.

Colors, Shades and Tints That Cannot Be Reproduced by Man.

Nature paints in the most striking colors and shades and tints with a delicacy never achieved by the brush in the hands of the artist. The highest ambition of the manufacturer of paints is to produce colors which look like nature's. The yhave never succeeded. Grass has a green of its own. So has the leaf and so has the distant ocean. None of these has ever been reproduced and put in cans with a price label on them.

Winter apples now repose on the shelves of the paint chemists. Honor awaits the man who can combine colors to produce the tints of red of the Baldwin and Northern Spy. They come pretty near it, that is all. The same is true of the colors with which October first touches the maple leaf.

If all the paint grinding works in the world were multiplied ten thousand times they couldn't turn out pigment enough in a year to do what nature does in a change from season to season.

Nature's brush is busy everywhere all the time. In the life of a leaf it applies the brush day by day, following with its tints from budding time until it flutters from the branch. It touches the valleys and the hills, the growing grains, the flowering plants Never is it idle.—New York World.

SHE SNUBBED MONROE.

Incident In the Later Life of Mrs. Alexander Hamilton

A striking incident in the later life of Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, who survived her husband fifty years, is told in the words of an eyewitness in Allan McLane Hamilton's "Intimate Life of Alexander Hamilton."

Mrs. Hamilton could never forget the behavior of Monroe when he, with Muhlenberg and Venables, accused Hamilton of financial irregularities at the time of the Reynolds incident. Many years afterward when they were both aged people Monroe visited her, and an interview occurred which was witnessed by a nephew, who was then a lad of fifteen. "I had," he says, "been sent to call upon my Aunt Hamilton one afternoon. I found her in her garden and was there with her talking when a maidservant came from the house with a card. It was the card of James Monroe. She read the name and stood holding the card, much perturbed. Her voice sank, and she spoke very low as she always did when she was angry. 'What has that man come to see me for?' escaped from her. 'Why, Aunt Hamilton,' said I, 'don't you know it's Mr. Monroe, and he's been president, and he is visiting here now in the neighborhood and has been very much made of and invited everywhere, and so—I suppose he has come to call and pay his respects to you?' After a moment's hesitation 'I will see him,' she said.

"The maid went back to the house. My aunt followed, walking rapidly, I after her. As she entered the parlor Monroe rose. She stood in the middle of the room facing him. She did not ask him to sit down. He bowed and, addressing her formally, made her rather a set speech—that it was many years since they had met, that the lapse of time brought its softening influences, that they both were nearing the grave, when past differences could be forgiven and forgotten—in short, from his point of view a very nice, conciliatory, well turned little speech. She answered, still standing and looking at him: 'Mr. Monroe, if you have come to tell me that you repent, that you are sorry, very sorry, for the misrepresentations and the slanders and the stories you circulated against my dear husband—if you have come to say this, I understand it. But otherwise no lapse of time, no nearness to the grave, makes any difference.' She stopped speaking. Monroe turned, took up his hat and left the room."

In this connection it may be said that the oft repeated story of the meeting of Mrs. Hamilton and Aaron Burr many years later on an Albany steamboat is a fiction, but it was probably suggested by the Monroe incident

Hanged For Stealing Golf Balls.

Some sharp punishment has lately been meted out to men convicted of golf ball stealing, and one boy was sentenced to six strokes with the birch. The offenders, however, may congratulate themselves that they live in a merciful age.

In 1637 at an assize in Banff a lad of the town, having confessed to stealing a few trifles, including some golf balls, was actually hanged for the offense. The indictment ran that he was "ane lewd liver and boy of ane evill lyiff, and conversation, and ane daylie remainer fro the kirk in tyme of dyvyne worschip." The humane judges "ordanit the said Francis to be presentlie tackit and cariet to the Gallows hill of this burgh and hangit on the gallows thereof to the death."—London Graphic.

Illusions of Life.

Life is like a beautiful and winding lane—on either side bright flowers and beautiful butterflies and tempting fruits, which we scarcely pause to admire and to taste, so eager are we to hasten to an opening which we imagine will be more beautiful still. But by degrees as we advance the trees grow bleak, the flowers and butterflies fall, the fruits disappear, and we find we have arrived—to reach a desert waste.—G. A. Sala

DIRECT LEGISLATION BEING CONSIDERED

Numerous Bills Providing for the Initiative, Referendum and Recall in Both Houses.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 26, 1911.

No story of the legislature would be complete without an occasional chapter on Zollman. The incident which inspires this observation is especially significant and interesting.

S. A. Stockwell of Minneapolis is a former state Senator. When in the Senate Chamber a few days ago he was accosted by a Mr. Blank of a well known printing firm who inquired why he was there. "I am interested in direct legislation." answered Stockwell. "By that you mean the initiative and the referendum?" "Yes, and the recall," said Stockwell. "They have the initiative and referendum in South Dakota and the ballot is several feet long?" ventured Mr. Blank. "Yes but in Oregon th ballot is more like the page of a newspaper," said Stockwell. "I know," returned Mr. Blank, "we are printing some sample of them both." "Who is having them printed?" asked Stockwell. "Zollman, was the answer.

The brewers are busy. Zollman is attorney for the Minnesota Liquor Dealers Association. That organization is obviously leading the fight against direct legislation. Backed by every other kind of special interest, the brewers are arming their legislative agents with arguments with which to oppose the progressives in their battles for the initiative, referendum and recall. With these brewery printed documents as evidence, the professional politicians will hold up to legislators "the spectre of expense and the plea of impracticability."

It is not at all strange that Zollman is so vitally interested in the defeat of direct legislation. That issue means more than all other reforms combined. It is a dozen times more important, economically and morally, than county option, because it means county option and a vast deal of democracy besides. With the coming of an honest and practical initiative and referendum law, brewery domination of the politics of the state will cease. That is why Zollman and the organized brewery influence are printing arguments for the use of their allies in the legislature.

Citizens of the state should not be misled by the number of direct legislation bills that have been introduced are in the hands of committees. But in the House, More than a half dozen that honest bill in the hands of a real progessive. The number of bills on the subject is not so much an evidence of popularity, as it is desperate enemies of the idea to bring about controversy and discord among the various authors of these bills. To dissipate the progressive strength is always the initial manoeuvre of the alamagamated special interests led by the brewers.

Then, too, with enemies or only half hearted supporters of the principle in control of the legislative machinery, the poorest of the numerous bills would be the most likely to pass. Since it looks to me at this time as though the direct legislation bill introduced by L. C. Spooner, of Morris, would be the one given the right of way. I want to call attention to one bad feature of his measure, which would make it difficult of passage, and possibly ineffective if it should become a law. The Spooner bill provides for the initiative, referendum and recall, all in a single constitutional amendment. It is generally agreed that it would require an amendment to one section of the State constitution to give the people the power to use the initiative and referendum in legislation, and another amendment of another section for the recall. No one bill should change two different sections of the constitution.

But, assuming that this is not a vital defect in the Spooner bill, here is the deplorable phase of it. There are members of the legislature who believe in the initiative and referendum, yet do not believe in the recal. Others believe in the recall, but not in the initiative and referendum. By compelling members to vote on everything in the one bill, Spooner would invite and unite the opposition of all honest opponents of the different features of direct legislation, which would probably defeat the measure.

Mr. Spooner spoke and voted against the initiative and referendum bill in the 1909 legislature.

Another of the direct legislation bills was introduced by Albert Pfaender, of New Ulm, who also voted against such a measure in 1909. The Pfaender bill is not entitled to consideration, because it provides that a law can be initiated only upon the petition of thirty-five per cent of the voters, which is four times larger than the usual percentage required to initiate. This provision would render the law practically worthless. All of the other measures on this subject were referred to the Committee on Elections, but the Pfaender bill was sent to the Committee on General Legislation. I have no means of knowing whether this exception was intended to obstruct or give preference to the 35-per cent bill.

Among the House initiative and referendum bills that meet with the approval of progressive organizations are those introduced by W. A. Camp- " of Minneapolis, and J. N. Johnson, of Canby. These two members have agreed to become the joint authors of a bill and that is the measure which should be supported by the friends of the idea.

In the Senate, Olai A. Lende, of Marshall, and John Moonan, of Waseca, each introduced an initiative and referendum measure. Both bills are good, but Lende and Moonan will jointly champion one of these, which solves the Senate situation.

GOSSIP OF THE GAME.

The Minneapolis Tribune very grossly misrepresented Lieutenant Governor Gordon. That paper's re- " his speech at the recent St. Paul banquet credited him with saying that county option was a dead issue in the legislature. There was absolutely nothiug in his address that could be construed into such an interpretation. If county option conditions had prevailed at the reporters table it is not [illegible] that this injustice would have been done Mr. Gordon

Dr. O. Hauge, of St. Paul Park, has an important educational bill before the House. It provides for the election of county superintendenis of schools by a County Board of Directors of Rural Schools. It excludes all city and independent districts, giving only to the rural districts over which he has supervision the right to a voice in the selection of the Superintendent.

The Nolan publicity amendment to the rules was adopted, as I predicted last week that it would be. Messrs, Brown and Bouck of the Little Falls district and Andrew Anderson, of Washington County, voted against it, but after taking note of the landslide Mr. Anderson requested that his vote be change from "no" to "ayes." The record, however, does not show him voting at all. Mr. Spooner bitterly arrainged the rule as being the product of spite and impracticability, but voted for it.

New forces are working to create new allignments in both branches. I shall attempt to analyze and discuss them in an early letter.

The "third house" continues to increase. The Capitol Commission might be requested to install more entrances to give employment to the generous number of door keepers provided under the rules.

GOLD MEDAL FOR LONG SERVICE

Patrons of St. Hilaire Creamery Rewarded Charles Gustafson for long faithful service.

The St. Hilaire Creamery Ass'n held their regular annual meeting of the stockholders last Monday. The directors held their annual meeting on Saturday to examine the report of the secretary and treasurer. Everything was found in fine shape and reports accepted.

Mr. C. Gustafson, who has been treasurer of the association ever since its organization, handed in his resignation because of having removed to Thief River Falls. He attended the officer's meeting on Saturday going on to Crookston to spend Sunday. He returned on Monday to attend the stockholders meeting and to relinquish his office to some successor. He had been one of the leaders when the association was organized and had taken an active part in making it strictly co-operative excluding anyone but farmers and dairymen from being stockholders. Though an officer himself he had continually championed the cause of the lowest salaries for officers consistent with good business management and the exercise of economy everywhere.

He set a good example by taking the lead in selecting and improving his dairy stock until it can be safely said that he was realizing as big income per cow as anyone in this section of the country.

His fellow stockholders and co-operators realized and appreciated his untiring work for the good of the association and when it became known that he would not serve again in any official capacity the stockholders joined together to purchase and present to Mr. Gustafson, a gold medal in consideration of his Long and Faithful Services.

The medal is truly a work of art and of itself is very valuable but to Mr. Gustafson it is even more prized because of its associations.

SUPREME COURT DECISION FAVORS PENNINGTON

Declares Election Duly Carried, Organization Duly Completed, and Forbids Positively all Further Contest.

We give herewith in full the decision handed down last Friday by our State Supreme Court in the writ of Prohibition forbidding the Judges of the 14th Judicial District from entertaining any election contest what so ever. From the foliowing it will be seen that all hope of any future contest is entirely obliterated.

1.State ex rel v. District Court, 107 Minn., 437 to the effect that where two inconsistent statutes, relating to the same subject matter, are both incorporated into a general revision, the court will in construing them inquire as to the date of the respective enactments, and give effect to the latest expression of the legislatuure, followed and applied.

2. Section 336 and 339 R. L. 1905 both provide for the contest of elections "upon questions submitted to popular vote," but under entirely different procedure. The two sections are in conflict, and it is held, under the rule above stated, that Sec. 336 embodies the latest expression of the legislature upon the subject of such contests and prevails over Sec. 339 in so far as involves contests of that character.

3. The question whether a new county shall or shall not be created and established, submitted to the voters under the statutes of the state, is independent and distinct from a proposition changing county lines, and not contestable under Sec. 339 authorizing boundary line contests.

Let a writ absolute issue.

State of Minn. Supreme Court
October Term, A.D. 1910
No. 262.
State ex rel County of Pennington, ... Plaintiff
Versus OPINION
Dist. Court of Red Lake
Co. et al,...... Defendants.

A proposition for the creation and organization of Pennington County out of territory forming a part of Red Lake County was duly and regularly submitted to the electors of the county at the November, 1910, general election. Returns of the election were duly made to the Secretary of State, and on November 22nd, 1910, duly canvassed by the State canvassing board, who certified that the proposition had received a majority of the votes cast upon the question. Whereupon on November 23rd the governor of the state duly issued his proclamation, as required by law, (Sec. 386 R. L. 1905) declaring and proclaiming that the new county had been duly created and organized. Thereupon the board of county commissioners elect in connection with the creation of the new county properly qualified and entered upon the work of completing the county organization. On December 16th, 1910, a contest of the election was instituted under the provisions of Sec. 339,R.L.1905, in and by which it was charged that the proposition to establish the county had not in fact received a majority of the votes cast. The statute under which the contest was instituted was in all things complied with and if thereby authorized was regular in all respects. Relator then sued for an alternative writ of prohibition from this court, directing respondents the contestant and the judges of the district court before whom the contest was pending, to show cause why further proceedings therein should not be absolutely restrained. At the hearing in this court respondents moved to quash the writ. This motion presents the only question involved, namely, whether a contest of an election for the creation of a new county may be maintained under the provisions of Sec. 339, R. L. 1905. It is the contention of relator that if a contest of the election in such a case may be maintained at all, none being provided for by the statute authorizing the submission of the question to popular vote, (Chap. 143 Laws 1893) it must be prosecuted under Sec. 336 R. L. 1905. The solution of the question involves a construction of the two statutes mentioned.

1. Section 336 is broad and comprehensive and provides that any voter may contest the election of any person declared elected to any state, county or municipal office, or thedeclared result upon a constitutional amendment, "or other question submitted to popular vote," by proceeding in the manner therein pointed out. It provides for an appeal to the proper court, to be taken within ten days after the result of the election has been duly declaread, and that the notice thereof shall specify the points of the proposed contest; it providees for the service of notice upon the contestee when the contest relates to the election of an officer, upon the Secretary of State when the matter submitted to popular vote affects tthe entire ler than a state state or any subdivision thereof larger than a county, upon the county auditor when it affects a single county, and in all other cases upon the municipality affected. It also provides that the contestee may serve notice within ten days after the perfection of the appeal, of an intention to offer evidence upon points not specified in the contestant's notice, and that such notices shall constitute the pleadings in the case, which shall be tried and determined in the manner provided for the trial of civil actions. Sec. 339 provides that any voter may contest the election for the removal of a county seat, changing the boundaries of a county, "or on any other question submitted to popular vote, by proceeding as therein directed. The contestant is required to serve upon the county board, or a member thereof, within thirty days, a notice specifying the grounds ofthe contest and file the same with the clerk of the district court within ten days thereafter. It further provides that "no appeal to said court shall be required.

2. These statutes, at least as respects contests upon questions submitted to popular vote, are in irreconcilable conflict. Both provide for a contest upon those questions but prescribe different methods of procedure. It would be impossible for either lawyer or layman to determine in advance of a court decision, under a particular contest might be maintained. If commenced under 336 the court might decide that it should have been prosecuted under 339, or, if under the latter section the contest might be dismissed because not commenced under the former. Both sections provide for a contest upon questions submitted to popular vote". Sec 336 requires the contest to be commenced within ten days after the votes have been canvassed, by service of notice of appeal upon the county auditor, and 339 requires a notice of contest to be served upon the board of county commissioners or a member thereof within thirty days, without appeal to the court. Nor can the court without legislating declare that particular questions may be contested under 339 and under 336. While it is true that certain questions, for instance the voting of bonds for the construction of a court house or other purposes, whether the county or township system of caring for the poor shall be adopted, relate exclusively to county matters and might well be held contestable under 339, yet such matters are also included within the provisions of Sec. 336, and a decision holding either applicable to a particular contest would be founded not upon a construction of the conflicting statutes, but upon the mere ipse dixit of the court. It is clear therefore that one or the other of the sections must yield and give way, to the end that definiteness and certainty may take the place of the present conflict and confusion.

3. The two statutes had their origin in sections 52 and 53 and Sec. 56 of Chap. 15, G. L. 1861; Secs. 52 and 53 being the present section 336 and Sec. 56, the present section 339. Section 339 has come down, through the revision of 1866 and various subsequent amendments to the general election law, and was incorporated in the revision of 1905, without substantial change. Originally it provided as at present for contests of elections involving county seats, propositions to change county lines, or any other question submitted to popular vote. Section 336 has undergone many changes since its enactment, the tendency being, since the revision of 1886, to enlarge and extend its provisions. In fact all legislation changing the law of election contests since 1886, has been by way of amendment to that section. Its history is outlined in a general way in State ex rel Village of Excelsior v. Dist. Court 107 Minn., 437. Prior to the revision of 1905, the omnibus clause authorizing contests upon any question submitted to the popular vote was found only in Sec. 339. That clause was by the revision also inserted in section 336. The manifest purpose of this was to include all election contests, excluding legislative, in one comprehensive system, the procedure o fwhich fully protects the rights of all interested parties. If this be not so then we must ascribe to the legislature a deliberate intention to confuse the law on the subect, and of granting one right with alternative inconsistent methods of aserting it. Obviously this was notthe intention. On the contrary the revision of the section was made with care and discloses an evident purpose to simplify the statutes and to produce one workable system of contests applicable alike to all questions submitted to popular vote, and other contests provided for. The change so coming about is the latest expresion of the legislature upon the subject and, within the rule of the Excelsior case, must be given force and efect to the exclusion of the provision sof Sec. 339, authorizing similar contest but under entirely different procedure. The failure of the commission to remove the omnibus clause from the latter section was clearly an inadvertence. In fact the whole section might well have been omitted from the revision for all contests there provided for may now be maintained under Sec. 336. We do not how ever hold that the section was rendered wholly inoperative by the change. But it must be limited, to give effect to the clearly disclosd intention of thelegislature, to the specific questions there provided for, namely, the removal of county seats, and changing the boundary lines of counties. All contests of other questions submitted to popular vote are governed by Sec. 336.

4. But it is contended that the creation of a new county is in effect a change of the boundary lines of a county and that an election therefor may be contested under that part of Sec. 339,expressly providing for a contest of boundary line elections. IN THIS WE DO NOT CONCUR. The creation of a new county is entirely separate and distinct from a proposition merely to change the boundaries of existing countis The creation of new counties, though incidently affecting county lines, involves the state at large and is now exclusively committed to legislative control. The question whethr a pro posednew county should or should not be created was not, prior to Chap. 143, Laws 18 and the original enactment of Sec. 339 in 1861, had no reference to questions of that character. It has perhaps applied to such questions since the act of 1893, but only under the general clause permitting the contest of questions submitted to popular vote

It follows:

THAT NO CONTEST OF THE ELECTION ESTABLISHING PENNINGTON COUNTY OF WHICH THE COURT BELOW HAS JURISDICTION WAS INSTITUTED BY CONTESTANT, AND THE WRIT OF PROHIBITION PRAYED FOR IS GRANTED. THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE 14TH JUDICIAL DISTRICT IS THEREFORE RESTRAINED AND PROHIBITED FROM FURTHER PROCEEDING THEREIN.

THE PROGRESSIVE FEDERATION

Will Use Preliminary Postal Ballot. Purpose Improvement on Minnesota River.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 24, 1911.

Arrangements were recently completed in Washington for the launching of an organization which promises much for the cause of the progressives in both parties. The movement has for its object the capture by the progressives of the national conventions of both parties. It starts out in its career under the name of the Progressive Federation, with headquarters in Washington. Among those at the head of the federation is George H. Shibley, president of the People's Rule League of America, Lincoln Stevens, magazine writer, and other well known public men and writers.

The federation has issued a statement which sets forth the objects which it seeks to attain and the means which will be employed.

"At the primary election within the two great parties the progressive voters will wish to elect really progressive delegates and pledge them."

In order to give the progressive voters of both parties an opportunity to express themselves as to their choice for president it is proposed to inaugurate a preliminary postal ballot. Voters will be called upon to name their first, second and third choice for president, and to pledge themselves to vote only for pledged progressive delegates who have declared for a first choice, a second choice and a third choice for presidential nominee.

"Widespread use of this preliminary postal ballot," continues the statement, "followed by two or more additional ones before March 1, 1912, is expected to result in a general agreement as to which of the progressive presidential candidates in each party should be named at the primary election."

"If the voters of 1912 elect pledged candidates and they are trustworthy, the people will win everything. The delegates to the county conventions will vote ~~only for pledged progres~~sive delegates to the state conventions, and in these conventions the delegates will vote only for pledged progressive delegates to the national conventions."

The progressives in both parties are for the most part of the opinion that the Progressive Federation marks the beginning of a movement in the right direction and that its success will depend largely upon the men at its head. Victor Murdock, the Kansas progressive, takes this view. In his opinion and judgment any plan which has for its object the giving of the people an opportunity to express their choice as to presidential candidates is worthy of success. This view is quite generally shared by the other progressive republicans, as well as progressive democrats.

The Taft legislative program seems to be pretty well shattered, with but little chance for the passage of any of the so-called Taft measures. Indeed, it is pointed out that congress will be lucky to adjourn by March 4 with all of the appropriation bills passed and out of the way. There will have to be some hard and fast work from now on until March 4 to clear the decks of the appropriation bills. At this writing there are but little more than a baker's dozen legislative days left, with several of the big appropriation bills still undisposed of. In the Senate the Lorimer case is still on the boards, with the prospects of remaining there well up towards the close of the session. The same is true of the resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution to permit popular election of United States senators. This is a subject which will mean protracted discussion for some time to come.

At the beginning of the session Taft seemed disposed to push such matters as a permanent tariff commission is not even a possibility this session, and perhaps not for a few years to come. There are many who think that if the president had been more urgent with the so-called party leaders this much-needed legislation would have been enacted into law at this session.

For awhile it looked as though the Longworth bill, which was a pretty good measure, all in all, would be passed. It had the support of the president and the progressives. It provided for a tariff commission with ample powers, which was to report to congress and the president. The Dalzell tariff board bill, recently adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means, is a reactionary measure and one that the progressives do not approve. It does not give the tariff board scarcely any power so far as summoning witnesses, and it merely authorizes the board to make reports to the president and the House Committee on Ways and Means, or the Senate Finance Committee whenever called upon. It is also to be remembered that the Dalzell bill has been adopted by the reactionary members of the Ways and Means Committee in opposition to the wishes of the president.

There is a possibility that even the Dalzell bill will be doomed to defeat this session. The chances are that the best that will be done will be to save the present tariff board from utter extinction by a provision in the sundry civil bill carrying an appropriation of $500,000. This item will be put in the bill in question for the purpose of continuing the work of the tariff board. Should this plan be carried out it will mean that there will be no tariff commission during this administration.

The next congress cannot in the very nature o f things accomplish much in the way of constructive legislation. With democratic control in the House and republicans in control of the Senate, it is pointed out that any attempts at constructive legislation will be blocked in the Senate. Even the passage of a bill for revision of the tariff is doubtful, for the reason that should such a bill pass the House it is not likely to be able to run the gauntlet of high protection republicans and protection democrats in the Senate.

At its best the next congress will not be in position to do much, beyond excessive talking and playing politics. The indications are that there will be plenty of both.

A. B. Kaercher, of Ortonville, and C. A. Johnson, St. Peter, appeared before board of engineers for rivers and harbors at the meeting to hear arguments in favor of the improvement of the Minnesota river. The hearing was in charge of Congressman Davis, who called upon Congressman Volstead, Congressman Stevens and Senator Clapp, all of whom spoke favorably of the project. Mr. Kaercher and Mr. Johnson made brief statements.

Before leaving for Minnesota Mr. Kaercher made arrangements to have a bill introduced in the House and Senate authorizing the Minnesota River Improvement and Power Company to erect maintain and operate three dams across the Minnesota River. Mr. Volstead will introduce the bill in the House and Senator Nelson in the Senate. In case the board of engineers for rivers and harbors acts unfavorably on the Shunk report on the Minnesota River improvement scheme, the officers and di-

DEAD MAN TAKEN OFF TRAIN

Conflicting Identifying Marks Give Case a Touch of Mystery

Soon after the north bound Winnipeg Soo line flyer left Erskine on Thursday the conductor found a man dying in one of the coaches. Doctors were called at this stop, who pronounced the man dead as a result of strangulation, although no marks of violence were visible on the body.

On arriving here the police took the body to the Torrison undertaking parlors until relatives could be reached. Upon examination it was found that the man was traveling on a ticket made in favor of L. R. Lowes, Carrington, Ont. Relatives were communicated with and in the meantime the local lodge of Odd Fellows took charge of the body. Lowes having been a member of that organization.

Upon the arrival of Glen Lowes, of Miami, Man., brother of L. R. Lowes, he declared the body not that of his brother and wholly unknown to him.

Further examination brought forth the following description—a young man 28 or 30 years of age, 5 ft. 3 in. tall, grey eyes, dark hair. He wore a dark greenish suit, summer coat and derby. The suit shows that it had been purchased at Utica, N. Y., and bore the name "Hemingstraught" in the pocket.

Coroner Swanson was called from St. Hilaire to view the remains.

By telegram from St. Paul from C. P. Reynolds' brother-in-law of Lowes who it was feared had met with foul play, the mystery was cleared up. Mr. Reynolds stated that he knew Lowes had sold a ticket to a scalper some time ago, and that Hemingstraught undoubtedly had obtained it from the scalper. He said that he had received a letter from Lowes, who, instead of going to Regina, Sask., had gone to Kansas, and was safe and well.

P. S.—A later dispatch says above letter was written before starting for Kansas and it may yet prove to be an "Unsolved Mystery."

Another dispatch from Utica, New York, says that Hemingstraught is known there and that a man is on the way here to identify the body and to bring it back to New York.

MAIL CLERKS MAY WALK OUT

South Dakotans Plan to Resign in a Body Feb. 15.

ASK FOR REINSTATEMENT

Ex-Governor Elrod Championing the Cause of the Men and Is Endeavoring to Secure Former Positions for Those Who Have Been Suspended. Congress Declines to Vote Compensation for Overtime.

Watertown, S. D., Jan. 24.—The refusal of Superintendent Perkins of the Tenth division of the railway mail service to reinstate the men on the Tracy-Pierre line when they offered to return to work in accordance with the recommendation of Senator Crawford has precipitated a crisis in the situation. Ex-Governor S. H. Elrod has championed the cause of the men and has had circulated for the signatures of the clerks on the Brookings-Pierre line a petition to Perkins for the reinstatement of the men now suspended and in the event of his refusal has volunteered to take the matter up with the South Dakota congressmen. Blanks are leaving Watertown for the signatures of all railway mail clerks in the state declaring their determination to resign in a body on Feb. 15 if the reinstatements are not made by that time.

Traveling men say sentiment in towns over the entire district is solidly in sympathy with the men.

FOR RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

House Refuses to Provide Compensation for Overtime.

Washington, Jan. 24.—Efforts made again by the Northwestern members, among them Representatives Martin of South Dakota and Kendall of Iowa, to force the adoption in the postoffice appropriation bill of an amendment providing compensation for railway mail clerks who work overtime went for naught.

The house refused to follow the lead of the Northwestern members. Representative Martin expressed the opinion that the debate in the house would doubtless accomplish what had been sought by those who have taken part in the debate during the past few days in the interest of the railway mail clerks. The bill provides for the appointment of more than 1,000 additional clerks. Heretofore the department has not employed all the men made available by congress. Mr. Martin expressed the opinion that beginning July 1, when the new fiscal year begins, assignments of additional clerks would be made to Western routes, where the men are dissatisfied because, as they charge, they are compelled to work overtime without being allowed compensation.

Representative Martin believes the department will assign to each route a sufficient number of men to do all the work, thus obviating the necessity for labor during the lay off period

An Extreme Case.

TO HAVE WHITE SLAVE LAW

Drastic Measure Introduced In Montana Senate.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 24.—A drastic "white slave" bill has been introduced in the state senate by Senator Edward Donlan of Missoula.

Sections of the bill provide punishment for the procurement of women and girls for the purposes of prostitution and for inducing them to enter upon a life of shame. The seduction and prostitution of women and girls and receiving of money from women engaged in prostitution is made a felony, punishable by imprisonment from two to twenty years and a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $5,000. Restraining girls or women in houses of ill fame to liquidate any debt dues or obligation incurred is, in the bill, punishable by fine and imprisonment. Cohabitation with a woman of ill fame also is made a felony, punishable by imprisonment for from one to twenty years.

Representative O'Hearn of Missoula has introduced a similar measure in the house.

SNOWFALL IS VERY HEAVY

Chinooks Less Effective Than Usual in Northern Montana.

Fort Benton, Mont., Jan. 24.—In this section of Northern Montana an exceptionally dry season has been followed by an exceptional fall of snow. Chinooks, which ordinarily soon clear off snow, have not this year been as effective as usual and as a consequence there is still a layer of snow and ice that makes range conditions bad. Some losses of stock have been reported and feeding is necessary in a great many cases.

To Bridge the Red River.

Washington, Jan. 24.—The house committee on commerce reported favorably a bill introduced by Representative Hanna of North Dakota authorizing the Fargo and Moorhead Street Railway company to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

Making Insurance Maps.

In making insurance maps certain features are considered essential, and the growth of the system has proved their wisdom and changed them only as regards the amount of detail that has been incorporated. Of first importance were the colors to show the different materials used in the construction of a building. Naturally red seemed a proper color to signify brick and yellow to signify wood. These colors have always been employed for these materials. Other colors have been added from time to time, thus blue for stone, gray for iron, etc.

In fixing signs and characters for such details as stairways, fire escapes, dumb waiter shafts, etc., a principal object was to make them plain and distinct. They must be easily understood by an underwriter without reference to my key or marginal foot notes.

This object has been carried out, with the result that when these insurance maps are examined by an insurance man today each sign or character has such an individuality of its own that it can be easily distinguished and is not confused with another.—Cassier's Magazine.

The Word "Fudge."

"Fudge" is a word with a history. There are prosaic etymologists, as there always are, who derive it from a Gaelic word meaning deception, but Isaac Disraeli's view is much more interesting. He derives it from a certain Captain Fudge, who seems to have been a marine Munchausen. "You fudge it" is said to have been his crew's equivalent to the modern "Rats!" In a collection of some papers of William Crouch, the Quaker, published in 1712 it is recorded that one Gregory Marshall informed Crouch that "in the year 1664 we were sentenced for banishment to Jamaica by Judges Hyde and Twisden, and our number was fifty-five. We were put on board the ship Black Eagle. The master's name was Fudge, by some called Lying Fudge."—London Standard.

Damascus Olive Groves.

There is an ancient custom under which the olive groves around Damascus are guarded by official watchmen to prevent the trees being stripped by thieves. But on a certain date the governor or some magistrate issues a proclamation warning all owners of olive trees that they must pick their fruit, for after a certain date it becomes public property. If a farmer has his crop only half gathered when that date arrives the public will gather it for him.

Cruikshank's Long Artistic Life.

In 1863 Cruikshank was asked by the committee who exhibited his "Worship of Bacchus" to associate with that work some of his early drawings in order to prove that he was not his own grandfather!—Chesson's "Cruikshank."

One Advantage of a Red Head

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I was born with a head of fiery red hair. As a kid I remember people looking at it as they would at a burning barn, making all kinds of allusions to my hair and countless jokes, many of them very poor and in bad taste and all obnoxious to me.

When I grew old enough to have a sweetheart I was obliged to go without one, all on account of the growth on my head. I kept it cut very short, but without effect. Just as soon as I came in contact with man, woman or child I saw at once that my hair was against me. One thing I would not do—I refused all barbers who suggested my permitting them to dye it. On entering their shops I would say, "Hair cut; no dye." Whenever, after this notice, a barber offered to give my hair a different color I glared at him and told him that if he repeated the offer he must fight. I thrashed so many people for reference to my blemish that I became an expert boxer.

Hoping that the people of the west were more considerate than those of the east, I went to Denver. The first salute I received there was: "Hello, carrot top! Y' goin' to set the timber on the mountings afire?" I had got tired of thrashing people and turned away without a word. I sought employment in a large manufacturing concern. On entering the office my eyes lighted on a gentleman sitting at a desk who had red hair, for all the world as red as mine. He looked up, and in an instant his gaze was fixed on my top.

He arose from his chair and, advancing to the office rail, grasped my hand in a viselike grip.

"My dear sir," he said warmly and with a respectful mien I had never before been favored with, "what can I do for you?"

"I'm seeking employment."

"You shall have it right here. What can you do?"

"Nothing. I must learn. But I'm willing to work without pay till I do."

"You'll not work without pay here. Judging from your appearance, you are well bred and educated. A man of your condition can't get on with less than a hundred dollars a month. I'll give you that and put you in our best department. Mr. Stamper!" he called.

An employee advanced, and I noticed he, too, had a red head. He was instructed to put me to work and on the payroll at the same time. As I passed through the works I noticed every man had a red head, but none so red as mine and the manager's. Ours was the same hue exactly.

"You'll be shoved up ahead of us all," said the man who had taken me in charge.

"Why so?" I asked.

"You're the only man here who has as red hair as the president."

The words proved true. I was jumped from one grade to another so fast that I barely had time to learn the duties in each. And every time I jumped my salary jumped too.

This was not all. Mr. Flynn, the president and principal owner, asked me one day to come to his house to dinner. I went, of course, and was introduced to his family. Every one of his children had red hair of various shades. His oldest daughter, Emily, had veritable Titian locks. For the first time in my life I felt easy in social company. For the first time not a person about me looked at my head, much less referred to it. Miss Emily Flynn was very gracious to me and was the first young woman who had ever thus treated me so. I was happy as a clam at high tide. After dinner she led me into a separate parlor, and I spent the hours there chatting with her. They were thus far the happiest hours of my life. I left her with a wildly beating heart.

To make a long story short, Miss Flynn encouraged me and I encouraged Miss Flynn. One day she told me I might go to her father and ask for her. I did so and was accepted for a son-in-law with great gusto. "Go back to Em," he said, "and tell her you have my hearty consent, and remain to dinner."

I spent the afternoon with Emily and dined with the family. After dinner Mr. Flynn said to me:

"You have shown wonderful restraint in not asking why I have welcomed you into my business and into my family. The time has come for me to enlighten you.

"Years ago I came to this country from Ireland without a cent and worked at any job I could get in a great city. One day I was arrested, accused of stealing from a Jew. He had told the police that a red headed Irishman had robbed him. I was stood in line with several other men, and this Jew picked me out as the man who had robbed him. I was tried, and the evidence was strong against me. I was about to be convicted when a red headed man strolled in among the spectators. My attorney, following a suggestion given by the man's red hair, called for him and placed him beside me. Then he sent for the Jew and when he came into court asked him which of the two had robbed him. The Jew couldn't tell. He had simply identified me because the man who had robbed him had a red head. The jury acquitted me at once.

"'God bless red headed men!' I exclaimed. 'From this day they are all my bosom friends.'

NOVELIST SHOT SIX TIMES

Assailant of David Graham Phillips Then Kills Himself.

New York, Jan. 21.—David Graham Phillips, the novelist, was shot six times as he approached the Princeton club by Fitzhugh Coyle Goldsborough, a Harvard man, who immediately after committed suicide.

Phillips is at Bellevue hospital in an extremely critical condition, but, as relatives hopefully express it, with "a chance for life." The body of Goldsborough, whose career at Harvard was brief, lies in the morgue. Apparently insane he had a fancied grudge against the author and sought his life. He was thirty-one years old; Phillips is forty-three.

ANOTHER GIFT FROM CARNEGIE

Additional Ten Millions for Institute of Research.

New York, Jan. 21.—Andrew Carnegie has announced a gift of $10,000,000 to the endowment fund of the Carnegie Institute of Research of Washington. This brings his endowment of the institution up to a total of $25,000,000.

This $10,000,000 gift announced by Mr. Carnegie increases the total of his benefactions to about $190,000,000. Of this sum about $52,000,000 has been for libraries, $16,000,000 for the institute he endowed at Pittsburg and $15,000,000 for his educational foundation. John D. Rockefeller's public benefactions to date amount to between $125,000,000 and $130,000,000.

A Slap at Whistler.

A young San Franciscan, the owner of a large and valuable collection of autographs, once wrote to James McNeill Whistler, politely requesting his signature. The letter was sent in care of the London Royal academy, with which the famous American painter was at outs. After four months the letter was returned to the San Francisco address from the dead letter office in Washington. Covering the envelope was the word, repeated numberless times, "Unknown."

Thought She Ought to Know

By EDITH V. ROSS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Young Mrs. Hardenburgh was a creature of impulse. She was not only swayed by impulse, but would take the most important steps without realizing what she was doing. Decisions that another would only make after long deliberation she would make on the instant.

Nevertheless Mrs. Hardenburgh was a dear little woman, kind hearted, lovable and popular with all who knew her. The only trait that interfered with her getting on with all the world was that if told anything to one's disadvantage she would not stop to question the truth of the information, but proceed at once to strike the culprit's name off her list.

Now, there are persons in the world who think nothing of making trouble between other persons, even to the members of families. A woman one day gave Mrs. Hardenburgh information about her husband's doings which if true would have marked him for a very dishonorable and contemptible person. The informer had got the news from another, who had got it from some one else. Her ground for telling Mrs. Hardenburgh of it was that she thought she ought to know it. It did not occur to the tale bearer that it might not be true, and if it were true it was just the thing of all others the guilty man's wife should not know. Nevertheless the above named reason is the universal excuse of those persons who carry such information.

Mrs. Hardenburgh was thrown into hysterics by the story and, instead of giving her husband an opportunity to defend himself of the charge, ran away to her mother as fast as she could go. Being an only child, her mother was used to humoring her and on this occasion gave her unbounded sympathy. Whether the good lady doubted the truth of the story and intended later to pave the way to a reconciliation does not appear. For the time being she comforted her child as best she could. When the latter had recovered her equanimity her mother suggested that she send her husband the reasons for her flight. The young wife did so, sprinkling her note with such words as "perfidious," "disgraceful," "iniquitous," and the like.

When Hardenburgh returned home in the evening and found the letter, instead of running right around to his wife to explain matters he sat down to think. It was certainly not pleasing that he had married a wife who, when a firebrand was thrown into the family, instead of picking it up and tossing it back at the thrower had proceeded to set the house afire with it. If he were going to live with his wife it was certainly necessary that he eliminate this trait in her, and if he could not eliminate it it was perhaps better that they should remain apart.

He had for some time meditated going to a distant city to settle a long standing matter of business, but had put the trip off from time to time on account of having just been married. Within an hour after his return to his home he had announced to the servants that he was going away and started for the railway station.

The young wife meanwhile was passing through the transition common to all persons who act hastily. When she had been somewhat calmed her mother ventured to suggest that the charge might not be true. To this the daughter responded that the informer had no object in giving false information and had done it only since she thought the wife ought to know it. Nevertheless Mrs. Hardenburgh began to be worried. She noted the hour that her husband usually returned home and gave him time to come to her. After several hours had elapsed and Mr. Hardenburgh did not appear she could not conceal her trepidation. She gave her mother as a reason for it that she feared something might have happened to him.

When 10 o'clock came and there was no news from the culprit husband the butler was sent to the house to reconnoiter. He returned reporting that Mr. Hardenburgh had gone away.

The result of this information which Mrs. Hardenburgh's friend "thought she ought to know" opened with the most frightful night the young wife ever spent. From her previous condemnation of her husband she swung to the other extreme, and it rushed upon her with overpowering force that the really good man who had married her could not possibly have been guilty of any such conduct as had been imputed to him. After a sleepless night she went home, hoping to learn something of her husband's movements. She was disappointed. The servants only knew that he had gone away the night before. The disconsolate wife went to her husband's office, but elicited no information there.

And now Mrs. Hardenburgh bethought herself to make inquiries of the informer as to where she got the information. The dear woman who had so great an interest in her friend's affairs said that she had "heard it as coming from"— And Mrs. Hardenburgh's investigations never got any further than "as coming from."

After two weeks' absence Mr. Hardenburgh returned to find his wife waiting for him, a very penitent woman, not likely to make the same mistake again.

Strange to say, the young wife after all did not appreciate having heard what she ought to know and does not speak to the informer.

A Spy of President Lincoln

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Few persons have ever been aware of the connection President Lincoln had with spies. It is singular how those can be found to do such work especially since an ignominious death is the penalty for being caught. The strangest feature of the spy system is that the more delicate woman should have done her share in it.

One day a girl about twenty-four years old went to Allan Pinkerton who was at the head of the United States secret service bureau, and told him that she had lived at Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, and was supposed to be a secessionist. She proposed to go there, intending to offer her services to the Confederate government, to return to Washington and take back information to Richmond. In other words, by pretending to be in the Confederate service she hoped to get information of their intentions or condition for the Federal government. She said her object was to make money to lift her sick mother out of poverty.

Pinkerton set several traps for her in order to test her fidelity to the Federal cause and, having satisfied himself of it, sent her to Mr. Lincoln.

This was in 1864, when the struggle was drawing to a close. The work Mr. Lincoln gave her to do was to discover what commissary stores were in Richmond and what further supplies could be obtained.

Kate Beale went to Richmond, going through the lines without much trouble. Her accent, which she had acquired in the south, was distinctly southern and a great help to her. She wormed herself into the confidence of the wife of an important officer in the Confederate commissary department and asked him if there was not some plan by which she could assist southern sympathizers in the north in running eatables into the south. He told her there were only two ways, by blockade running and by getting a vessel to some spot of southern territory unwatched by northern troops. She proposed to start an expedition on the last named plan.

She was taken to President Davis and to the commissary general. She told them that she knew southern men in Baltimore who would run supplies through if sure they would be met by a southern force. After much discussion a point was named where supplies might be landed.

During these discussions the spy learned that if Grant succeeded in taking Petersburg, all supplies being cut off from the south, the troops and people of Richmond had almost no provisions whatever to rely upon. The surrender must follow very soon.

Having gained the information she wished for, Miss Beale made her preparations to return to Washington. The day before she intended to set out she was met on the street by a man—one of the many Washington southern sympathizers—who was carrying information to Richmond and who had seen her not long before coming out of Allan Pinkerton's office. He looked at her with a pair of steel gray eyes under bushy eyebrows and with a more than ordinary interest. She did not remember ever having seen him before, but considering her mission she felt sure she was in danger.

She pretended not to notice the man's interest in her. Walking on, but without turning to see if he followed her, she spied an empty cab. Beckoning to the driver, he pulled up at the curb, and she entered, telling him to drive her to the presidential mansion. As she was driven away she saw the man still looking at her, but pretending not to notice her. When she stopped at the president's home and alighted the man came hurrying up. She went in and asked for Mr. Davis. He was busy at the time; but, having waited awhile to see him, she went away. When she passed out of the door the man with the bushy eyebrows had disappeared. Apparently her bluff game had succeeded.

But she dare not remain in Richmond a minute longer. Not daring to go directly northward, she concluded to first go south and told the cabman to drive her to the battlefields that had been fought on by Lee and McClellan two years before, and, arriving there, she dismissed him.

Hiring vehicles where she could, walking where she could not hire them, sometimes floating in a stolen boat on the James river, she at last reached Fortress Munroe, in possession of the Federal forces. There she found a naval transport about to leave for the north and, reaching New York, took a train for Washington.

When the name of Kate Beale was taken up to Mr. Lincoln he muttered a "thank God" and directed that she should be immediately conducted to him. When she entered the room where he was and he arose to greet her it seemed to her that his tall, lank figure would never cease rising. He took both her hands in his, and his expressive eyes told her how relieved he was to see her.

"I have important news for you, Mr. Lincoln," she said, and she told him what she had learned.

It was but a month after that that Grant took Petersburg and the Confederacy collapsed.

Kate Beale was paid a large sum from the secret service fund, with which she ministered to her mother's wants. She said afterward that the work was so fascinating that had the war continued longer she would have made another trip.

Origin of Plum Duff.

This is the origin of plum duff, according to the captain of an Atlantic liner:

"One Christmas day, hundreds of years ago at sea, a ship in a storm was swept by a comber that carried off her cook, her crate of chickens, her turkeys—in a word, the whole raw material of her Christmas dinner.

"But the sailors were determined to have at least some sort of Christmas pudding. They knew nothing about cooking, and they drew lots for their new chef. The lot fell to the boatswain's mate.

"This chap fished up a cookbook from the bottom of his sea chest. He ran over the pudding recipes and chose one that began:

"'Make a stiff dough.'

"He made a pudding after this recipe. It was stuffed with Malaga raisins and covered with a rich sauce. The men were delighted.

"'Put a name to it,' they said. 'Put a name to it.'

"And the boatswain's mate, knowing that 'r-o-u-g-h' was pronounced 'rough' and thinking 'd-o-u-g-h' followed the same rule, answered readily:

"'It's called duff, mates.'"

Settled the Sacristan.

A matter of fact sacristan of the Cathedral of Berlin once wrote the king of Prussia this brief note:

Sire—I acquaint your majesty, first, that there are wanting books of psalms for the royal family. I acquaint your majesty, second, that there wants wood to warm the royal seats. I acquaint your majesty, third, that the balustrade next the river, behind the church, is become ruinous.

SCHMIDT,
Sacrist of the Cathedral.

The reply of the king was not that of a "gracious majesty." Its stiff formality in imitating the style of the sacristan probably was not taken by the receiver as complimentary to him:

I acquaint you, Herr Sacrist Schmidt, first, that those who want to sing may buy books. Second, I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt that those who want to be warm must buy wood. Third, I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt that I shall not trust any longer to the balustrade next the river. And I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt, fourth, that I will not have any more correspondence with him.

FREDERICK.

The Shillalah.

The shillalah is no raw limb of a tree. It is almost as much a work of art as a well balanced cricket bat. The old shillalahs were as carefully looked after by their loving owners as is a rifle in the wilds. Cut from the sturdiest of young blackthorns and showing as little taper as an ebony ruler, it was weighed with lead or iron at the end nearest the grip so that its center of gravity was about four-fifths of the way from the hitting end. When properly seasoned by being kept in the neighborhood of the farm oven for a few months it became a thing of supple steel. And the proper pronunciation of the name of this fearsome weapon is the melodious one of "shill-ally," with the accent on the "all."—London Chronicle.

Her Queer Question.

The rector of a country parish in England having sent blankets, groceries, coals and some of the good things usual at Christmas to an old parishioner a lady expatiated warmly to him on the reverend gentleman's kindness.

"Don't you think," she asked the old villager, "that it is very good of the rector to look after you like this and send you all these nice things?"

"Good of him!" exclaimed the old man in blank amazement. "Why, what's he for?"—Pearson's Weekly.

Dean Swift and the Cook.

"Moderation in all things" is the best precept for everyday life. There is a good story about Dean Swift apropos of the value of never overdoing anything.

The dean's cook one day overroasted the leg of mutton for dinner, and in consequence she was summoned to the dining room. "Cook," said the dean in a pleasant voice, "this leg of mutton is overdone; take it back and do it less."

"Impossible, your reverence!" exclaimed the cook.

"Well," replied her master, "supposing it had been underdone, you could easily have done it more."

"Certainly, your reverence."

"Then," said the dean, "let this be a lesson to you. If you commit a fault always take care that it is a fault which will admit of a remedy."

The Duration of a Dream.

One evening Victor Hugo was dictating letters to his secretary. Overcome by fatigue, the great man dropped into a slumber. A few moments afterward he awoke, haunted by a dream which, as he thought, had extended over several hours, and he blamed his secretary for sitting there waiting for him instead of wakening him or else going away. What was his surprise when the bewildered secretary told him that he had only just finished writing the last sentence dictated to him.

Goodness.

Whatever mitigates the woes or increases the happiness of others is a just criterion of goodness, and whatever injures society at large or any individual in it is a criterion of iniquity. One should not quarrel with a dog without a reason sufficient to vindicate one through all the courts of morality.—Goldsmith.

Good Proof.

"Guess I must have been born unlucky."

"What makes you say that?"

"Well, for instance, I went to a ball game once. There were eighteen players on the diamond, fifteen or twenty on the benches, 10,000 people in the grand stand, 20,000 on the bleachers, and—the ball hit me!"—Toledo Blade.

One Advantage of a Red Head

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I was born with a head of fiery red hair. As a kid I remember people looking at it as they would at a burning barn, making all kinds of allusions to my hair and countless jokes, many of them very poor and in bad taste and all obnoxious to me.

When I grew old enough to have a sweetheart I was obliged to go without one, all on account of the growth on my head. I kept it cut very short, but without effect. Just as soon as I came in contact with man, woman or child I saw at once that my hair was against me. One thing I would not do—I refused all barbers who suggested my permitting them to dye it. On entering their shops I would say, "Hair cut; no dye." Whenever, after this notice, a barber offered to give my hair a different color I glared at him and told him that if he repeated the offer he must fight. I thrashed so many people for reference to my blemish that I became an expert boxer.

Hoping that the people of the west were more considerate than those of the east, I went to Denver. The first salute I received there was: "Hello, carrot top! Y' goin' to set the timber on the mountings afire?" I had got tired of thrashing people and turned away without a word. I sought employment in a large manufacturing concern. On entering the office my eyes lighted on a gentleman sitting at a desk who had red hair, for all the world as red as mine. He looked up, and in an instant his gaze was fixed on my top.

He arose from his chair and, advancing to the office rail, grasped my hand in a viselike grip.

"My dear sir," he said warmly and with a respectful mien I had never before been favored with, "what can I do for you?"

"I'm seeking employment."

"Nothing. I must learn. But I'm willing to work without pay till I do."

"You'll not work without pay here. Judging from your appearance, you are well bred and educated. A man of your condition can't get on with less than a hundred dollars a month. I'll give you that and put you in our best department. Mr. Stamper!" he called.

An employee advanced, and I noticed he, too, had a red head. He was instructed to put me to work and on the payroll at the same time. As I passed through the works I noticed every man had a red head, but none so red as mine and the manager's. Ours was the same hue exactly.

"You'll be shoved up ahead of us all," said the man who had taken me in charge.

"Why so?" I asked.

"You're the only man here who has as red hair as the president."

The words proved true. I was jumped from one grade to another so fast that I barely had time to learn the duties in each. And every time I jumped my salary jumped too.

This was not all. Mr. Flynn, the president and principal owner, asked me one day to come to his house to dinner. I went, of course, and was introduced to his family. Every one of his children had red hair of various shades. His oldest daughter, Emily, had veritable Titian locks. For the first time in my life I felt easy in social company. For the first time not a person about me looked at my head, much less referred to it. Miss Emily Flynn was very gracious to me and was the first young woman who had ever thus treated me so. I was happy as a clam at high tide. After dinner she led me into a separate parlor, and I spent the hours there chatting with her. They were thus far the happiest hours of my life. I left her with a wildly beating heart.

To make a long story short, Miss Flynn encouraged me and I encouraged Miss Flynn. One day she told me I might go to her father and ask for her. I did so and was accepted for a son-in-law with great gusto. "Go back to Em," he said, "and tell her you have my hearty consent, and remain to dinner."

I spent the afternoon with Emily and dined with the family. After dinner Mr. Flynn said to me:

"You have shown wonderful restraint in not asking why I have welcomed you into my business and into my family. The time has come for me to enlighten you.

"Years ago I came to this country from Ireland without a cent and worked at any job I could get in a great city. One day I was arrested, accused of stealing from a Jew. He had told the police that a red headed Irishman had robbed him. I was stood in line with several other men, and this Jew picked me out as the man who had robbed him. I was tried, and the evidence was strong against me. I was about to be convicted when a red headed man strolled in among the spectators. My attorney, following a suggestion given by the man's red hair, called for him and placed him beside me. Then he sent for the Jew and when he came into court asked him which of the two had robbed him. The Jew couldn't tell. He had simply identified me because the man who had robbed him had a red head. The jury acquitted me at once.

"'God bless red headed men!' I exclaimed. 'From this day they are all my bosom friends.'

"And it has always been my wish to have a red headed son-in-law and be the progenitor of generations of red headed descendants."

NOVELIST SHOT SIX TIMES

Assailant of David Graham Phillips Then Kills Himself.

New York, Jan. 24.—David Graham Phillips, the novelist, was shot six times as he approached the Princeton club by Fitzhugh Coyle Goldsborough, a Harvard man, who immediately after committed suicide.

Phillips is at Bellevue hospital in an extremely critical condition, but, as relatives hopefully express it, with "a chance for life." The body of Goldsborough, whose career at Harvard was brief, lies in the morgue. Apparently insane he had a fancied grudge against the author and sought his life. He was thirty-one years old; Phillips is forty-three.

ANOTHER GIFT FROM CARNEGIE

Additional Ten Millions for Institute of Research.

New York, Jan. 21.—Andrew Carnegie has announced a gift of $10,000,000 to the endowment fund of the Carnegie Institute of Research of Washington. This brings his endowment of the institution up to a total of $25,000,000.

This $10,000,000 gift announced by Mr. Carnegie increases the total of his benefactions to about $190,000,000. Of this sum about $52,000,000 has been for libraries, $16,000,000 for the institute he endowed at Pittsburg and $15,000,000 for his educational foundation. John D. Rockefeller's public benefactions to date amount to between $125,000,000 and $130,000,000.

Thought She Ought to Know

By EDITH V. ROSS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Young Mrs. Hardenburgh was a creature of impulse. She was not only swayed by impulse, but would take the most important steps without realizing what she was doing. Decisions that another would only make after long deliberation she would make on the instant.

Nevertheless Mrs. Hardenburgh was a dear little woman, kind hearted, lovable and popular with all who knew her. The only trait that interfered with her getting on with all the world was that if told anything to one's disadvantage she would not stop to question the truth of the information, but proceed at once to strike the culprit's name off her list.

Now, there are persons in the world who think nothing of making trouble between other persons, even to the members of families. A woman one day gave Mrs. Hardenburgh information about her husband's doings which if true would have marked him for a very dishonorable and contemptible person. The informer had got the news from another, who had got it from some one else. Her ground for telling Mrs. Hardenburgh of it was that she thought she ought to know it. It did not occur to the talebearer that it might not be true, and if it were true it was just the thing of all others the guilty man's wife should not know. Nevertheless the above named reason is the universal excuse of those persons who carry such information!

Mrs. Hardenburgh was thrown into hysterics by the story and, instead of giving her husband an opportunity to defend himself of the charge, ran away to her mother as fast as she could go. Being an only child, her mother was used to humoring her and on this occasion gave her unbounded sympathy. Whether the good lady doubted the truth of the story and intended later to pave the way to a reconciliation does not appear. For the time being she comforted her child as best she could. When the latter had recovered her equanimity her mother suggested that she send her husband the reasons for her flight. The young wife did so, sprinkling her note with such words as "perfidious," "disgraceful," "iniquitous," and the like.

When Hardenburgh returned home in the evening and found the letter, instead of running right around to his wife to explain matters he sat down to think. It was certainly not pleasing that he had married a wife who, when a firebrand was thrown into the family, instead of picking it up and tossing it back at the thrower had proceeded to set the house afire with it. If he were going to live with his wife it was certainly necessary that he eliminate this trait in her, and if he could not eliminate it it was perhaps better that they should remain apart.

He had for some time meditated going to a distant city to settle a long standing matter of business, but had put the trip off from time to time on account of having just been married. Within an hour after his return to his home he had announced to the servants that he was going away and started for the railway station.

The young wife meanwhile was passing through the transition common to all persons who act hastily. When she had been somewhat calmed her mother ventured to suggest that the charge might not be true. To this the daughter responded that the informer had no object in giving false information and had done it only since she thought the wife ought to know it. Nevertheless Mrs. Hardenburgh began to be worried. She noted the hour that her husband usually returned home and gave him time to come to her. After several hours had elapsed and Mr. Hardenburgh did not appear she could not conceal her trepidation. She gave her mother as a reason for it that she feared something might have happened to him.

When 10 o'clock came and there was no news from the culprit husband the butler was sent to the house to reconnoiter. He returned reporting that Mr. Hardenburgh had gone away.

The result of this information which Mrs. Hardenburgh's friend "thought she ought to know" opened with the most frightful night the young wife ever spent. From her previous condemnation of her husband she swung to the other extreme, and it rushed upon her with overpowering force that the really good man who had married her could not possibly have been guilty of any such conduct as had been imputed to him. After a sleepless night she went home, hoping to learn something of her husband's movements. She was disappointed. The servants only knew that he had gone away the night before. The disconsolate wife went to her husband's office, but elicited no information there.

And now Mrs. Hardenburgh bethought herself to make inquiries of the informer as to where she got the information. The dear woman who had so great an interest in her friend's affairs said that she had "heard it as coming from"— And Mrs. Hardenburgh's investigations never got any further than "as coming from."

After two weeks' absence Mr. Hardenburgh returned to find his wife waiting for him, a very penitent woman, not likely to make the same mistake again.

Strange to say, the young wife after all did not appreciate having heard what she ought to know and does not speak to the informer.

A Spy of President Lincoln

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Few persons have ever been aware of the connection President Lincoln had with spies. It is singular how those can be found to do such work especially since an ignominious death is the penalty for being caught. The strangest feature of the spy system is that the more delicate woman should have done her share in it.

One day a girl about twenty-four years old went to Allan Pinkerton who was at the head of the United States secret service bureau, and told him that she had lived at Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, and was supposed to be a secessionist. She proposed to go there, intending to offer her services to the Confederate government, to return to Washington and take back information to Richmond. In other words, by pretending to be in the Confederate service she hoped to get information of their intentions or condition for the Federal government. She said her object was to make money to lift her sick mother out of poverty.

Pinkerton set several traps for her in order to test her fidelity to the Federal cause and, having satisfied himself of it, sent her to Mr. Lincoln.

This was in 1864, when the struggle was drawing to a close. The work Mr. Lincoln gave her to do was to discover what commissary stores were in Richmond and what further supplies could be obtained.

Kate Beale went to Richmond, going through the lines without much trouble. Her accent, which she had acquired in the south, was distinctly southern and a great help to her. She wormed herself into the confidence of the wife of an important officer in the Confederate commissary department and asked him if there was not some plan by which she could assist southern sympathizers in the north in running eatables into the south. He told her there were only two ways, by blockade running and by getting a vessel to some spot of southern territory unwatched by northern troops. She proposed to start an expedition on the last named plan.

She was taken to President Davis and to the commissary general. She told them that she knew southern men in Baltimore who would run supplies through if sure they would be met by a southern force. After much discussion a point was named where supplies might be landed.

During these discussions the spy learned that if Grant succeeded in taking Petersburg, all supplies being cut off from the south, the troops and people of Richmond had almost no provisions whatever to rely upon. The surrender must follow very soon.

Having gained the information she wished for, Miss Beale made her preparations to return to Washington. The day before she intended to set out she was met on the street by a man—one of the many Washington southern sympathizers—who was carrying information to Richmond and who had seen her not long before coming out of Allan Pinkerton's office. He looked at her with a pair of steel gray eyes under bushy eyebrows and with a more than ordinary interest. She did not remember ever having seen him before, but considering her mission she felt sure she was in danger.

She pretended not to notice the man's interest in her. Walking on, but without turning to see if he followed her, she spied an empty cab. Beckoning to the driver, he pulled up at the curb, and she entered, telling him to drive her to the presidential mansion. As she was driven away she saw the man still looking at her, but pretending not to notice her. When she stopped at the president's home and alighted the man came hurrying up. She went in and asked for Mr. Davis. He was busy at the time; but, having waited awhile to see him, she went away. When she passed out of the door the man with the bushy eyebrows had disappeared. Apparently her bluff game had succeeded.

But she dare not remain in Richmond a minute longer. Not daring to go directly northward, she concluded to first go south and told the cabman to drive her to the battlefields that had been fought on by Lee and McClellan two years before, and, arriving there, she dismissed him.

Hiring vehicles where she could, walking where she could not hire them, sometimes floating in a stolen boat on the James river, she at last reached Fortress Munroe, in possession of the Federal forces. There she found a naval transport about to leave for the north and, reaching New York, took a train for Washington.

When the name of Kate Beale was taken up to Mr. Lincoln he muttered a "thank God" and directed that she should be immediately conducted to him. When she entered the room where he was and he arose to greet her it seemed to her that his tall, lank figure would never cease rising. He took both her hands in his, and his expressive eyes told her how relieved he was to see her.

"I have important news for you, Mr Lincoln," she said, and she told him what she had learned.

It was but a month after that that Grant took Petersburg and the Confederacy collapsed.

Kate Beale was paid a large sum from the secret service fund, with which she ministered to her mother's wants. She said afterward that the work was so fascinating that had the war continued longer she would have made another trip.

Origin of Plum Duff.

This is the origin of plum duff, according to the captain of an Atlantic liner:

"One Christmas day, hundreds of years ago at sea, a ship in a storm was swept by a comber that carried off her cook, her crate of chickens, her turkeys—in a word, the whole raw material of her Christmas dinner.

"But the sailors were determined to have at least some sort of Christmas pudding. They knew nothing about cooking, and they drew lots for their [illegible] boatswain's mate

"This chap fished up a cookbook from the bottom of his sea chest. He ran over the pudding recipes and chose one that began:

"'Make a stiff dough.'

"He made a pudding after this recipe. It was stuffed with Malaga raisins and covered with a rich sauce. The men were delighted.

"'Put a name to it,' they said. 'Put a name to it.'

"And the boatswain's mate, knowing that 'r-o-u-g-h' was pronounced 'rough' and thinking 'd-o-u-g-h' followed the same rule, answered readily:

"'It's called duff, mates.'"

Settled the Sacristan.

A matter of fact sacristan of the Cathedral of Berlin once wrote the king of Prussia this brief note:

> Sire—I acquaint your majesty, first, that there are wanting books of psalms for the royal family. I acquaint your majesty, second, that there wants wood to warm the royal seats. I acquaint your majesty, third, that the balustrade next the river, behind the church, is become ruinous.
>
> SCHMIDT,
> Sacrist of the Cathedral.

The reply of the king was not that of a "gracious majesty." Its stiff formality in imitating the style of the sacristan probably was not taken by the receiver as complimentary to him:

> I acquaint you, Herr Sacrist Schmidt, first, that those who want to sing may buy books. Second, I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt that those who want to be warm must buy wood. Third, I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt that I shall not trust any longer to the balustrade next the river. And I acquaint Herr Sacrist Schmidt, fourth, that I will not have any more correspondence with him.

The Shillalah.

The shillalah is no raw limb of a tree. It is almost as much a work of art as a well balanced cricket bat. The old shillalahs were as carefully looked after by their loving owners as is a rifle in the wilds. Cut from the sturdiest of young blackthorns and showing as little taper as an ebony ruler, it was weighed with lead or iron at the end nearest the grip so that its center of gravity was about four-fifths of the way from the hitting end. When properly seasoned by being kept in the neighborhood of the farm oven for a few months it became a thing of supple steel. And the proper pronunciation of the name of this fearsome weapon is the melodious one of "shill-aily," with the accent on the "ail."—London Chronicle.

Her Queer Question.

The rector of a country parish in England having sent blankets, gorcerles, coals and some of the good things usual at Christmas to an old parishioner a lady expatiated warmly to him on the reverend gentleman's kindness.

"Don't you think," she asked the old villager, "that it is very good of the rector to look after you like this and send you all these nice things?"

Dean Swift and the Cook.

"Moderation in all things" is the best precept for everyday life. There is a good story about Dean Swift apropos of the value of never overdoing anything.

The dean's cook one day overroasted the leg of mutton for dinner, and in consequence she was summoned to the dining room. "Cook," said the dean in a pleasant voice, "this leg of mutton is overdone; take it back and do it less."

"Impossible, your reverence!" exclaimed the cook.

"Well," replied her master, "supposing it had been underdone, you could easily have done it more."

"Certainly, your reverence."

"Then," said the dean, "let this be a lesson to you. If you commit a fault always take care that it is a fault which will admit of a remedy."

The Duration of a Dream.

One evening Victor Hugo was dictating letters to his secretary. Overcome by fatigue, the great man dropped into a slumber. A few moments afterward he awoke, haunted by a dream which, as he thought, had extended over several hours, and he blamed his secretary for sitting there waiting for him instead of wakening him or else going away. What was his surprise when the bewildered secretary told him that he had only just finished writing the last sentence dictated to him.

Goodness.

Whatever mitigates the woes or increases the happiness of others is a just criterion of goodness, and whatever injures society at large or any individual in it is a criterion of iniquity. One should not quarrel with a dog without a reason sufficient to vindicate one through all the courts of morality.—Goldsmith.

Good Proof.

"Guess I must have been born unlucky."

"What makes you say that?"

"Well, for instance, I went to a ball game once. There were eighteen players on the diamond, fifteen or twenty on the benches, 10,000 people in the grand stand, 20,000 on the bleachers, and—the ball hit me!"—Toledo Blade.

Any supporter of Lorimer is liable to be a dead one in the future.

Senator La Follette was re-elected to the U. S. Senate by the Wisconsin Legislature last Tuesday. The non-concurring votes in the House were 27 democrats and 12 socialists. All Wisconsin seemed to tremble when they thought of the growing power of the socialists.

The Regents of the State University have asked for $600,000 to complete certain buildings. This is only a small portion of what they expect to ask for. Don't go too hard at the state purse. Remember that our country boys and girls are as much entitled to the consideration of the state as are the students of the State University.

The St. Paul Daily News in its issue of January 20th has a very striking cartoon on the amounts spent for peace and the amounts spent for war. We have long prayed for Universal Peace but we have gone right on building warships just the same. How long ere we shall learn to turn our hope into faith and then act accordingly.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette suggests that Pennington County may at some future date want to reunite with its ancestor namely Red Lake County. DOINGS IN LEGISLATURE.

While passing through St. Paul, last Wednesday, the editor had the pleasure of a short visit with our friend and representative the Hon. D. P. O'Neill, who is one of the progressive leaders on the floor of the House and is making good in every way.

Mr. O'Neill stated that on account of a resolution of the House that the Daily Journals not be distributed free to all it would be impossible for him to send the Journal to all who had applied to him for them but they can be seen at any public library at any time.

During a very short visit at the House Session on Wednesday it was the editors privilege to witness the passage of two bills of great importance to this section of the state. The first to pass was House File No. 64, which we give herewith in full:

For an Act Authorizing County Boards of New Counties to Levy a Special Tax for County Purposes.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota.

Section 1. That whenever a new county shall have been or may hereafter be created and organized out of territory embraced within the boundaries of one or more organized counties in the State, the County Board of said newly created county may, immediately upon the organization thereof, or at any time within ninety days thereafter, levy a tax for county purposes for the current year, subject to the limitations now provided by law, and the County Auditor of the county shall forthwith extend the same upon the tax books of his office, and the same shall be due and payable from and after thirty days from the date of the levy thereof and shall be paid and collected, as other taxes for county purposes are now paid and collected, and any and all tax levies made for county purposes by the County Board of the county or counties out of which said new county is created and organized, during the year immediately preceding the organization of said new county, so far as the same shall affect the territory embraced within the boundary of said new county, are vacated and any extension thereof is hereby declared void.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The second was House File No. 157 which appropriates $25,000 to the Department of Agriculture of the State University for the purpose of purchasing timothy, clover and red top seed, etc., for experimental purposes of State lands burned over in 1910. Any person desiring to avail himself of the benefits of this act, whose land was burned over by fires of 1910 shall make a written application, verified by his oath, stating number of acres burned and number of acres he wishes to sow to grass in 1911 and number of pounds of seed needed to sow the same.

This application shall be filed with the County Auditor, etc.

This bill was introduced by the Hon. G. H. Mattson, of Roseau, and certainly meets the crying need of the people in the burned over territory. There is no question but that this bill will become a law and hence it is very important all applications be sent to the County Auditor of your respective county not later than March 15th so that the necessary seeds may be secured.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

The secret of tremendous success of "The Man on the Box," which will appear at the Auditorium on January 31st, is its great heart interest. It is a comedy true, but also reveals a little romance that reaches deep into the hearts of the audience and promises a lasting bond of sympathy. A substantial romance threads the story and maintains an absorbing interest from beginning to end. The dialogue is bright, witty and moves rapidly to logical climaxes.

WILL BUILD TELEPHONE LINE.

A number of the progressive farmers of the town of Moylan in Marshall County held a meeting at the Kozy Korner Farm on Tuesday, last. After considerable deliberation and discussion it was decided to build a telephone line from Germantown to Esplee. This is to be a rural party line, but will give toll accommodations between Esplee and the Tri-State at Germantown and between Germantown and the Red Lake, Eastern Marshall Telephone Lines at Esplee. This will lower the rates between Germantown and Grygla, Esplee, Torgerson, Erie and Highlanding from 40c to 20c. Free exchange will be made with all connecting lines who grant the same privilege in return. This is expected to embrace the lines to Hungry Island, Pea Soup, Jello, Thorhult and the uttermost part of the world.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

"The Man on the Box," at the Auditorium on January 31st, will be one of the finest attractions of the year. The comedy was adapted from a widely read book and had a run of over 300 performances in New York City. "The Man on the Box" has occupied the American stage since the days of Augustin Daly comedies.

Services at M. E. Church, Sunday as usual, Sunday evening topic, "When our children are about us," especially addressed to parents.

STORHOLM'S MOTHER DEAD.

Mrs. Ellen Storholm, wife of Ole Storholm, who died at her home, 206 Nelson St. S., Tuesday morning, at half past five, had been a sufferer for some time with paralytic strokes, and succumbed to one of them. Deceased was born April 8, 1836, in Romsdal, Norway. Besides her husband, the following children are left to mourn her death: Oluf Storholm, Thief River Falls; Hans Storholm, Stanley, N. D.; Mrs. Mikkelson, Middle River; Mrs. Robert Mulhollend, of Marshall; and Petra Storholm, Crookston. The funeral will be held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Synod Lutheran church.—Crookston Times.

Mr. Storholm received word of his mother's death Tuesday and accompanied by his wife and children, left that afternoon where they will remain until after the funeral.

Reapportionment, direct legislation, extension of the primary, the Cashman distance tariff bill and measures to improve the corrupt practices act will each mean exciting contest this sesson.

The House Committees on Elections which has all but one of the direct legislation bills is composed of Messrs. L. D. Brown, Frankson, Virtue, Lindberg, White, Westcott, Reed, Skartum, O'Brien, Palmer, Hafften, Fuchs, Knapp, A. Nelson, Webb, S. N. Lee and Nash.

The bill granting free street car transportation to city firemen and mail carriers was reported out of the Committee on Express and Electric Railways. Messrs. J. N. Johnson and I. J. Lee voted against it in committee on the ground that it was an attack on the anti-pass principle.

The constitutional amendment prohibiting special election repealed by implication Sec. 1 of the Art. 11, and since then the submission of questions for the creation of new counties to popular vote has been one of favor by the legislature, and not because it was required by the constitution to do so. State ex rel v. Pioneer Press, 66 Minn. 536. On the other hand the change of county boundaries does not concern the whole state, but rather the counties affected, and therefore by right should be in the control of those immediately concerned. In fact the creation of new counties and the changing of county boundaries, have always been treated in legislation as separate and independent, and it can not well be held as a judicial question that they are so relatedand interwoven that the one necessarily includes the othter. It is clear therefore that an election for the creation of a new county does not fall within the clause of Sec. 339 providing for contests of elections changing county lines.

5. The further contention of contestant that Sec. 336 in its modified form is unconstitutional an dvoid, is not sustained. No valid objection to the re-enacted section or the revision of the statutes as a whole, is pointed out and reflection brings none to our attention.

ADVERTISING BRINGS RESULTS

Peggy Perkins Very Popular.

Since the story was published by The Spokesman-Review that Miss Peggy Perkins, one of the telephone operators at the St. Nicholas, had been required to give a $500 bond not to get married for six months her mail has been voluminous. Yesterday she received four letters from starngers, all of them hinting broadly that if she was willing to get married they would like to be the other contracting party.

One is from a former Spokane boy, Ira Crawford, of Lakehurst, N. J. Another is from D. Harold Bush, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who is anxious to know if all the telephone girls in Spokane are tied up in the same way, because such was not the case when he was last here. Albert Monroe Graves of Thief River Falls, Minn., is much the most ardent swain, and he backs up a highly colored word picture of himself with the statement that he has $5,000 and a good home, with no drawbacks other than a "3-year-old duplicate," for whom he wants a step-mother.

The fourth letter is from a matrimonial bureau at Oakland, Cal., which obligingly encloses a blank to be filled out by the applicant for matrimony, in which, after paying due attention to age, color of hair and eyes, complexion, weight and height, the greater part of the blank lines are left to be filled in with particulars of occupation, income, value of property and amount of cash on hand.—Spokane Review.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

The Auditorium will have one of the greatest treats of the season, on January 31st, when Messrs H. E. Pierce & Company, "The Old Reliable Managers," will offer their superlatively fine cast of star players in Harold McGrath's greatest play, "The Man on the Box." This fine example of modern comedy needs little or no introduction to a discriminating public, but for the benefit of the unfortunate few who have never seen it, or never read the book, let it be said that it stands today as the epitome of high class comedy as presented in high priced houses, and has interested more theater goers than any other play written in the last twenty years. In offering it to the public, H. E. Pierce & Company feel that they have reached the climax of their careers thus far, in that they feel they have spent the maximum amount in securing the finest scenic production and the best cast sent out. Not content with this, however, they plan bigger and better things, in return for the hearty support which the public has given them in years past.

School Notes.

The first of the six institutes for farmers was held at the high school gymnasium last Wednesday. The second meeting takes place on Wednesday, Feb. 1st, beginning at 10:30. It will be a dairy convention and will be conducted by C. O. Carlson of Erskine. State Dairy Commissioner Joel Winkjer will also be present and some of the local creamery men will aid in making the program interesting.

The departmental system of work now in operation in the grammar grades is proving satisfactory. Teachers and pupils alike prefer it to the old style organization.

The electric fixtures are being installed in the Lincoln. The date of dedication will probably be announced next week, but the exact time will depend on the convenience of Governor Eberhardt and other prominent persons who are expected to attend.

The three months short course for large boys and girls is certainly practical and interesting. Students can enter this work at any time and many more should take advantage of its offerings. One boy, taken as a type of others in the class, in studying spelling, common English, the portions of arithmetic most needed in the ordinary affairs of life, elementary agriculture, and is making a set of heavy whiffletrees in the manual training department. He is also taking some work in simple accounting. Can anyone suggest anything more useful for a three months period of practical study?

The Van Brunt and Kentucky Drills

We handle these two well known grain drills, because they have for many years past proven their worth. For strength and durability as well as exceptionally good working points nobody need go any farther. Prices and terms are the most liberal.

Fosston Automatic Fanningmills

The Holidays are a thing ot the past, and it is time to turn more seriously toward the work of the oncoming season. The first step, perhaps is to clean your seed grain. Screen out foul weed seed, blow away chaff, white-caps, and light kernels, and plant only the best each succeeding year and you will improve your strain and increaes your yeilds. Nothing pays better than planting only the best. We've got the machine that satisfies -The Fosston Automatic.

De Laval Cream Separators

This should be a live topic when the cows are getting busy filling your milk pail to the brim. How to coin most money out of it, is the question. The De Laval Cream Separator, is the answer. Call and see them.

The Reindeer Gasoline Engines

The handiest farm power is a gasoline engine. Of all the different makes our choice is The Reindeer. Come in and see them and we will show you why. We have them in all sizes.

Oen Mercantile Company.

Every teacher is endeavoring to secure better results in reading. It is not so much the quantity that is sought, as it is the quality of the work.

Inquiry of any student or teacher in the Lincoln develops the fact that this building could not be changed in any particular to make it more suitable for high school work.

By the time the School Notes have run the gamut of author and his typewriter, the typesetter, printer's devil and proofreader, they frequently present some startling examples of "How English Is Spoke and Wrote". However, we live to learn.

Systematic effort is always made to induce the children to patronize the public library. The sight often presented there of over one hundred grade pupils receiving books in one evening acts as an inspiration to those most deeply interested in the future of the boys and girls. Habitual readers rarely fail to acquire strong mental and moral qualities.

Thief River Falls citizens ought to lay aside their ordinary duties for an hour or two next Wednesday and attend the dairymen's convention at the high school gym. Why not mingle for a short time with those substantial folks who so largely figure in the prosperity of this section?

Wm. P. Cullen has made a big revival of Pixley and Luder's famous musical comedy success, "The Burgomaster" and will present it at the Auditorium next Tuesday with a large cast headed by Gus. Weinburg in the role of Peter Stuyvesant, the old burgomaster of New Amsterdam. The company will number 50 people. The production is an esqecially handsome one. The costumes have been revised and are all new. Special attention has been paid by Mr. Cullen to the voices of the chorus as well as to the beauty of the feminine portion. "The Burgomaster" was the first of Pixley and Luder's pieces to gain popularity others being "The Prince of Pilsen", "King Dodo", and the Grand Mogul". The music is of the singing and whistling variety, and it is said that more copies of the "Tale of the Kangaroo" and "I love you" have been sold than any other songs in musical comedies.

A musical treat is in store for those amusement lovers who see Wm. P. Cullen's great production of "The Burgomaster", at the Auditorium on next Tuesday, Gus. C. Weinburg heads the cast. The music of the play is especially catchy. Among the best song numbers are "I love You Dear" "The Tale of the Kangaroo", "Hypnotist", "The Gladiator" and the famous Indian Chorus. Mr. Weinburg is supported by a company of fifty people.

By far the best theatrical event of the season will be "The Burgomaster," which comes to the Autitorium next Tuesday, headed by that clever comedian, Gus. C. Weinburg the original Peter Stuyvesant, Mayor of New Amsterdam. It is a well known fact that the music of "The Burgomaster" is far superior to any of Pixley and Luder's other musical comedies. One million copies of the "Tale of the Kangaroo" was sold the first season it was produced.

Lovers of clean amateur drama will be given a chance to see a good play well played, when on Friday evening, Feb. 3rd, the Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club will present "Oak Farm" in the Auditorium in this city. "Oak Farm" is a stirring, 3act rural comedy drama, in which is portrayed a story of life on an eastern farm, a story which has a counterpart in many rural sections of the country today. The author of the play, Mr. Anthony E. Wills, has woven together a fabric made of threads of comedy and drama, so neatly interwoven that the transition from the humorous to the pathetic is so gradual, and yet so marked, that the play can well be pronounced a masterpiece.

The story deals with the mortgaging of the farm to send the son to college, the crookedness of the postmaster and town money lender, the failure of the parents to receive letters from the son, the final day of grace and the grand finale- the return of the poodigal son. The humor fits in everywhere. One minute and you are doubled up with laughter and your sides ache; the next minute tears flow and you wonder why you laughed.

Following is the castle of characters and a brief synopsis of the play:

Silas Weatherby	Clement L. Malvin.
Donald Weatherby	Clement E Brunelle.
Joel Weatherby	Oen Hall
Jonathan Prune	Vern M Healy

Tom Heggeland, of Fosston, was in town on Tuesday evening going north on the 11 o'clock train on Wednesday to Warroad from whence he expected to go on to Winnipeg and western Manitoba where he will visit relatives and friends.

"Shakespeare's Twelfth Night" was presented at the Auditorium to an interested and appreciative audience. The acting was of superior merit and the two characters of Viola and Sir Toby Belch deserve credit for special strength. The audience was smaller than one would expect at such a high grade entertainment but the interest displayed showed a keen appreciation which to some extent made up for what the audience lacked in size.

Mrs. Swedenburg entertained a number of friends Saturday afternoon

Bob McDonald of the Northwestern Drainage Co.'s office force has been ill with the la grippe.

Mrs. Rose Dargan and Mrs. Wm. Zaiser, of Red Lake Falls, spent Thursday in the city visiting friends.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. W. H. Quist at 402 Riverside Avenue.

At the recent meeting of the Red River Valley Medical Ass'n., Dr. Melby, of this city, was elected Vice President. The meeting was held at Crookston.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future referance is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

HUNT MAY NOT BE CONFIRMED

Senate Committee Fails to Act on His Appointment.

MONTANANS FILE CHARGES

Washington, Jan. 24.—Nearly half of the members of the senate judiciary committee are said to have taken positions against the confirmation of Judge William H. Hunt, now serving as a member of the court of customs appeals and promoted to a circuit judgeship for assignment to the new commerce court. When this case was called up in the committee, in consequence of the opposition his friends did not press the case, although all of the others appointed to circuit judgeships for service on the new court were ordered reported favorably.

The judges acted upon were Robert W. Archbald of Pennsylvania, John E. Carland of South Dakota and Julian W. Mack of Illinois. Judge Martin A. Knapp, former chairman of the interstate commerce commission, was confirmed before the holiday recess for presiding judge. The four members of the court against whom there were no contests are expected to organize the new court as soon as those reported are confirmed.

Serious Charges Filed.

Soon after the appointment of Judge Hunt was sent to the senate charges were filed against him by Montana land owners who alleged that while serving on the federal district bench there he had aided smelting interests by delaying court proceedings brought by land owners who complained that their property was being injured by fumes from the Anaconda smelter.

The effect of the charge was to cast reflections upon Judge Hunt's integrity by seeking to show he had been subservient to corporation influences.

A subcommittee took up the charges and made an investigation, which resulted in two reports to the full committee, the majority being in favor of his confirmation. When the full committee considered the case the Democrats are said to have opposed confirmation unanimously. They were joined by some Republicans and, although no vote was taken, the meeting did not augur for confirmation at this session. Some of the senators went so far as to express the opinion that the president should withdraw the nomination.

MEXICAN TROOPS TRAPPED

More Than One Hundred Reported Killed by Rebels.

Presidio, Tex., Jan. 24.—More than one hundred soldiers were killed in a three-days' battle between the Mexican federal troops and insurrectos in the mountains between Ojinga and Chichillio Parado.

The government troops were caught in a trap and were literally mowed down by the storm of bullets which swept their ranks from three directions.

The insurrectos occupied the cliffs and mountains and the soldiers were in the road, with only one way of escaping, and that blocked. Of the 200 men who went into the pass only forty escaped so far as known. They joined the column under Colonel Duranthe.

The revolutionists' loss is said to have been slight, only five men being killed, according to their reports.

REJECT TARIFF BOARD BILL

Republican Members of the Ways and Means Committee Act.

Washington, Jan. 19.—At a meeting of the Republican members of the committee on ways and means the Longworth bill, which is supposed to represent the ideas of the administration of tariff board legislation, was thrown into the discard. The measure was rejected by a vote of 8 to 4. Those who voted against it were Representatives Payne, Dalzell, Boutell, Calderhead, Fordney, Gaines, Dwight and Ellis. Representatives Longworth, Needham, McCall and Hill stood by the bill which bears the name of the son-in-law of Theodore Roosevelt.

PAUL MORTON DIES SUDDENLY

Equitable Life President Victim of Cerebral Hemorrhage.

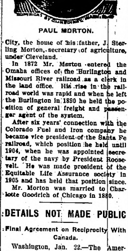
UNCONSCIOUS FOR AN HOUR

Former Secretary of the Navy Under President Roosevelt Stricken in New York City.

New York, Jan. 20.—Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Assurance society and secretary of the navy under Theodore Roosevelt, died of a cerebral hemorrhage in the Hotel Seymour here. His wife and his elder brother, Joy, were summoned, but he died a few minutes before they arrived, an hour after he was stricken. His close friend, E. J. Berwind, arrived a few minutes earlier, perhaps ten minutes before Mr. Morton breathed his last. Mr. Morton was unconscious from the moment of the stroke and neither recognized those about him nor spoke.

Mr. Morton himself did not know that his life was in danger, but his family, his physicians and a few close friends knew that his condition was precarious and that his life depended on his taking particular care of himself.

Paul Morton was born in Detroit, May 22, 1857. Most of his early life was spent at Arbor Lodge, Nebraska City, the home of his father, J. Sterling Morton, secretary of agriculture, under Cleveland.



PAUL MORTON.

In 1872 Mr. Morton entered the Omaha offices of the Burlington and Missouri River railroad as a clerk in the land office. His rise in the railroad world was rapid and when he left the Burlington in 1890 he held the position of general freight and passenger agent of the system.

After six years' connection with the Colorado Fuel and Iron company he became vice president of the Santa Fe railroad, which position he held until 1904, when he was appointed secretary of the navy by President Roosevelt. He was made president of the Equitable Life Assurance society in 1905 and has held that position since.

Mr. Morton was married to Charlotte Goodrich of Chicago in 1880.

DETAILS NOT MADE PUBLIC

Final Agreement on Reciprocity With Canada.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The American and Canadian reciprocity commissioners have held the last session of their treaty conference. All of the members were present and also Secretary Knox. They met behind closed doors at the state department and shortly afterward announcement was made that an agreement had been reached.

At the conclusion of the session the commissioners jointly issued the following statement, which was all they could say in regard to the result of their undertaking:

"The negotiators have reached an understanding, which, when certain formalities are completed, will be made public at Washington and at Ottawa. It is thought this may be done next Thursday."

FORTY MINERS ARE KILLED

Perish in Colliery Disaster in Russian Poland.

Berlin, Jan. 21.—A news dispatch from Sosnowice, Russian Poland, says that forty miners lost their lives in a fire in the Casimir colliery near that place. Three hundred and sixty others escaped.

Asks Steel Trust Probe.

Washington, Jan. 24.—Declaring that the "steel industry has passed from the hands of those who developed into the hands of those practiced in the dubious acts by which the law is violated and the public exploited," Representative Stanley of Kentucky urged the rules committee of the house to approve his resolution calling for an investigation of the so called steel trust.

An Epic of the Backwoods.

One of the epics of the backwoods, told by John G. Neihardt in "The River and I," is the adventure of old Hugh Glass, who was terribly mauled by a grizzly up the Missouri, so terribly that the rest of the expedition pushed on, leaving a young friend with several others to see the end. "It seemed plain that he would have to go soon. So the young friend and the others left the old man in the wilderness to finish the job by himself. They took his weapons and hastened after the main party, for the country was hostile.

"But one day old Glass woke up and got one of his eyes open. And when he saw how things stood he swore he would live merely for the sake of killing his false friend. He crawled to a spring close by, where he found a bush of ripe bullberries. He waited day after day for strength and finally started out to crawl a small matter of a hundred miles to the nearest fort. And he did it too. Also he found his friend after much wandering—and forgave him."

CHAMP CLARK.

Nominated for Speaker of the Sixty-second Congress.

CLARK FOR SPEAKER OF THE NEXT HOUSE

Democratic Caucus Selects Missourian by Acclamation.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Representative Champ Clark of Missouri, the Democratic leader of the house and receptive candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, was nominated by acclamation for speaker of the house in the Sixty-second congress.

This and the selection of a committee on ways and means to make an early preparation of tariff legislation for submission to congress immediately upon the beginning of the next session in December, when the house becomes Democratic, were the chief acts of a caucus of the Democrats—the old and new members—of the next congress, held in the hall of the house at the Capitol.

About 210 Democrats were present. Mr. Hay of Virginia presided and Mr. Ashbrook of Ohio was secretary.

Mr. Lloyd of Missouri, chairman of the Democratic national committee, then placed Champ Clark in nomination for speaker. Messrs Ansbury of Ohio, Pou of North Carolina, Addison of Georgia, Rainey of Illinois, Sulzer of New York, Heflin of Alabama and others seconded the nomination and it was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Clark, with a broad smile, stepped to the front of the chamber and formally accepted the honor.

PLEA OF RAILROAD LABOR

Asks That Carriers Be Permitted to Advance Rates.

Washington, Jan. 19.—Speaking on behalf of 250,000 employes actively engaged in railroading P. H. Morrissey of Chicago, president of the American Railroad Employes and Investors' association, presented a formal statement to the interstate commerce commission in support of the proposed advance in freight rates by the railroads.

Scores of petitions from various branches of organized railroad labor were submitted to the commission advocating an increase in the freight rates.

SERIOUS FLOOD IN OREGON

Many Rivers In Coast State Overflow Their Banks.

Portland, Ore., Jan. 20.—A rain of almost unprecedented severity that already has lasted thirty-two hours prevails over the Willamette valley and is doing immense damage.

Reports have come of flooded railroad tracks. The streams tributary to the Willamette are threatening several towns and settlements. Precipitation at Portland since the storm began has been four inches.

The Santiam and Calapoola rivers have overflowed and the lowlands are flooded.

CZARINA'S HEALTH FAILING

Periods of Melancholia Alarm Family and Physicians.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 24.—The health of Empress Alexandra is again a matter of concern to the imperial family and her physicians. Her majesty suffers periods of melancholia.

The royal family is planning a long stay at Nauheim, grand duchy of Hesse, where the emperor and empress stopped for some time last fall in order that the empress might have the benefit of the waters there.

Cincinnati Police Chief Dead.

Cincinnati, Jan. 24.—Pneumonia, contracted while directing the police at the Chamber of Commerce fire in which six lives were lost Jan. 10, claimed Chief of Police Samuel Corbin. Chief Corbin had been on the force about a quarter of a century and was widely known throughout the country.

A Cent.

A cent is a little thing, but in the aggregate it is mighty. We speak of the "copper cent," but it is not entirely copper. Its composition is 95 per cent copper, 3 per cent tin and 2 per cent zinc. That alloy is in reality bronze, and the official name of the cent is "bronze." There used to be a copper cent, but an act discontinuing its coinage was passed in 1857. For seven years (1857-64) we had a nickel cent and up to 1857 a copper half cent.

CASE GOES TO SUPREME COURT

Government Will Appeal Judge Willard's "Lid" Decision.

ISSUE COMES FROM BEMIDJI

Anti-Saloon League and Prohibition People Are Insisting Highest Court Should Pass on the Question—Understood President Taft Will Issue an Order Annulling Liquor Provisions in All Indian Treaties Except That of 1855.

Washington, Jan. 24.—An appeal will be taken by the government from the decision of Judge Willard in the Bemidji liquor case. This announcement was made by a member of the Minnesota delegation who has been following the liquor situation closely.

It also is understood President Taft will issue an order before the end of the week annulling all the Indian treaties, so far as the liquor provisions are concerned, save that of 1855, which is involved in the Bemidji case. The treaty of 1855 cannot be annulled save by action of congress. No action of that character will be necessary if Judge Willard's decision is upheld by the supreme court.

If Judge Willard is reversed, then it is altogether likely the next congress will be asked to take action which will abrogate the treaty and put the administration of liquor laws entirely up to the state. The treaties which the president can annul, and on which he is expected to act, are those of 1851, 1853, 1854, 1863, 1867, 1889.

The appeal from Judge Willard's decision will be taken because of the insistence of the Anti-saloon league and other prohibition people that the case should be taken to the highest court for a final verdict. These people have argued that there is but one way of settling the question for all time and that is by getting a decision from the supreme court, and the administration has found it difficult to answer that argument.

Both the department of justice and the department of interior, through the office of commissioner of Indian affairs, will recommend an appeal be taken, it is said.

Pending the appeal, as has been stated in these dispatches, Judge Willard's decision will stand as the law so far as Minnesota is concerned and the state will have to regulate the liquor traffic in the territory affected in the Bemidji case.

AFFECTING FISHING RIGHTS

Boundary Dispute Between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

St. Paul, Jan. 24.—The governor has sent to the legislature a communication from George T. Simpson, attorney general, recommending some settlement be speedily reached over the disputed boundary between Minnesota and Wisconsin, in Lake Pepin. The matter is important because of fishing rights in the waters.

[illegible] gone down the cost of legislative printing has increased rapidly during the last few years, according to J. T. Manix, state printer. The cost of printing the list of general orders for each day was $4,135 in 1903, $2,948 in 1905, $7,738 in 1907, and $5,672 in 1909.

Anybody who has been convicted of drunkenness three times within three years and anybody who is shown to be unable to control his appetite for intoxicating liquors or drugs may be committed to the new hospital for inebriates at Willmar, according to a bill introduced in the house by C. E. Johnson of Atwater.

ELECTION FRAUDS CHARGED

Indictments Against New Jersey Public Officers and Business Men.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 24.—A police captain, a number of the city council, several police and business men were among those indicted by the grand jury here on charges of frauds at the November election in this city.

Officers of a fraternal society and of a Republican club were also indicted, the former for keeping a "disorderly house" and the latter for permitting an immoral performance to be given in their headquarters.

The action of the grand jury has created a sensation. Warrants for those named in the indictments were immediately issued. The first to be served was against Daniel Fick, a policeman, who was held in $6,000 bail on charges of false registration and perjury.

ELEVEN KILLED IN WRECK

Passenger and Ore Trains Collide at Hopkinstown, Wales.

London, Jan. 24.—Eleven persons were killed in a collision on the Taff Valley railway at Hopkinstown, Wales, between a passenger train and an ore train. Several leaders of the striking Welsh coal miners who were on their way to London to attend a labor conference were among the killed. Several passengers were also badly injured.

Spoiling His Advantage.

Robert Lowe, the English journalist, was always saying good things. "Look at that fool throwing away his natural advantages!" he exclaimed when a deaf member of the house of commons put up his ear trumpet.

His Mile.

Mr. Baggie—Confound that tailor! These trousers are a mile too long. Mrs. Baggie—How much shall I turn them up? Mr. Baggie—About half an inch.

Salt on the Bird's Tail

Story of a Mardi Gras Masquerade

By SAMUEL E. BRANT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Who is the biggest fool you ever met?"

"Man or woman?"

"Woman."

"The girl I'm engaged to."

"Well, I like that. What kind of wife do you expect her to make?"

"How should I know her qualifications for a wife? Marriage is a lottery. Other men may marry for qualifications, but we youngsters don't pretend to forecast what a girl's going to be. And I don't believe the old ones hit it any better than we."

"What makes you set your fiancee down as a fool?"

"I'll tell you, but I must begin back a little way. She's Madge Whitridge, only it should be Madge Wildfire instead. Not that she is so wild as she was. She's been quieted down a bit by a certain little happening that came near resulting disastrously. She nearly caused my death."

"You don't mean it! Not intentionally, I suppose."

"Well, whether there was a spark of intention in it I don't know. You never can tell what a woman is going to do or why she does it. We can't be sure she knows herself. If Madge had caused my death any prosecuting attorney might have made a very good case against her of doing it with malice aforethought. And to tell the truth I'm not sure but she did."

"And you're going to marry her?"

"You bet—that is, if she doesn't shake me for another fellow, though I don't think she would do that now. She might have done it before this thing I'm going to tell you about happened; but, as I said, it sobered her, and she's quite tame. That's the time I chose for putting salt on the bird's tail.

"There's more appropriateness in this simile than you may imagine, as you'll see in a moment. But for the incident. We 'floor gliders,' as one called our dancing club of young people—there was not one over twenty, and some of the girls weren't over fifteen—concluded we'd celebrate the Mardi Gras with a masquerade ball. I'd been getting sweet on Madge—Wildfire I may as well call her—and about the time the costumes were being arranged I was sitting up to her like a sick kitten to a warm brick. In fact, we arranged to have corresponding costumes for the ball.

"This was after Rostand's play of 'Chanteclér' came out, and everybody was talking about it. You know that the leading lady chicken in the play is the hen pheasant, the leading gentleman being the rooster chanticleer. We concluded to get ourselves up as these two birds. I was a month arranging my outfit—I did it all myself, you know—but when I got it done it was a corker. I made the body of a rooster, which I strapped under my arms, with an elegant head and comb in front and a fine display of cock's tail behind, the tail being made of tissue paper of different colors. You couldn't have told it from the real thing.

"I went to see Madge the afternoon before the ball. It so happened that we got to quarreling, and I went off in a huff. This was unfortunate, to say the least. We had spent a lot of time getting up our bird rigs and expected to make a lot of fun billing and cooing during the ball, and the worst of it was, now that we were in just the opposite condition from what we expected, we hadn't time to get other rigs."

"What was the cause of the quarrel?"

"We tried on our costumes in advance, and when she walked I told her she waddled like a duck. That made her mad, and she fired back, and we soon were in for it hot and heavy.

"When the ball came off, instead of walking about together, I strutting, she cuddling up beside me, we were as far apart as possible and when we met glared at each other. After awhile I saw her sitting in a window with Ned Tucker. This made me all fired jealous as well as mad, and to show my spleen what did I do but go up near where they were sitting and whisk around with the intention of turning my back on Madge. I didn't calculate how near my tail feathers were to them, but it seems they brushed their faces. This made Madge madder than ever. Ned had just struck a match to light a cigarette. Madge jerked it out of his hand and held it under the tip of my tail.

"In a second the whole of it was in flames. I tried to get the rooster part of me off, but it was tied on so well that I couldn't do it. The flames ran from the tail to the wings and from the wings to the rest of the body. The whole roomful of people rushed toward me, scared out of their seven senses, every one crying, 'Put him out!' Whether they meant to put out the flames or put me out to prevent my setting them all afire I don't know. I was howling with the burns and with fear when a Roman senator took off his togs and wrapped it about me.

"I was taken to a carriage and home. I wasn't burned at all, but just to punish the confounded girl that applied the match I gave out that I might die. She was knocked clean out, and when I let up on her she wilted. She had put a match to my tail; I put salt on hers and caught her."

"You mean she caught you. There are lots of men who think they do the catching when they are caught themselves."

Why He Stopped.

They had been engaged only a week. He had kissed her fully forty times that evening. When he stopped the tears came into her eyes, and she said: "Dearest, you have ceased to love me."

"No, I haven't," he replied, "but I must breathe."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Cunning.

Cunning signifies especially a habit or gift of overreaching, accompanied with enjoyment and a sense of superiority. It is associated with small and dull conceit and with an absolute want of sympathy or affection. It is the intensest rendering of vulgarity, absolute and utter.—Ruskin.

Equal to the Cat.

Semple—Johnson has trained his cat to climb a brick wall. Nistor—Oh, that's no stunt! I've trained my ivy to do that.—Detroit News.

Dreary Waiting.

The chap who lives on the strength of what he used to be has to wait a long time for the second table.—Chicago Journal.

All skill ought to be exerted for universal good.—Johnson.

Anti-Saloon League and Prohibition People Are Insisting Highest Court Should Pass on the Question—Understood President Taft Will Issue an Order Annulling Liquor Provisions in All Indian Treaties Except That of 1855.

Washington, Jan. 24.—An appeal will be taken by the government from the decision of Judge Willard in the Bemidji liquor case. This announcement was made by a member of the Minnesota delegation who has been following the liquor situation closely.

It also is understood President Taft will issue an order before the end of the week annulling all the Indian treaties, so far as the liquor provisions are concerned, save that of 1855, which is involved in the Bemidji case. The treaty of 1855 cannot be annulled save by action of congress. No action of that character will be necessary if Judge Willard's decision is upheld by the supreme court.

If Judge Willard is reversed, then it is altogether likely the next congress will be asked to take action which will abrogate the treaty and put the administration of liquor laws entirely up to the state. The treaties which the president can annul, and on which he is expected to act, are those of 1851, 1853, 1854, 1863, 1867, 1869.

The appeal from Judge Willard's decision will be taken because of the insistence of the Anti-saloon league and other prohibition people that the case should be taken to the highest court for a final verdict. These people have argued that there is but one way of settling the question for all time and that is by getting a decision from the supreme court, and the administration has found it difficult to answer that argument.

Both the department of justice and the department of interior, through the office of commissioner of Indian affairs, will recommend an appeal be taken, it is said.

Pending the appeal, as has been stated in these dispatches, Judge Willard's decision will stand as the law so far as Minnesota is concerned and the state will have to regulate the liquor traffic in the territory affected in the Bemidji case.

AFFECTING FISHING RIGHTS

Boundary Dispute Between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

St. Paul, Jan. 24.—The governor has sent to the legislature a communication from George T. Simpson, attorney general, recommending some settlement be speedily reached over the disputed boundary between Minnesota and Wisconsin, in Lake Pepin. The matter is important because of fishing rights in the waters.

[illegible] gone down the cost of legislative printing has increased rapidly during the last few years, according to J. T. Manix, state printer. The cost of printing the list of general orders for each day was $4,135 in 1903, $2,948 in 1905, $7,738 in 1907, and $5,672 in 1909.

Anybody who has been convicted of drunkenness three times within three years and anybody who is shown to be unable to control his appetite for intoxicating liquors or drugs may be committed to the new hospital for inebriates at Willmar, according to a bill introduced in the house by C. E. Johnson of Atwater.

ELECTION FRAUDS CHARGED

Indictments Against New Jersey Public Officers and Business Men.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 24.—A police captain, a number of the city council, several police and business men were among those indicted by the grand jury here on charges of frauds at the November election in this city.

Officers of a fraternal society and of a Republican club were also indicted, the former for keeping a "disorderly house" and the latter for permitting an immoral performance to be given in their headquarters.

The action of the grand jury has created a sensation. Warrants for those named in the indictments were immediately issued. The first to be served was against Daniel Fick, a policeman, who was held in $6,000 bail on charges of false registration and perjury.

ELEVEN KILLED IN WRECK

London, Jan. 24.—Eleven persons were killed in a collision on the Taff Valley railway at Hopkinstown, Wales, between a passenger train and an ore train. Several leaders of the striking Welsh coal miners who were on their way to London to attend a labor conference were among the killed. Several passengers were also badly injured.

Spoiling His Advantage.

Salt on the Bird's Tail

Story of a Mardi Gras Masquerade

By SAMUEL E. BRANT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Who is the biggest fool you ever met?"

"Man or woman?"

"Woman."

"The girl I'm engaged to."

"Well, I like that. What kind of wife do you expect her to make?"

"How should I know her qualifications for a wife? Marriage is a lottery. Other men may marry for qualifications, but we youngsters don't pretend to forecast what a girl's going to be. And I don't believe the old ones hit it any better than we."

"What makes you set your fiancee down as a fool?"

"I'll tell you, but I must begin back a little way. She's Madge Whitridge, only it should be Madge Wildfire instead. Not that she is so wild as she was. She's been quieted down a bit by a certain little happening that came near resulting disastrously. She nearly caused my death."

"You don't mean it! Not intentionally, I suppose."

"Well, whether there was a spark of intention in it I don't know. You never can tell what a woman is going to do or why she does it. We can't be sure she knows herself. If Madge had caused my death any prosecuting attorney might have made a very good case against her of doing it with malice aforethought. And to tell the truth I'm not sure but she did."

"And you're going to marry her?"

"You bet—that is, if she doesn't shake me for another fellow, though I don't think she would do that now. She might have done it before this thing I'm going to tell you about happened; but, as I said, it sobered her, and she's quite tame. That's the time I chose for putting salt on the bird's tail.

"There's more appropriateness in this simile than you may imagine, as you'll see in a moment. But for the incident. We 'floor gliders,' as one called our dancing club of young people—there was not one over twenty, and some of the girls weren't over fifteen—concluded we'd celebrate the Mardi Gras with a masquerade ball. I'd been getting sweet on Madge—Wildfire I may as well call her—and about the time the costumes were being arranged I was sitting up to her like a sick kitten to a warm brick. In fact, we arranged to have corresponding costumes for the ball.

"This was after Rostand's play of 'Chantecler' came out, and everybody was talking about it. You know that the leading lady chicken in the play is the hen pheasant, the leading gentleman being the rooster chanticleer. We concluded to get ourselves up as these two birds. I was a month arranging my outfit—I did it all myself, you know—but when I got it done it was a corker. I made the body of a rooster, which I strapped under my arms, with an elegant head and comb in front and a fine display of cock's tail behind, the tail being made of tissue paper of different colors. You couldn't have told it from the real thing.

"I went to see Madge the afternoon before the ball. It so happened that we got to quarreling, and I went off in a huff. This was unfortunate, to say the least. We had spent a lot of time getting up our bird rigs and expected to make a lot of fun billing and cooing during the ball, and the worst of it was, now that we were in just the opposite condition from what we expected, we hadn't time to get other rigs."

"What was the cause of the quarrel?"

"We tried on our costumes in advance, and when she walked I told her she waddled like a duck. That made her mad, and she fired back, and we soon were in for it hot and heavy.

"When the ball came off, instead of walking about together, I strutting, she cuddling up beside me, we were as far apart as possible and when we met glared at each other. After awhile I saw her sitting in a window with Ned Tucker. This made me all fired jealous as well as mad, and to show my spleen what did I do but go up near where they were sitting and whisk around, with the intention of turning my back on Madge. I didn't calculate how near my tail feathers were to them, but it seems they brushed their faces. This made Madge madder than ever. Ned had just struck a match to light a cigarette. Madge jerked it out of his hand and held it under the tip of my tail.

"In a second the whole of it was in flames. I tried to get the rooster part of me off, but it was tied on so well that I couldn't do it. The flames ran from the tail to the wings and from the wings to the rest of the body. The whole roomful of people rushed toward me, scared out of their seven senses, every one crying, 'Put him out!' Whether they meant to put out the flames or put me out to prevent my setting them all afire I don't know. I was howling with the burns and with fear when a Roman senator took off his togs and wrapped it about me.

"I was taken to a carriage and home. I wasn't burned at all, but just to punish the confounded girl that applied the match I gave out that I might die. She was knocked clean out, and when I let up on her she wilted. She had put a match to my tail; I put salt on hers and caught her."

"You mean she caught you. There are lots of men who think they do the catching when they are caught themselves."

Why He Stopped.

They had been engaged only a week. He had kissed her fully forty times that evening. When he stopped the tears came into her eyes, and she said: "Dearest, you have ceased to love me."

"No, I haven't," he replied, "but I must breathe."—Ladies' Home Journal.

TO AILING WOMEN.

No woman can be healthy and well if the kidneys are sick. Poisons that pass off in the secretions when the kidneys are well, are retained in the body when the kidneys are sick. Kidneys and bladder become inflamed and swollen and worse troubles quickly follow. This is often the true cause of bearing down pains, lameness, backache, sideache, etc. Uric poisoning also causes headaches, dizzy spells, languor, nervousness and rheumatic pain.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, a remedy that cures sick kidneys. You will get better as the kidneys get better, and health will return when the kidneys are well. Let a Thief River Falls woman tell you about Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. O. Christofferson, 414 St. Paul Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results and they have also been taken with benefit by other members of our family. We keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house all the time and do not think we could get along without them."

For sale by all dealers: Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Rember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

NOTICE

The annual meeting of the Thief River Falls Co-operative Creamery Association will be held at the Antlers Club rooms on the 4th Saturday of January being the 28th at 1:30 p. m. A free dinner will be served to Creamery patrons on first floor of the same building before meeting.

MRS. FRANK CHANCE SELECTS ORANGES FOR SHIPMENT

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 00—(Special to the ....) Included in the trainload of "Sunkist" oranges that left California for the eastern market is the produce from the Chance groves. Mrs. Frank Chance, wife of the "Peerless Leader" of Chicago's Cubs, personally helped in the grading of their crop. None but the most perfect specimens of the Chance fruit was allowed to be shipped in the trainload of "Sunkist."

These oranges are the finest grown in all California, and those from the Chance groves, according to Mrs. Chance, are among the most perfect ever grown in Southern California.

The golden fruit was shipped in such a quantity that "orange week" will be an event in all towns that are fortunate enough to be on the route of the "Sunkist Special."

C. W. STEWART GETS A BOOST.

C. W. Stewart, ticket agent for the Great Northern in the city for the past two years or more, left last evening for Sioux City, Ia., where he will assume his duties as ticket agent in the big union depot at that place. This is a material promotion and while the many warm friends of Mr. Stewart regret his departure from Crookston, they rejoice in the fact that his abilities have been rewarded. Mrs. Stewart and the children will remain here for the present, but will leave for the home of her mother, Mrs. Kretzchmar, at Thief River Falls o remain till he is settled.

MAURICE MALONE PROMOTED.

Maurice Malone who has been chief clerk of the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Co.'s mill at Spooner, leaves in afew days for Fort Frances, where he is to assume the position of cashier for the new mill which the Shevlin interests are arranging to operate at that place.

We are all sorry to lose Maurice but everyone is glad to learn that his new position is in the nature of a promotion, He is the stamp of young man who can't be kept down. Able, clean-living, industrious, and with the idea firmly planted in his mind that filling one's stomach with highballs isn't necessary to success, "Morry" Malone has gone ahead from day to day holding the confidence and respect of his employers, and his richly deserved promotion is the logical result. That he will go yet higher up in the company's service is a foregone conclusion.

Last evening a farewell reception was tendered him, and a large number of his friends were in attendance to say good-bye and to wish him the best of success in his new position. The Region joins his friends (and they include all who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance) in offering congratulations to Mr. Malone.—Rainy River Region.

"Morry" Malone's many friends in this city will be glad to learn of his good fortune.

NEW SOLUM.

Joe, Hjalmar and Albert Alby are busy now-a-days cutting cord wood for Martin Jershaw.

Simon Gulseth and Oscar Mosleth from Thief River Falls visited with G. Olson and A. Gulseth Friday and Saturday last week.

The Young People's Socity which met at P. Sorenson last Friday evening, was well attended in spite of the cold weather. A good time was reported.

Joe Alby left for Thief River Falls last Friday and returned next morning by the Soo to Strip.

Jennie Sagmoen, Jerda Johnson, Edwin Skjorswold and Charlie Sagmoen were visiting with the Hagen young people last Sunday.

Miss Emily Bjorsness visited at O. Flann's Sunday.

The Ladies' Aid will meet with Mrs. B. Sagmoen the 31st of this month.

A stork was hovering around our neighborhood last Friday afternoon, and finally it alighted and made its visit with Mr. and Mrs. Peter Pederson, and before he left, he made them the happy parents of a bright baby boy.

WINKJER WILL COME.

The following letter will be of special interest to the farmers of this locality:

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 25, 1911.
Prof. J. H. Hay,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your favor of the 23rd instant requesting me to be present at your special dairymen's meeting, February 1st.

In reply I will say that I will come up for that meeting. Although there is much work around here in the office I cannot turn down your urgent request.

I feel much interest in your people and am glad of the opportunity to see them.

Yours truly,
Joel Winkjer,
Commissioner.

MACHINE WILL BE USED.

E. L. Quist returned yesterday morning from a trip to Madison, Wisconsin, where he went the first of the week to investigate the merits of a Rectigraph Machine.

Mr. Quist reports that he was convinced of the merits of the machine and hence made a contract to lease this novel instrument.

By a curious co-incidence of circumstances he says that he has secured the only machine of its kind and size in the world and as soon as the machine arrives he will be able to reproduce by this photographic method the record pages in full size and they will be the absolute facsimiles of the pages that are copied.

This machine will be used in the transcription of the records for Pennington County and will facilitate the work and reduce the time required in doing this work by several months. It is not expected that there will be any material reduction in the cost of the transcription but the work will be of a far better quality than could be done by any other known method.

The reason the cost will not be reduced is that the rental of the machine is very high and in addition to this one must sign a contract to buy all the supplies from the Rectigraph Company and these supplies being prinicpally a highly sensetized paper and a finishing compound that come at such a high figure as to make the cost of transcription just about the same figure as it would cost by the ordinary method.

THERE'S NO RISK.

If This Medicine Does Not Benefit You Pay Nothing.

A physician who made a specialty of stomach troubles, particularly dyspepsia, after years of study perfected the formula from which Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are made.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be the greatest remedy known for the relief of acute indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is almost immediate. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time brings about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will insure healthy appetite, aid digestion and promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain them only at—The Rexall Store.

PATRIOTISM VERSUS CANNONISM

An Insurgent Surgeon. Woodchucks. Senate Election Contests. Reapportionment.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 2nd, 1911:—The legislative stage saw some important plays during the week. There were sharp, almost acrimonious encounters between L. C. Spooner, the Lion of the House, and Dr. W. T. Stone, the insurgent who objects to the methods of the "rules and the roller". Another attack revealed more Cannonism. A woodchuck was caught by the very tip of the tail as it was slipping through the lower body. The election contests in the Senate are growing in interst and mystery as the time for decision draws near. The first clash in the fight for reapportionment left both sides wondering where they were at.

• • •

A friends advised that I produce some "Pen Pictures of Politicians." The suggestion is tempting. It cannot be followed at this time, however, but I do want you to consider briefly a representative of the other type. On the first day of the session I took a survey of the new members. Among them was Dr. W. T. Stone, of Park Rapids. Inquiry developed that he had followed the allopathic profession for a quarter of a century, I had known doctors of that school in the legislature and as a rule they were not very aggressive in attacking the ills of politics, so I paid little attention to Dr. Stone, except to notice that he looked intelligent and honest. Although he said never a word, in less than two weeks he impressed upon everyone the fact that he had come to the legislature with a splendid equipment for public service. He introduced bills embodying the most progressive ideas, and further proved that was permeated with fundamental democracy by publishing and presenting to each member of both branches a pamphlet defining and advocating direct legislation. Then he began to insurge with voice and vote. Last week he bore the brunt of he verbal battles with the machine. The "roller" ran over him, as a matter of course. But he arose from each encounter with a smile, and proceeded to arm himself for the next. In a marvelously short space of time Dr. Stone has unmasked the men and methods of the reactionary camp. He abhors hypocrisy and graft in every form. These characteristics coupled with his ability and fearlessness, may soon bestow upon him the enviable distinction so long held by Elmer E. Adams of Fergus Falls, that of being the most hated man in the House.

• • •

Cannonism is a condition in lawmaking which gives a minority power over a majority. It makes the Speaker the master instead of the servant of the House. The machine made applications of this principle during the week. When Dr. Stone led an attempt for 'a public interest committee', the committee on rules reported against the resolution and it was held that it would take a two-thirds vote to carry the motion. Again The Speaker ruled that a bill could not be made "a special order" without a two-thirds vote. I am not criticising these decisions of the chair. They were made in accordance with the rules of the House. But the rules are radically wrong when they give to a few authority over a majority. Before the session is over you will see how it works in vital issues.

The progressives are becoming suspicious. It is partly because of H. F. No. 5. This bill bore the name of R. C. Dunn, although it transpires that he had practically no interest in its origin and no knowledge of the jokers it contained. The measure came from the Secelary of State's office and was considered during the illness of Mr. Dunn, he being absent at his home in Princeton. It provides for an appropriation of $28,100 to pay for the publication of proposed constitutional amendments in news papers last October. The law authorizes the Secretary of State to have such matter published in not more than three legal newspapers in each county, but H. F. No. 5 showed that more than that number had been used in several counties and also that not all of them were printed in the English language. The bill provides that $100 be paid to each of a list of 274 papers, leaving the difference between $27,400 and $28,100 to defray "other expenses incurred under the direction of the Secretary of State in carrying out said provisions", which some of the insurgents admit they do not undrestand.

H. F. No. 5 all but slipped through the House before its inconsistences were discovered. Then it was cast into the custody of the Committee on Public Accounts, where it is now in the stages of investigation. At the time of its introduction it was referred to the Appropriations Committee but was taken from that committee upon a motion of its chairman, L. C. Spooner, and placed on general orders. Now members are wondering why the bill was not considered carefully at the proper time and place.

There is no disposition to kill the bill, nor will its passage be long delayed. But there may be alterations. Possibly I shall feel inclined to discuss the incident more fully in a later letter.

His district and the state is to be congratulated upon the success of Senator J. J. Ahmann in his election contest. An attempt was made to unseat him on the ground that he was not a citizen. The Election Committee considered the case and decided unanimously in his favor. It only remains for the whole Senate to adopt the Committee report, which will be done before this is published. Senator Ahmann is one of the most dependable members in the Senate. Whenever a roll is called his name comes first and it is a safe wager that the voting is started in the interest of the people. There is a strategic importance to his position at the head of the roster which may have had something to do with the desire for his defeat.

The other contests, those in which Ray I. Farrington is after the seat of Dr. Froshaug and A. D. Stephens is attempting to unseat John Saugstad, will test the probity of the Senate as will no other issues to come before that body. It is significant that men speak in whispers when discussing these cases. No one can foretell the results in either contest because of the subtle, silent influences at work. Each new day's development seems to indicate that it is Farrington and Stephens vs. Froshaug and Saugstad. If one contestant wins, both will win, unless the interests deem it wise to compromise. It is the old old conflict between patriotism and the property power in politics.

The legislature is getting into a regretable tangle over reapportionment. At present about the only phase of the question which can be regarded as a certainty is that the spirit and purpose of democracy will be the loser, whatever the outcome. If the fight is futile and there is no reapportionment it will mean that most of the session will be given to the useless struggle, to the detriment of direct legislation, extension of the primary and other vital issues. If reapportionment does come, it will be in such a form as to bestow every possible advantage upon special interests.

The brewers hold the balance of power. That splendidly organized influence is in a position to dictate terms to the reapportioners. At present they are presenting a pretense of opposition on the theory that they have a "safe Senate" and do not care to risk a new election of that body two years hence. This seems reasonable and the political reporters on the big dailies are making the most of it; but the Smith—Reese—Zollman machine is not taking a short sighted view of the situation. They see decades and not biennums.

It is absurd that the brewers should endorse the stand of the enemies of reapportionment, that the big cities should not have as large a representation as the rural districts. That would make county option inevitable. Another thing—the brewers will never be in better shape to so divide the state as to minimize the number of county option members.

It is an interesting study to watch the big interests and this issue. Every other legislative question is bound up in and with reapportionment.

If there were any doubt as to the constitutionality or effectiveness of the Cashman distance tariff bill it would be set at rest by the desperate stand of the railroads against it. The transportation trust has never been forced to fight harder. The people will win unless the brewers and steel trusts give aid to the railroad ring.

NO RECORDING CAMERA UNTIL TROUBLE IS OVER.

The indications are that the county board will not purchase a photographic machine for the office of the register of deeds at this session. At the November meeting the matter was referred to the committee on settlement with the county officers, with instructions to make an investigation and report at this session.

"I am of the opinion that the machine is a good thing, but I feel that we can not install one at this time, owing to the conditions in the register of deeds' office," said Supervisor W. H. Sommers, chairman of the committee, this morning.

The county has made a contract with Register of Deeds Kroken for two years and although Mr. Kroken has intimated that he will retain the fees, the county stands ready to pay the salaries of the register and his assistants.

The machine is used for reproducing photographic copies of all instruments filed. It costs about $600 and would do away with copyists.—Madison Journal, Wis.

CORN GROWER'S ASS'N ORGANIZED

Dairymen's Convention Well Attended. Winkjer, Smith, and O'Neil Speak.

In spite of the blizzard on Wednesday a considerable number of farmers came to town to attend the Dairymen's Convention at the Highschool gymnasium as announced in last week's issue of the Press.

The speakers who came here to take part in the program were Joel Winkjer, State Dairy and Food Commissioner of St. Paul and Mr. Smith from Parkers Prairie. Our own Dan O'Neil came up from St. Paul to be present at this occasion to cheer his fellow farmers on and to give us some knowledge of the workings of the legislature at first hand. He said there was a bill before the House introduced by our friend and neighbor Dan Robertson of Argyle providing for a state aid of $2,500 to any and all Highschools in the State complying with the requirements as to study courses etc., for Agricultural Highschool instead of limiting it to ten as is done by the old law.

He showed how the state by rigid hood of the passage of some laws look ing to the advancement of the popular Good Roads Cause.

Dairy Commissioner Winkjer spoke at some length comparing dairy conditions now and thirty years ago. He showed how the state by riged inspection and supervision had caused the Co-operative Creamery Industry to grow to its present large demensions and that it had been made to conform to the Pure Food laws of the state. He lamented that while they had been able to supervise the making of the butter from the cream they had as yet not undertaken to supervise the handling of the dairy stock and the producing and caring for the creamery. He predicted that this would be done in the near future. This, he said would make a uniformly better quality of butter and it has been proven that where boarders are furnished all the butter they want they will eat 25 per cent more if a grade scoring 95 is furnished than if a grade scoring 88 is supplied. This was offered as proof that there would be no overproduction if the quality standard can be raised.

Mr. Smith dwelt practically upon conservation of the fertility of the soil by proper fertilizing the means being provided by the herd of the dairyman.

Before adjourning the farmers present decided to organize the Corn Grower's Association of Upper Minnesota and elected Henry Pope, President, W. C. Spratt, Secretary, and Charles Gustafson, Treasurer.

ONE MAN'S OPINION.

While we are not opposed to the idea of gradual reduction of protection tariff, yet the Pending Candadain Reciprocity Treaty strikes us as coming altogether out of season, and being out of place.

It will certainly take a lot of check for eastern Republicans to vote for this, after we—as a State—have stood pat for protecting New England and Eastern industries, ever since the party was organized, and this at a tremendous expense.

It is only the last 3 or 4 years that the wheat raisers have received any direct benefit from the duty on wheat and now that they do, the Minneapolis milling interests and grain carrying roads are pushing this treaty just for selfish reasons.

The east were the first to get protection, now let them be the first to lose it, and thus give the west a trifling benefit of the system too.

The towns and cities in the grain raising districts will be hurt indirectly by this treaty, for they are dependent to a great extent upon the farmers' prosperity for their own prosperity and growth.

The people of the northwest ought to write their representatives and senators in Washington about this matter at once, as itwill be well for them to be backed up in their fight against the ratification of this treaty, by a steady stream of protests from farmers and others.

DISCUSS LEGISLATION

An informal meeting of about twenty-five business men met at the Commercial Club Rooms on Wednesday to meet Representative D. P. O'Neil and talk over some questions of proposed legislation.

The Cashman Distance Tariff Bill regulating charges by railroad came up for general discussion and occupied the greater share of the meetings time.

It seems there are several ways in which this law will affect the state and it will require considerable study to decide intelligently whether it would be wise legislation or not. A Committee of seven were appointed to make a study of the matter and to report to the Commercial Club.

HIGH SCHOOL DEDICATION.

Governor Will Help Dedicate the New Lincoln School Building.

Monday, February 20th is the day set for the dedication of our new Highschool building. Elaborate preparations are being made for the occasion.

The Governor of our state has agreed to be here at that time and deliver the dedicatory address. Many of the leading educators of our state will be here to take a part in the exercises and invitations will be extended to all interested in school work in neighboring towns to attend.

Complete plans for this occasion with program will appear in next week's issue of the Press.

COMMERCIAL CLUB MEETS TONIGHT.

The Commercial Club will meet tonight to complete their organization by adopting a constitution and bylaws and by electing a permanent secretary and appointing such committees as may be found necessary.

The question of a general celebration of the county division will also come up for consideration.

Everybody should attend.

SANGERFEST IN JUNE.

Under the auspices of the Brage Singing Choir a play "Til Saters," will be given about the 1st part of March. The proceeds of this play will be used for the purpose of making proper arrangements for the concert to be given in this city on the 23, 24, and 25th day of June, 1911 by the Red River Valley Skandinavian Singing Association.

This will be a big gathering and is sure to draw a large number of visitors to our city. We want to receive the visiting Choir's from the several cities in the Red River Valley in a fitting manner and any one who has had experience in similar arrangements knows it takes money to do it, and a lot of it. This gathering will not be for the special benefit of any individual or any special society but rather of general interest to all, and something that lovers of good music will enjoy.

Announcement as to the date for the play "Til Saters" will be given later. This same play was given a few years ago by local talents to a crowed house, it was a success then, it will be even better now, it will be an evening that all who attend will enjoy, besides contributing to give a boost for our city.

The committee in charge of the "Sangerfest" dislike to ask for subscriptions and take this means for raising funds trusting it will be more popular and meet with a ready response.

DUNN HAS A LIQUOR BILL SCHEME WILL DO AWAY WITH ROADHOUSE—OPTIONISTS MIGHT SUPPORT IT.

Representative R. C. Dunn, of Princeton, will spring a new one on the county optionists that may upset all of their plans for legislation this winter.

He has worked out a scheme for doing away with the roadhouse and saloons in the thinly settled districts where there is no police regulation He will propose himself or will see that there is proposed a law which will prevent county commissioners from issuing licenses for county saloons.

This condition, according to Mr. Dunn, is the source of the real trouble in the counties which has brought about the agitation for a county option act. In support of his position he points to the recent upheavel in Ramsey and Hennepin counties over the roadhouses.

"There are two counties in the state where this idea of mine has been put into operation," he said "One is Aitkin and the other is Itasca. There, the commissioners feeling it would be impossible to properly police the saloons, refused to grant licenses.

"I am not defending the saloons but I do feel that the bulk of the trouble in the past has been due to these roadhouses. A discontinuance of these places will greatly reduce the number of offenses generally and, which it would not be going as far as the county optionists desire, I am sure it would so materially improve things that their support for the measure can be secured."

PROGRESSIVES HAVE ORGANIZED

Adopt Platform. Prominent Members. Clapp Chairman Executive Committee.

Washington, D. C. Jan. 31st.—The organization of the National Progressive Republican League, announcement of which was made public a few days ago, is an important move in many ways. First of all it gathers together the progressive and insurgent forces of the country under a definite program, which thus far it has lacked. The progressive Republicans now have an organization which will enable them to push their cause forward to the best possible advantage. The trouble has been that the program of the progressives has lacked in definiteness and organization. Individuals here and there, men like Cummins and LaFollette, Clapp and Bristow, Beveridge and Bourne, as well as other men outside of Congress, have preached the doctrine of popular government and the means whereby it could be fully restored to the people, but all the preaching was lacking the force and strength that comes from organization. The National Progressive Republican League crystalizes the best thought and effort of the progressive element in the Republican party and brings it under one banner.

• • •

It is to be noted that the newly organized League adopts a platform of principles, with no mention of persons. Its platform is simple and concrete. It favors popular election of United States Sentors, direct primaries everywhere, primary selection of delegates to national conventions, with the voter empowered to express his preference as to candidates for President, the initiative, referendum and recall.

• • •

Just why the Taft forces should view the organization of the League as a move hostile to the renomination of Taft for the Presidency is not clear, unless it be that the League numbers in its charter membemship the names of some men who have been anti-Taft. One has but to recall the names of Gifford Pinchot and his brother Amos Pinchot, James R. Garfield, secretary of the interior under Roosevelt, Louis D. Brandeis, the attorney for Pinchot in the Ballinger controversy, to glean a suggestion of the hostility which might be back of the movement.

• • •

On the other hand the League includes in its membership public men, members of Congress and others, who have consistently supported the Taft policies when they considered these policies for the best interests of the people. The League takes the position that the people shall decide who their candidates are to be and it is willing to abide by the verdict of the people. In the working out of the principles that primary selection of delegates to national conventions should prevail the result may be that the popular choice for President will be some progressive, as for instance Cummins or LaFollette. But the League is not worrying about Presidential candidates. It is most anxious to put in operation the machinery which will give the people the opportunity to express their preference in this regard. The organization is fortunate in having some men of wealth who will give of their money in order that an aggressive campaign may be conducted. Headquarters will be opened in Washington at once.

The League will make every effort to be the controlling force in the Republican party. The Progressive Republican leaders in perfecting this organization realized that the time had come for a concerted move to assume active leadership of the party. In no other way could the result be accomplished. They also realized that such a move would be the surest way to head off any movement that had for its object the formation of a 3rd party. Of course, it was to be expected that the organization papers of the country would raise a hue and cry and point the finger of suspicion. The chief weapon employed by these organs is the claim that the move is anti-Taft in object and purpose. There are many here who are saying that if Taft is wise he will not consider the organization as hostile to him. These men point out that upon the attitude of Taft towards the League much of his future political success will depend. Heretofore Taft has had to deal with individual Progressive Republicans. Now, he is confronted with a strong and powerful organization within his own party and if he recognizes it as such and is not unwilling to accept its counsel and advice, he will do much towards making himself popular with the people.

• • •

Minnesota has a strong representation on the League's charter roll. In Congress there are the names of Senator Moses E. Clapp and Representatives Davis and Lindbergh. From the ranks of privite citizenship are George S. Loftus, Hugh T. Halbert and James A Peterson. Other names can be added at any time. Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr. Oregon, is the president of the League; Representative George W. Norris, Nebraska, first vice president; Gov. Chase Osborn, Michigan, second vice president; Charles R. Crane, Chicago, treasurer. Senator Clapp is chairman of the executive committee.

• • •

Minnesota rural carriers will rejoice at the action of the Honse of Representatives in increasing their salaries from $900 to $1,000 a year. This is an increase that every one approved, and one which the carriers certainly deserved.

• • •

H. K. Slater, secretary of the National Dairy Union, formerly of Minnesota, has been in Washington on business connected with oleo legislation and the protection of the butter interests. Nothing will be done this session in the way of proposed oleo legislation, but chances are that next session an effort will be made to repeal the present ten cent tax on colored oleomargarine. It is stated that the National Dairy Union will not oppose the repeal, but will insist upon protection to butter through the use of the color distinction. The Dairy Union will ask that oleo be sold uncolored with a two cent tax, subject to rigid inspection.

• • •

Congressman Steenerson has recently introduced in the House a bill which is aimed to give relief to settlers in the fire-stricken districts on Northern Minnesota, particularly in the counties of Roseau and Beltrami. One of the provisions of the bill grants two years' additional time in which to make final proof on homesteads to persons whose property and buildings were destroyed by fires. The same provision applies to persons who were obliged to leave their homesteads. The State Immigration Commission of Minnesota is deeply interested in the passage of the bill, which is now before the committee on Public Lands.

How We Paid The Mortgage

BY WILLIAM SMITH.

"Tell your mother when you get home tonight that I have a corn binder here in town that I got in a trade, and she may have it to cut that corn, it won't cost her a cent, and here is an order for it." And he handed me a slip of paper.

I thanked him and started for home.—This was the very problem we had been trying to solve. With a corn binder it was only a matter of a weeks work to cut the corn.

I ran almost the entire distance home; and was completely out of breath when I reached the house.

"What in the world is the matter! Bruce?" asked her mother, as I ran into the house, hat in hand, and the sweat running down my face in little rivulets mixed with the dust from the road. "Corn binder" was all I could say, and handed her the slip.

"Well what on earth?" exclaimed mother, unable to grasp the situation.

"Corn binder, Mr. Cook has let us have it for nothing." And after I mopped the sweat and dirt off my face and recovered my wind, I managed to explain how he had offered us the use of the binder.

"Well that is indeed very kind of Mr. Cook! and we will make use of it; you may go in tomorrow Sam and get it."

I went along with Sam the following day; and when we arrived at the village, and presented the order to Mr. Bannock in whose keeping the binder was left, he told us that Mr. Bennett was making, or had made some arrangements on the telephone with Mr. Cook's chief clerk, and bought the binder.

"That's strange,"! said Sam, it was only yesterday that Mr. Cook offered us the use of the binder; and gave Bruce this order to get it."

Mr. Bannock took the order and read it over,- "Something wrong, something wrong about this: -it's mighty funny if George Cook said you could have that binder, and turned around the next day and sold it to Bennett."

"Don't believe George knows a thing about it; never was known to do such a thing; and besides, he has taken a fancy to you boys." "Tell you what you do, go and hook on to that binder and take her along."

"We don't want any trouble about it, but we need the binder to cut our corn." "Trouble shucks, take it along; you have the order, and I dont know that the deal's closed with Mr. Bennett."

We hitched onto the binder and were out o nthe main street with it, when Mr. Bennett, accompanied by his son, Dave, came out of the bank and hailed us. "Here you that's my binder." "Where are you taking it?"

"Why, I understand it was Mr. Cook's machine, and we have an order for it." "It's not Cook's; It's mine, I bought it today and need it myself; take it back where you found it or I'll have you arrested for stealing it." "Do you hear?"

"Yes Mr. Bennett, I hear, but I'm not a thief, I have—"

"Don't you sass my father." said Dave, or I'll give you your deserts." and with that he gave Sam a push; your old Dad bucked us on the county division, and you boys think you are all together too smart."

This was more than he could stand. "I'm no thief. I'm an honest boy, and I can thrash you, and I'll do it too, if you ever dare lay hands on me again."

"What's this? what's the trouble? asked Mr. Bannock coming up where we had stopped with the binder."

"That's my binder!" said Mr. Bennett in his smoothest tones. Of course I know nothing of the arrangements of which this young man speaks. I bought the machine of Cook's chief clerk today."

"Why Bennett you hav'nt a stock of corn, what in the world do you want with a corn binder?" That's by business Mr. Bannock," replied Bennett curtly.

"Have you an order for the machine?" "No but—" "well this boy has a personal one from Mr. Cook; I told him to take it; it was left in my care, and it's in his possession now," "We'll see about this, fairly roared Bennett, I've not with you yet young man." Look out Sam! I called, but it was too late. Dave Bennett had approached him gfrom behind and dealt him a heavy blow on the side of the head. Sam seemed more surprised than hurt, and it took him a moment or two to realize what had happened, but when he did, the way he went at Dave was—well, it simply scared me.

Sam never was much of a hand to turn the other cheek, chuckled uncle Pose, and he gave Dave such a thrashing as he richly deserved.

Mesdames Frank Effinger, F. Jaranson and W. B. Fuller will entertain for the benefit of St. Bernard's society at the home of W. B. Fuller, 123 North Markley Av., on Thursday evening Feb. 9th. Everybody cordially invited.

A lease has been closed between A. J. Giller and Mr. O. H. Nelson. Mr. O. H. Nelson has leased his store building and upstairs to A. J. Giller for two years on Tuesday Jan. 31st. The building is going to be remodeled with better improvements than before.

The Rt. Reverend J. D. Morrison D. P. L. L. D. Bishop of Duluth will hold services and preach in the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening Feb. 7th at 7:30 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to the citizens of Thief River Falls to hear the Bishop.

The Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club plays the comedy "Oak Farm" at the Auditorium tonight and expect a good attendance in spite of any counter attractions in the city. A "Get acquainted" dance will follow the play. This is a move in the right direction and it is to be hoped that our acquaintance as citizens of neighboring counties will be more congenial than our old acquaintance as taxpayers in the same county was.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists. Price, 75c per bottle.

FREAKS OF A RIVER.

A Stream So Crooked That It Double Crosses Itself.

There is a stream in Massachusetts called the North river. It starts in a pond near Hanson and runs to the sea at Scituate. It is ten miles by air line from Hanson to Scituate, and the river is forty miles long.

This river is probably the most remarkable body of water, barring the Dead sea, on this footstool and has stood more abuse and bad language than the Chicago river. When the tide is coming in the river runs upstream, and not only that, but the upper part of it, which is fresh water, also runs up, and the spectacle of a fresh water river beating it uphill is alone enough to call attention to itself. But there is much more to it than that.

The North river is noted for being the scene of the last Indian raid on the coast settlements. It is notable for having given birth to the ship Columbia, whose captain discovered and named the Columbia river, and was the first American vessel to circumnavigate the world. It is notorious for having suddenly changed its mind on its course on the night of Nov. 27, 1898, when it moved its mouth three miles to the northward, presented the town of Marshfield with a deep harbor, killed three men and converted about 200,000 acres of prime meadow land into a salt marsh.

But the chief thing about this river is its crookedness. This river is so crooked that it double crosses itself If you don't believe it go and see There is one place in Hanover where by making three loops the river moves toward the sea for a distance of almost fifty feet and meanders about for fifteen miles in doing it.—Boston Traveler.

"Mr. Chairman," said the new member of the literary club, "I move you, sir"—

"I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman," interrupted one of the other members.

"State your point of order."

"The gentleman says 'I move you.' It is not only out of order but utterly absurd for a man of 114 pounds to talk of 'moving' a chairman who weighs 300."

"The point is well taken!" roared the presiding officer, bringing his gravel down with a resounding thud. "The gentleman will merely 'move' or take his seat!"—Chicago Tribune.

WHEN THE TIME CAME

By M. QUAD.

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Mrs. Sarah Drew was a New Hampshire widow. She owned a farm, and Jake White was her hired man. He was a good man and a good worker and had been with the family for three years when Farmer White died. It will never be known to outsiders whether Mr. White, when told that he was to be gathered to his fathers, called Jake to his bedside and said:

"I must go, but I am consoled by the thought that I leave Sarah in good hands. Give her a year or so to mourn my loss and then propose matrimony."

Three years went by and Jake had not spoken. There were times when he thought he was encouraged to speak out and other times when he was prepared to come in from the field after a hard day's work and learn that the widow was engaged to the sewing machine agent who had that route. The widow, too, had thoughts. It was more than once whispered about that Jake was in love with this or that farmer girl, and she had come to feel that his loss would be a double one.

Mrs. Drew had been a widow for four years and Jake White had done bushels and bushels of thinking when winter came on. When the foot or more of snow which heralded the change of season had got packed down on the highway Providence put it into Jake's head to get out the big hand sled and propose a ride down the long and winding hill. Providence didn't go so far as to put the widow next as to what would happen, but it meant well by both. It had been a long time, and Providence meant to hurry things up a bit. Half a dozen of the neighbors were to take part in that moonlight sleigh ride, but for one reason or another all backed out, leaving the two alone. Probably this was another trick on the part of Providence.

About the time the sled was drawn out for the glide Elder Henderson, who lived just beyond the foot of the hill, was saying to his wife:

"Martha, I bought ten bushels of taters of the Widder White yesterday."

"We'll need 'em all before spring," was the reply.

"I was goin' for 'em tomorrer, but it's such a nice night that I dunno but I'll yoke up the oxen and jog along now."

"Might as well, I guess, but look out that the taters don't get frostbit. You know how nighsighted you are in the moonlight. If you hear sleighbells you'd better give 'em the road."

"Nighsighted!" he indignantly sniffed. "Don't you go to makin' out that I'm a hundred years old. Why, I could pick up a pin on the darkest night you ever saw. I've got just the same rights as anybody, and I'm dinged if I give more'n half the road."

The oxen were yoked in due time and started out. There were bags to hold the potatoes and blankets to cover the bags, and any old sport would have given odds of two to one that the elder, the oxen and its cargo would arrive at the top of the hill right end up after a climb of twenty minutes. The wager would have been made without taking Providence into consideration, and the old sport would have lost.

The Widow White was bundled up and seated on the sled. In fact, she was strapped on. Jake sat close behind her, dragging the foot that was to steer the sled a straight course. As they were ready to start it came over him to speak of his love. A feeling came to the widow that he was going to, but the time was not ripe. Providence figures those things down to minutes and seconds. As Jake shut his mouth on his words and started the sled Elder Henderson, near the foot of the hill, started singing a hymn. He not only loved the sound of his singing, but he thought the oxen ought to be encouraged. His voice came floating up the hill, and as Jake caught it he said:

"Mrs. White, that's Elder Henderson."

"Yes."

"He's probably coming after those potatoes with his oxen and sled."

"Well?"

"He'll be in the middle of the road, and as our sled is already getting away from control there's going to be a smashup. I want to say to you that I have loved you for the last three years and to ask you if you will marry me?"

"Oh, Jake!"

"It's the elder and the oxen for sure. Yes or no?"

"It's so sudden!"

"Must I—I"—

"Five seconds more!"

"Then—yes!"

Elder Henderson was marching ahead of the oxen, a hero leading the way. He was struck and sent flying and his tune cut short. Then the sled struck the oxen and flung them into the ditch and made a long jump over the other and a minute later was at the foot of the hill and Jake was saying:

"We might say the first of next week for the wedding!"

It didn't come off quite as quick as that, as they waited for the elder's cuts and bruises to heal so that he could be a guest, but things came all right in a little time, and a favorite saying of the elder's is:

"All the hand of Providence, sir. If I hadn't set out to sled them taters home that night there might never have been a marriage."

Placing the Blame.

"What did the rhinoceros do when you fired at him?" asked the eager listener.

The Bird Table.

In the old countries of Europe the bird table may still be seen in the rural districts. A bird table is made by driving a short stake into the ground and firmly nailing a shallow wooden box on top of it. The box generally measures two by three feet and has a number of holes in the bottom to drain it of rain or snow water. It is always high enough to be beyond reach of any cat that might try to leap to it from the ground. Care also is taken to select a spot far enough from fences, trees or buildings to prevent cats from pouncing down on it when the birds are feeding. Into the bird table go scraps from the house table and kitchen, pieces of stale bread and cake, strips of fat meat, potato parings, carrot ends, bits of any kind of table greens, apple skins and cores and cabbage leaves. All kinds of nonmigratory birds come to feed at the bird table, and many a song bird has been saved by it from starvation when a deep snow has covered the ground and seed grasses. An English naturalist counted twenty-seven species of birds at the bird table in his garden in a single morning after a heavy fall of snow.

Cellini's Quick Cure.

Benvenuto Cellini when about to cast his famous statue of Perseus, now in the Loggia dei Lanzi at Florence, was taken with a sudden fever. In the midst of his suffering one of his workmen rushed into his sick chamber and exclaimed: "Oh, Benvenuto! Your statue is spoiled, and there is no hope whatever of saving it!" Cellini said that when he heard this he gave a howl and leaped from his bed. Dressing hastily, he rushed to his furnace and found his metal "caked." He ordered dry oak wood and fired the furnace fiercely, working in a rain that was falling, stirred the channels and saved his metal. He continues the story thus: "After all was over I turned to a plate of salad on a bench there and ate with a hearty appetite and drank together with the whole crew. Afterward I retired to my bed, healthy and happy, for it was two hours before morning, and slept as sweetly as if I had never felt a touch of illness."

Fantastic Headgear.

The fantastic headgear of Korea is not only picturesque; it marks the social position of the wearer. The national popular hat is high in form, has a tube of half the caliber of ours and is slightly conical, black in color, supported by wide brims. The material is of horsehair, very finely woven. When the Korean gentleman's hat is of straw color it denotes that he is a happy fiance. Le chapeau de riz, elegant in its conical form with angular brim, denotes a bonza. Another hat of enormous size is that of the Ping Yang sect, who must hide their faces. It descends at the back almost to the shoulders, the brim being festooned, and if the proprietor is of superstitious turn he adds some black figures to ward off evil spirits. Married men after a certain age add stories to their hats.

An Apology to Amanda.

This is to apologize to a colored lady whom we admire and respect. We printed a little anecdote about her not long ago, and in it we tried the impossible—attempted to imitate her inimitable Mississippi accent. Then we showed her the story. She wasn't as tickled to find herself in print as we expected her to be. While acknowledging the truth of the story, there was still a cloud on her ebony brow.

"What's the matter, Amanda?" we asked. "Didn't you want to get into the paper?"

"Gittin' inter de papeh's all right," she hesitated. "But, mist', y'll didn't ought to put it down dat Ah talked dat away. Ah don' never use none o' dat Af'ican talk!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Queer Church Ornamentation.

The chancellor of the diocese who refused to sanction the design for a memorial window in a Carlisle church on the ground that an angel is depicted wearing the coat of arms of the dean and chapter of Carlisle would assuredly make short work of the Lincoln cathedral "Imp," which finds a place among the angels forming the angel choir in that building. Up and down England are to be found hundreds of examples of the humor of ecclesiastical architects of a past age, from the snarling griffins worked into the stonework of Henry VII.'s chapel, Westminster abbey, to the dun cow and milkmaids in Durham cathedral. A cat playing a violin can be seen in Wells cathedral, and in Hereford cathedral two cats, apparently performing a violin duet. Boston "Stump" is crowded with fantastic carvings, among which may be mentioned a wife chastising her husband, a teacher caning a pupil and an orchestra composed of bears playing an organ, a bagpipe and a drum.—Westminster Gazette.

Bread and Dyspepsia.

The conclusion that wheat bread is unfit for dyspeptics, sometimes jumped at because ill effects are noticed to follow its use, is erroneous. On the contrary, it has been pointed out by Bouchard and others that farinaceous food is peculiarly adapted to some dyspeptic patients. It is the microbes in the starch which are capable of producing irritating acids that cause the trouble. To avoid this Bouchard recommends that only the crust or toasted crumbs of the bread be used by dyspeptics, particularly those whose stomachs are dilated. The reason of this is explained by the fact that baking temporarily, though not permanently, arrests the fermentation of dough. When it is again heated by the warmth of the stomach the fermentation is renewed. In cases where the bread is toasted brown through the fermentation is stopped permanently.—Family Doctor.

She Wanted Both.

The matinee performance was about half over when a distracted looking woman with a curly haired youngster of six sought out the man in the box office.

"There are boxes on your chairs in there," she began, "and they say drop a nickel in and get a box of candy."

"Yes, I see," asserted the man in the box office.

"Well," she continued indignantly, "I dropped a nickel in for my little girl."

"And couldn't you get the candy?" queried the box office man. "Wait; I'll see if we can get it out."

"Oh, yes," answered the woman; "I got the candy all right, but I couldn't get the nickel out."

And to the ticket man at least this remark furnished a more dramatic moment than any in the play.—Louisville Times.

WHIPPED THE LEOPARD.

But It Took a Troop of Baboons to Kill the Big Cat.

A vivid pen picture of a fight between a leopard and a troop of baboons is given in a German paper by P. Ritter, a sportsman and explorer in German West Africa. Leopards have a particular liking for baboon flesh, which is often used as bait to trap them.

"One afternoon," the hunter relates, "I was resting on the shady side of a big rock which formed the bank of a small stream. On the opposite side a troop of baboons came down chattering toward the water, a large male going cautiously in front, glancing and scenting around for danger. I remained immobile.

"A deep grunt assured the herd that all was well, and down the steep slope they came, last of all a female with two young, which the mother tenderly helped over the rough places. Suddenly a big leopard shot out from behind a bowlder and with one blow of his paw grabbed one of the young.

"The mother, with a roar of fury, threw herself upon the big cat. The others halted and with one accord clambered back to her assistance. The leopard had just settled the female and was about to make off with his prey when he found himself surrounded by the whole horde, which closed in upon him.

"He gave as good as he got, and two big baboons rolled down the slope apparently done for, but numbers told, and he was literally torn to pieces. It was a horribly fascinating sight, and I never regretted more having no camera with me than I did then."

THEY DIDN'T FIGHT.

It Was Only a Little Friendly Discussion That Excited Them.

Two Spaniards were conversing earnestly, then excitedly, at last angrily. The young American woman who passed them looked with frightened eyes toward her Spanish guide.

"What are they talking about, Senor Jose?" she asked timidly. "Do you think they will fight—or maybe kill?"

"Ah, no, Senorita Marie," replied Jose, smiling and showing his pretty teeth. "One man—that one, you see, senorita, with the long mustachios—he is saying, 'Me, I prefer much the collaire button which is steel;' and the other one—look, senorita—he is running his fingers through his hair now and his sombrero has a gold cord—he is saying, 'Ah, no, senor, the button which is of gold—si, senor, that is the button for me.'

"But as for myself, senorita, the bone collaire button—that I prefer above all the others.

"Do I not speak with good sense, senorita? Listen. If the button is of steel it will cut, if it is of gold one cannot afford to lose it, but if it is of bone it does not cut, and if it goes what matter? I have a dozen at home in my little top drawer."

"You speak with great good sense, Don Jose, but tell me—were the men really angry?"

"Oh, not at all, senorita. It is only our southern way of being interested in what we discuss. If it had been two Germans, senorita, or maybe two Englishman, you would never have noticed them."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Then They Talked In English.

A couple of Cleveland business men visited Mexico. In Mexico City their train was switched from one station to another. One of the Clevelanders went to the first station to make inquiries. Approaching a pair of dark visaged employees, he cudgeled his memory for the proper words from the phrase book.

"Donde esta?" he hesitatingly asked and paused.

The two dark visaged persons listened attentively.

"Gracias," stammered the Cleveland man. "Donde estan?"

Then one of the men looked at the other.

"Say, Bill," he growled, "what in merry blue blazes is this fellow talkin' about?"

And after that it was easy.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Always Feminine.

A young chap was walking along a business street with a very pretty girl when he happened to glance into a couple of windows where the latest styles of men's overcoats and suits were displayed. The girl noticed it. She stopped and exclaimed: "What a dandy overcoat! Why don't you get one of those, Bob? You'll look fine inside of that."

She looked at everything in that window, and the young chap was delighted at her interest in men's clothes.

"You're all right, Grace," said he. "That's what I like about you. Most girls would rather look at lingerie waists than at a man's overcoat and suits."

The girl laughed. "Well, Bob," said she, "to be perfectly honest, the mirrors in that window are something to cry for. I was trying to see if my hat was on straight!"

The Merits of "Angelick Snuff."

Angelick snuff, the most noble composition in the world, removing all manner of disorders of the head and brain, easing the most excruciating pain in a moment, taking away all swimming and giddiness proceeding from vapours, etc.; also drowsiness, sleepiness and other lethargick effects, perfectly curing deafness to admiration and all humours and soreness in the eyes, etc. Corroborates the brain, comforts the nerves and revives the spirits. Its admirable efficacy in all the above mentioned diseases has been experienced above a thousand times and very justly causes it to be esteemed the most beneficial snuff in the world. Price is a paper, with directions. Sold only at Mr. Payn's toy shop at the Angel and Crown, in St. Paul's churchyard, near Cheapside.—Advertisement in London Paper, Aug. 6, 1711.

Brignoli in a Temper.

On one occasion Bianchi, the noted teacher, went on the stage to see Brignoli, the famous singer, whom he found pacing up and down like a madman, humming over his part.

"Why, Brig, what is the matter with you? Are you nervous?" he asked.

"Yes, I am nervous," was the reply as he walked harder and faster than ever.

"But, Brig, you ought not to be nervous. I've heard you sing the part 200 times. I heard you sing it thirty years ago."

"Thirty years ago! Who are you that should know so much?"

"Who am I? You know who I am, and I know who you are."

"Very well; you know what I am, but I am sure you do not know what you are, and if you wish I will tell you. You are a fool!"

HE PUNISHED GRANT.

The Cadet Was Guilty of Dismounting Without Leave.

While a student at West Point U. S. Grant excelled in mathematics and horsemanship. He jumped his horse over a bar five feet six inches high, which made a record for the academy and a close second to the highest jump ever recorded in America. He received little honor for some of his efforts, however, notably in the case recalled by Nicholas Smith in "Grant, the Man of Mystery." But perhaps the humor of it reconciled him.

The riding master was one Hershberger, "an amusing sort of tyrant," and on one occasion, whether seriously or, as a joke, he determined to "take down" the young cadet.

At the exercise Grant was mounted on a powerful but vicious brute that the cadets fought shy of and was put at leaping the bar.

The bar was placed higher and higher as he came round the ring till it passed the record. The stubborn rider would not say "enough," but the horse was disposed to shy and refuse to make the leap.

Grant gritted his teeth and spurred at it, but just as the horse gathered for the spring his swelling body burst the girth, and the rider and saddle tumbled into the ring.

Half stunned, Grant gathered himself up from the dust only to hear the "strident, cynical voice" of Hershberger calling out:

"Cadet Grant, six demerits for dismounting without leave!"

A Willing Witness.

"Did his actions have an air of verisimilitude?" the lawyer asked the witness.

"What was that, sir?"

"I say, did his conduct wear an air of verisimilitude?"

"Oh," replied the witness. "Sure He was verisimilitudin' all round the place."—Saturday Evening Post.

Women and Their Idols.

"Women adore idols."

"Do they?"

"Don't they? Why, when a woman's idol proves human she's stronger for it than ever."—Toledo Blade.

An unjust acquisition is like a barbed arrow, which must be drawn backward with horrible anguish or else will be your destruction.—Jeremy Taylor.

Legend of Holyrood Palace.

Holyrood palace, Edinburgh, Scotland, once a British royal residence, is the subject of a strange legend. Robert Louis Stevenson alludes to it in his little book on Edinburgh. "There is a silly story," he writes, "of a subterranean passage between the castle of Holyrood and a bold highland piper who volunteered to explore its windings. He made his entrance by the upper end, playing a strathspey. The curious footed it after him down the street, following his descent by the sound of the chanter from below, until all of a sudden, about the level of St. Giles', the music came abruptly to an end and the people in the street stood at fault with hands uplifted. Whether he was choked with gases or perished in a quag or was removed bodily by the evil one remains a point of doubt, but the piper has never again been seen or heard of from that day to this."

The Leipzig Book Fair.

Leipzig is the largest publication center in the world. More books and periodicals are printed there than anywhere else, and more people are engaged in making and using printers supplies than in London, New York, Berlin or Paris. Many of the orders for these publications come from England, France, Austria and other countries because the mechanical work can be done in Leipzig much cheaper than elsewhere. More than half of the transactions in books take place at the Leipzig book fair, which occurs every year at the jubilate, the first week in Easter, when booksellers and publishers from all parts of Germany assemble to compare and balance accounts and to make contracts for the next year.

WASHING FURNITURE.

Easy to Restore Tarnished Pieces to Original Freshness.

"Very few people know that furniture ought to be washed," said a salesman in the furniture section of a large department store. "Yet," he continued, "it is the best thing one can do to keep furniture looking as well as it should. One should take a bucket of tepid rainwater and make a suds with a good pure soap. Then with a soft piece of cheesecloth all the woodwork should be washed. It is astonishing how much dirt will come off. A second piece of cheesecloth should be wrung dry out of hot water. On this should be poured a tablespoon of first class furniture polish. The heat will spread the polish through the cloth. Next the furniture should be gone over with the second cloth. There will be no need of putting on more polish, for that much will do all one needs. Too many persons make the mistake of using too much polish and leaving it thick on the furniture, where it looks dauby and where it gathers more dirt."

There is furniture in homes today that is cast off because of its appearance when it might be brought back to its original freshness by this simple process of washing. Many persons do not know that a fine bit of mahogany is improved by careful washing, and hundreds of pianos have never been more than dusted in years. A square of cheesecloth for the washing and another for the polishing will do the work, and the result will well repay the effort.—Indianapolis News.

HOT DRINKS.

If Taken Above 130 Degrees They Injure the Stomach.

Many people without realizing it are in the habit of drinking tea at much too high a temperature, Sir Henry Thompson points out in his book on "Diet In Relation to Age and Activity."

"Few persons are aware that they habitually swallow hot liquids, tea especially, at a temperature which if applied to the hands or feet would inflict painful scalds. Most tea drinkers take it about 140 to 145 degrees F., which the mouth bears very well if slowly sipped, while the cup itself is too hot to be held by any hand.

"But the habit of swallowing such tea is injurious to the stomach, and it ought not to be taken above 130 degrees or so. Again, water at 120 degrees, which feels a little more than lukewarm in the mouth, causes severe pain if the hand is dipped in it and cannot be endured."

He has, however, some good words to say for the early morning tea.

"This morning tea in any case should be taken at least an hour and a half before the first meal of the day. For many years I have been accustomed to write for an hour every morning in bed after tea, as I am doing at this moment, and at no time do I find the brain clearer for work, while the appetite for solid food is excellent when the hour for breakfast arrives."

Trudging For the Wash.

The Portuguese country people as a usual thing have great physical endurance, doubtless as a result of the "survival of the fittest" for many generations. The laundry workers are an example of this. People come in from long distances to get soiled clothes of city customers. The clothes will be placed in big panniers on the family donkey, and the peasants will start back late in the afternoon. Some of them will travel all night, and it will be sunup before they reach their homes, many miles from Lisbon or Oporto. A day or two later they are trudging back to deliver the clothes, now spotlessly clean, and to get another lot from the same patron. Many a countryman and his wife take a jaunt of fifteen miles or more, which makes one think that there might be many who could rival the feats of Weston and O'Leary as walkers if they tried.—Christian Herald.

An Early "Trust."

As an example of trusts and monopolies prevalent even in that early day it may be mentioned that in 1750 one Benjamin Crabb obtained the exclusive right to make sperm candles in Massachusetts for fourteen years. A year later, however, a factory was started in Providence, R. I., and within the decade there were eight factories in New England and one in Philadelphia. Their output greatly reduced the price of candles, which not long before sold for 5 shillings a pound. In those days $1.25 was worth fully three times as much as it is now.—N. Hudson Moore in Designer.

One Thing She Could Do For Him.

One Saturday afternoon recently a frail little man started to cross Broadway at Forty-second street just when all sorts of fast moving vehicles were whirling their matinee patrons up Broadway. At the same instant a very fleshy lady started from the curb directly opposite with the same purpose in mind.

By remarkable luck both succeeded in escaping the passing wheels; but, as fate would have it, the little man, whose eyes were busy ogling the traffic on either side of him, darted plump into the oncoming woman at the middle of the street. The result was a sickening collision, with the little man down and out.

"You should have looked where you were going," said the fleshy woman, bending over the victim on the curb, to which he had been carried by a traffic policeman. "But is there anything I can do for you?"

"Yes," he replied faintly, opening his eyes a moment. "Get the number of the automobile that struck me."—Lippincott's.

SUNKIST LEMONS
SUNKIST ORANGES

Eat Luscious "Sunkist" Oranges

Seedless—Fibreless—Juicy And Sweet—A Perfect Fruit

Five thousand California orange farmers, raising 60 per cent of the state's entire crop, select, each season, their perfect oranges and pack them under the name "Sunkist." This enables you to recognize and buy California's choicest, tree-ripened oranges.

Until you have tasted a luscious "Sunkist" orange, you cannot begin to appreciate the excellence of oranges that are properly grown, rigidly inspected, carefully packed and swiftly transported. Serve "Sunkists" on your table tomorrow morning and learn the superiority of tree-ripened, fibreless, seedless, solid and sound oranges over the commonplace kind. "Sunkist" oranges are so nearly all food that they are much the cheapest kind to buy.

"Sunkist" oranges are thin-skinned and are hand-picked. The "Sunkist" orange is a firm, solid fruit. Ask your dealer for the "Sunkist" kind and make sure that each orange you get is packed in a tissue paper wrapper labeled "Sunkist." For these wrappers are valuable.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

FRIDAY MORNING, FEB. 3,. 1911

With Congress going after the tariff, competition is sure to become more acute.

"A man's own good breeding is the best security against other people's bad manners."
Chesterfield.

What a man is depends more on what he desires to be than on what fortune has made him. Fortune may give a man position but it cannot make one good, worthy man.

Graham Phillips was shot and killed by a socialist student. Now we conclude that a large number of people will conclude that all socialists are deliberate murderers.

The Deitz family have been moving of late, you will now find them located some where near page sixteen, space one and one-quarter inches, exact location depending on size of the paper.

Congress took up the Canada reciprocity treaty yesterday. It is predicted that it will pass without question or delay. Sure if we have any tariff that benefits the farmers they are certain to abolish it. If this had been protecting some great Milling interest Canada would have looked for a reciprocity treaty in vain for many years yet.

The Minnesota University Alumni have gotten out a Special Legislative Issue of their weekly. It appears that the primary object of the State "U" has become that of exploiting the school funds to the absolute detriment of Agricultural Schools, Normal Schools, High Schools, Graded Schools and our infants the Rural Public Schools.

What have we been fostering? A bunch of selfish egoistic politicians whose greed has only increased by their learning, or an alumni of well trained gentlemen who recognize and appreciate what our state has done for the "U" and are willing to help spread the rays of light among their less fortunate brethern in the rural districts who cannot avail themselves of the University privileges.

Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey before the National Press Club of Washington is reported to have hobby-ized on "Publicity" with a capital "P".

"The root of all evil in politics," said Gov. Wilson, "is concealment."

"There is a very clear reason, in my mind, why so few newspaper men have universally influential views. It is because few newspaper men are connected with newspapers that are known to be disengaged from private interests. If you can once establish the reputation that you are speaking so far as your knowledge and capacity enable you to speak, from the viewpoint of the common interests, then your views will be influential, and in porportion as they are disinterested they will be influential."

STEENERSON MODIFIES BILL
Would Give Successful Contest Entrymen on Homesteads Preference.

By W. W. Jemane.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Representative Steenerson hasmodified his bill authorizing the sale on unsold allotments on townships of the Red Lake Indian reservation to give homestead entrymen who have successfully contested the titles of previous entrymen preference at the sale provided they pay the amount agreed upon by the original entrymen. Under the act now in force the bill without amendments would have resulted in the sale of the lands at $4 an acre but the interior department feels that they will bring a better price. The amended bill will be given a hearing by the house committee on public lands Wednesday.

It certainly does beat everything how much that Interior Department thinks that the poor settler can pay for some culled-out swamp lands none of which is worth anything until it has been drained at the expense of the settler. We believe that $4 per acre is a very high price for any of the remaining lands and if the government authorities can figure out any way by which they could get more they will only be doing so by way of misrepresentation.

CROOKSTON PRESS MAY ENTER DAILY FIELD

The many friends of the journalism thruout the County will be glad to know that Chas. W. Latta, editor of the Crookston Press, is contemplating starting a daily in the spring.

His plans for the venture are not quite ready as yet, but he informs us that it is nearly an assured fact. Those who have kept up with the progress made by the Press since it got into the hands of Mr. Latta only a short time ago will know that he is well qualified to get out a live and wide awake daily. And it would be well to have a daily in Crookston that would have some facility in getting news from its territory without clipping from other newspapers, like the Times is doing daily as more than one half of its news is clipped and not credited, from the county weeklies. and such methods will not be tolerated for any length of time. Here is wishing Brother Latta all the success he deserves in his venture.—The Fertile Journal.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

The secret of tremendous success of "The Man on the Box," which will appear at the Auditorium on February 7th, is its great heart interest. It is a comedy true, but also reveals a little romance that reaches deep into the hearts of the audience and promises a lasting bond of sympathy. A substantial romance threads the story and maintains an absorbing interest from beginning to end. The dialogue is bright, witty and moves rapidly to logical climaxes.

RELEASED ON BAIL

Leonard Mooney the young ruffian from Grand Forks who created such a disturbance at Strand's grocery store a couple of weeks ago for which he was arrested and bound over to the Grand Jury of the district court, was released this week on bail furnished by his mother, who came here one day this week from Grand Forks to secure her son's liberation. He will have to answer to the next term of the District Court for his offense.

The Minneapolis Tribune of Jan. 30th has an article entitled "Socialist Rule Proves costly," where a certain "see bug" who writes his name C. Bogh, chairman of the special labor committee whines over an $118,000 increase of the City of Milwaukee's pay rolls.

Does he know that Milwaukee is growing and that Milwaukee city now does its own paving instead of letting contracts to men who figured out it would be more profitable to combine and put in just one bid at a high figure. Does he think this could be done without increasing the pay-roll? This and many other grafts has the new administration extinguished and raised the wages of the city employees to a union scale, so why should the pay-roll not increase. We would just as soon have a few of the Milwaukee boys over here to show us how we could raise money to do a few things needed over this way.

B. Dan Bjorkman.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX."

"The Man on the Box." at the Auditorium on February 7th, will be one of the finest attractions of the year. The comedy was adapted from a widely read book and had a run of over 300 performances in New York City. "The Man on the Box" has occupied the American stage since the days of Augustin Daly comedies.

SCHOOL NOTES.

* * * * * * * * * *

The date of dedication of the Lincoln School building is set for Monday, Feb. 20th and Governor Eberhardt will deliver the dedicatory address. The full program will be announced in next week's papers. All of the leading educators of the state as well as interested parties in neighboring cities, will be invited. Nothing will be left undone to make this ceremonial an epoch making event in the city's history.

Illness lays as heavy a toll this winter on members of the faculty as it does on the pupils. Substitute teachers have been in constant demand of late.

A teachers' meeting was held in the Lincoln school on Monday afternoon after dismissal.

The teachers give systematic attention to music, note and rote work being judiciously combined from the second grade up. Without a regular teacher of music, it can hardly be expected that the results obtained meet the approval of professional vocalists, but very satisfactory work is being accomplished in most of the rooms. The text books in use are well graded and are considered the best extant.

The tardiness in the High School is being eliminated. It is a singular fact and obtains in all schools, that those students who have long distances to go to school and who have many home duties to perform are invariably the most punctual in attendance.

The children throughout all the grades and in the High School are convinced that, though the physical exercises presented in lieu of intermission are interesting, nevertheless they are strenuous enough to bring the perspiration.

The janitors start fires in the buildings in the mornings at hours varying from four to six, according to the temperature. When the weather is severe they even keep fires going all night or nearly so. More fuel has been consumed in the furnace during the past six weeks than for any corresponding period in other years.

Children are permitted to bring dinners to school if they have long distances to go or if the weather is inclement. They are required, however, to maintain good order in school during noon hours.

The old high school building consumes almost twice as much fuel as the Lincoln, though its interior capacity is but half that of the new. Each building is heated by its own boiler.

The use of the gymnasium after four, manual training and physical exercises are strong factors in securing the regular attendance at school and the hearty interest in their studies of many boys, who otherwise, might be truants of give trouble to their teachers and parents. Ordinarily, these stirring mischievous boys with strong red blood in their veins make the ablest and most useful men, if their energies can be carefully directed in early years. It is certain they are going to be busy at something every moment. They are not dullards and should be encouraged and sympathetically controlled rather than repressed. This the local school is attempting to do. How successfully the task is being accomplished, only future years can disclose.

To correct an erroneous impression prevailing in certain quarters School Notes desires to state that neither public schools, nor anyone associated with them as teacher, has been connected directly or indirectly with athletic contests in this city, outside the Lincoln school gymnasium.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Melissa D. Whitman whose death occurred at her home in this city Jan. 21st, 1911 at five o'clock p. m., from a lingering illness of over four years, of Diabetes Melites, was the wife of the late John N. Whitman whose death occurred in this city 8 years ago. Mrs. Whitman was one of the pioneers of Thief River Falls having come here about twenty-seven years ago. Mrs. Whitman was born in East Charleston, Vt. July, 4th, 1832 and was nearly seventy-nine years old. Her maiden name was Mellissa D. Wolcott, a direct decendent of Oliver Wolcott, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. She was married to John N. Whitman in 1849, and is survived by eight children.

E. W. Whitman of Pelican Rapids
Mrs. C. W. McCauley, Kenmare, N. Dakota.
Mrs. C. F. Hughes, Portland Ore.
Mrs. Theo. Farington, Dallas, Ore.
Mrs. F. H. Whitmay, St. Cloud.
John N. Whitman, Excel.
Wm. P. Whitman, Medford Ore.
Mrs. S. Kenison, Thief River Falls.

In October 1899 in this city Mr. and Mrs. Whitman celebrated their Golden Wedding, and besides the family, many of the old friends and neighbors were gathered to extend congratulations and good wishes to the aged couple, who enjoyed the pleasant as well as rare occasion.

After the death of Mr. Whitman, Mrs. Whitman's health gradually failed and for the last four years was an invalid, but she never lost her interest in anything that was for the good of Thief River Falls and its people, her mind being clear and bright until the last.

The funeral took place in the M. E. church of which the deceased was a member; Rev. Smith conducting the services, assisted by Rev. Flesher of Bemidji. The Pall bearers were chosen from the Pioneer residents of the city and were as follows:

M. C. Burns,
M. V. Evenson.
I. C. Richardson,
J. O. Aos,
C. C. Jackson,
Capt. Eberhardt,

The annual meeting of the Thief River Falls Co-operative Creamery Association was held at the Antlers Clubrooms.

After a sumptuous dinner had been partaken of served by the United Lutheran Congregation at the expense of the Creamery Association, the members of the association as well as interested outsiders of both farmers and city people repaired to the Antlers Clubrooms at half past one p. m. Meeting was formally called to order by President Christianson with some fitting introductory remarks.

Prof. Hay then was introduced and in his eloquent address paid a high tribute to that industrious class of made in developing the dairy industry tion of the country in their efforts and the progress, which they have farmers who are occupying this secof this community.

He dwelt also at length on the seemingly good feeling and business relation between the city people and the farmer, which was manifested not only on this occasion but in former years as well.

He doubted very much if any place could be found where such a healthy co-operative spirit existed between city people and country people as right around Thief River Falls.

In appreciation of the farmers hospitality Mr. W. B. Fuller on behalf of the Antlers Club offered their splendid rooms for free use to the farmers, which was heartily applauded by the farmers.

Secretary P. Engelstad read the annual report of the Creamery association, which was adopted. Mr. M. P. Bakken as Treasurer likewise read his report, which was accepted.

Before the election of officers commenced Mr. M. P. Bakken announced that he was not a candidate for reelection.

President, C. Christianson.
Secretary, P. Engelstad.
Treasurer, S. O. Lee;
Directors, R. L. Muzzy and Henry Pope.

M. P. Bakken, Treas.

The year just passed has not been a very favorable one for producing an abundant quantity of cow material. June, July and August fell below in the cream receipt this year compared with the corresponding months last year while the winter months show up with a nice little increase over that of last year.

On the other hand it has been a year of exceptionally high prices on butter, and as a consequence the prices paid for butterfat has also been exceptionally high. Our average price 33 81 is certainly a record breaker for this section of the country.

Although the prices of butter at the present time has taken a tumble and is likely to continue low for some time, it is no reason why the dairymen of this part of the country should not plan for improvement in breeding, feeding and present dairy methods, so as to be able to take advantage of the time when the market gets in normal condition.

As usual in former years we found it necessary this year too to expend some money in improving our creamery property. The wooden driveway has been [illegible] with a concrete one.

In the engine room quite an extensive improvement has been made. A new boiler was put in and a concrete floor put in.

The creamery board was once figuring on going to the expense of putting in a cement floor in the creamery, but inasmuch as it was already getting late in the fall for an undertaking of such an extensive work we finally decided not to put it up till next year.

Our business is in a splendid condition and hope it will continue so in the future.

On behalf of Board,
P. ENGELSTAD.

The Van Brunt and Kentucky Drills

We handle these two well known grain drills, because they have for many years past proven their worth. For strength and durability as well as exceptionally good working points nobody need go any farther. Prices and terms are the most liberal.

Fosston Automatic Fanningmills

The Holidays are a thing of the past, and it is time to turn more seriously toward the work of the oncoming season. The first step, perhaps is to clean your seed grain. Screen out foul weed seed, blow away chaff, whitecaps, and light kernels, and plant only the best each succeeding year and you will improve your strain and increaes your yeilds. Nothing pays better than planting only the best. We've got the machine that satisfies -The Fosston Automatic.

For a time it was expected that the train would be only a few hours late and would be passengers remained at the Warren depot a considerable portion of the night awaiting its arrival. Finally it was given out that the train would reach here early Sunday morning, but when that time arrived those who went to the station to board it were informed that it had been annulled. One of the disappointed ones was a gentleman from Stephen, who was on his way to Thief River Falls, in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his daughter, who was teaching school near there. He took the Great Northern for Crookston on Sunday and doubtless arrived at his destination the next morning.—Warren Register.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future referance is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

The Appeal to Reason—dated Jan. 14, '11, asks its readers to request the local and county newspapers to explain why Fred D. Warren has been sentenced to jail; and also why the kidnappers of Mayor Haywood and Pettibone, the three working men were never sentenced, tried or even arrested. The "Thief River Press" editorially, in an early issue, answered the first stated question in a fair manner. Everything went tolerably well until when Scribbs got the "rats" he had rats on his fingers; he had rats on his toes; and how many more he had, nobody knows." He quieted down somewhat towards the last, when the crowd dispersed, homeward bound, all saying: "I love your War Whoops but Oh! you pow-wows."

THE MYSTERY IS CLEARED AWAY.

Relative Comes For Dead Body Mon. R.H.Lowes Is Safe In Nebraska.

Fred Miller, brother-in-law of the dead man arrived here on Monday morning to get the dead body. He left with it on the evening flyer.

When interviewed by a Press reporter he said. "Theo. J. Hemstraught, my sister's husband was 34 years old, a telegraph operator by trade tho not recently employed at that work. Some time ago he, in company with my father went into the hotel business at Owego, N. He had not been accustomed to heavy indulgencies in liquor and hence these direful results from an overindulgence.

"If I can make straight connections at Chicago I will be at home by Wednesday evening. I appreciate the hard work done by your police in unraveling all these mysteries and communicating with us promptly."

A letter was received by Chief Lang on Monday morning from Ruddy H. Lowes at Falls City, Nebraska saying that he was safe and well and that there was no mystery connected with his sudden disappearance. He said he had not known Hemstraught but that he thot he must have been on the same train west from Buffalo, N. Y.

The local police is to be congratulated upon the speedy clearing up of all the mysteries connected with this case which at the first seemed so completely shrowed in uncertainties.

Red Lake Falls Play "OAK FARM"

If laughter—real hearty laughter—disagrees with you then you don't want to see "Oak Farm." But if you can stand a good hearty laugh its a lead pipe cinch that you want to be sure and be at the Auditorium tonight and see how funny the play is. Of course, it is'nt funny all the time. There are a few moments here and there throughout the play when your emotions are affected the other way. No good play is without a little mixture and that's just the reason "Oak Farm" is a good play. There is such an exceedingly fine arrangement of the different parts.

Four of the ten characters are comic. These four are not all the funny ones but they are the funniest. Wellington Troy, who is impersonated by Maurice Brunelle, makes but one short appearance during the play, but he says more and does more in the two minutes he is present than any other two persons do in ten. Then There's Omer Hall who plays "Joel Weatherly," the gawky, simple son of Silas Weatherly. Mr. Hall is a master of juvenile parts and his work as "Joel" is exceptionally fine. He's funny, more funny, most funny and then some. Again, there's Miss Cora Paul,- Sally Smart on the caste- and she sure is there with the comics. She is another adept at juvenile acting and the fact that she is as unconcerned on a stage as she is at home has made her a howling success. Last but by no means the least is Graham M. Kindseth as "Prof. Spudge." "Grim" has a faculty for being funny without provocation and with a little acting can make a mummie laugh. He has kindly consented to make a short address between the last two acts and this alone will be well worth hearing.

There are other funny characters but these four are the funniest, and they are among the leaders. "Oak Farm" is to be presented at the Auditorium tonight by the Red Lake Falls Dramatic Club. After, the show there will be a "get-acquainted" dance and the actors and actresses will be ready to meet you all. Don't miss this one big chance to laugh, LAUGH, LAUGH.

The townsmen who had gathered around had seen the cowardly attack Dave had made, and would not let his father interfere.

"Well I suppose I have done for us all now!" said Sam as we drove home, but we got the binder, and I'm sure there was some crooked work about it."

We related our entire experience to mother and Alton when we arrived home. "I am vexed to think you had to fight my boy!" 'said mother' but somehow I feel that you were in the right."

The very next day Mr. Cook drove out. Mr. Bannock having phoned him, and explained that he knew nothing of the transaction whatever; that Bennett had tried to make the deal with his chief clerk at the mill, but it was not closed, as he had not yet been consulted in the matter.

"That man Bennett is trying to get your farm on the mortgage; but if he succeeds my name's not George Cook." And with that he drove away.

It took but six days to cut the crop, with the use of the corn binder, and now the big job,—the husking, was all that remained to be done before we could market it.

It was late in September, and the mortgage was due on the fifteenth of November. It would keep us busy to husk the corn and market it by that time. We had but ten acres of it husked on the fifth of November; when the mail arrived that evening, it contained a letter from Bennett, which chilled our very marrow, it read as follows:

"Mrs. Mary Hamilton.
Three Falls, Minn.

Dear Madam:—

Your note amounting to five hundred dollars, together with two years interest is due at this bank on November 15th. This note is secured by a deed to your farm, as you understand when your late husband borrowed the money he and you gave me a deed to your farm, and I in turn gave him a contract for this land upon payment in full.

As the interest is two years overdue, and we are exceedingly hard pressed for money, on account of the dry season, I hope you will find it convenient to settle in full, on or before November 15th, and avoid trouble.

Respectfully,
C. J. BENNETT.

"Why! mother, I thought it was a mortgage on the farm, and that we would have a year to redeem it in, if we failed to make the payments this fall," said Sam, "but I dont think we have; if it is not paid on the 15th we loose the place."

"I don't know. I'm sure; you see when we borrowed that money it was to pay for fathers operation, and I was so worried that I did not know what I was doing."

"We can never husk the rest of that corn and market it by the 15th. what are we going to do?"

"I believe Mr. Cook will help us, let us ask him about the contract and also about the corn."

This we did, writing him the next day. Instead of receiving a reply by letter, Mr. Cook came personally; he read the letter from Bennett.

"Pretty smooth. Yes he has got you I think; it must be paid by the 15th of November; and I don't think the thrashing Sam gave his son helped the old gent any, but it was certainly what that boy needed.

Now, let's figure a little.

The amount of the note is,	$500.00
First year's interest at 8 per cent,	40.00
Second year's interest at 8 per cent,	40.00
Compound interest on first year's interest.	3.20
Total	$583.20

Five hundred eighty three dollars and twenty cents isthe amount.

Now, corn is worth 60 cents a bush-

Suppose I take the balance of your corn in the field, at, say 55 cents a bushel, send a gang of men here to husk it, and give you a check for the amount when husked?"

"Oh! could you do that Mr. Cook?"

"I think I can do that for you, Mrs. Hamilton. I'll send a gang of men here tomorrow, and do it."

The men arrived, set up their cook tent, and commenced work immediately, for there was no time to lose.

On the 14th day of November the thirty five acres of corn they had husked, was marketed, and Mr. Cook sent us a check for 1310 bushels at 55 cents a bushel,—$720.50. What a relief it was to get it; we all laughed and cried in turn. "We will go in tomorrow and pay the notes, boys, and the home will be ours."

It was one o'clock when mother and we boys walked into the bank, of which Bennett was president.

"Ah! Mrs. Hamilton," he said. looking at us over his spectacles, "I presume you have come in to pay that little account?" "Yes" said mother we have the money." You could have knocked him down with a feather. "Er, yes, indeed!" "Yes here is a check, please take the amount out of it and give me the note and deed."

"But! this is not money, legal tender, this is a personal check, Mr. Cook's." "But it is good surely." "Not here I am afraid," and handed it back.

Now the bank was, we well knew, the only place in the village of Red Falls that we could get that amount of cash; the check was good, but how, or where, were we to get it cashed?

"Call Mr. Cook on the long distance phone," said Mr. Bannock, the post master, when we applied to him to get it cashed. "George Cook will find a way out of it." "Will you call him for me, Mr. Bannock?" "Certainly." "Hello; central, give me Mr. Cook's office at the mills." "Hello; is that you George?" Well Bennett won't cash that check you sent Mrs. Hamilton, and her note is due today." "Hello, hello, that you George?" "No he's goneto the train," came the reply; went to he safe and got a roll of bank notes, grabbed his coat and hat, said something about Bennett, and that he was going to Red Falls." "All right, good-by.

"George Cook will be here on the three-thirty train, he must have understood the situation instantly, for they tell me that he started for the train on the run, and mad as a hornet."

"The bank don't close until four o'clock." "Oh! let George Cook alone to get out of a pinch; and I guess some one will hear about refusing his check."

We waited anxiously for the train, which arrived on time. Mr. Cook was the first person off. "Come to the bank;" and away he went. "Bennett what's all this fuss about my check?"

"You have no account at this Bank;" quietly replied Mr. Bennett. "No and I'm not liable to have either; up in our county where I do business the bankers are on the square. Now fork over this ladies note and that deed; here's your money;" and he began to count out the greenbacks.

It was just four minutes to four, but Mr. Cook had him. "Are you acting for this party?" "Bet your life I'm acting for them and on the square too."

There was nothing for Bennett to do but hand overthe note and deed. "Now Mrs. Hamilton, I'll cash that check; and if you will just step out side for a moment, there's something I want to say to this man."

What it was we did not hear, but a few minutes later, when Mr .Cook entered thepostoffice, Mr. Bannock asked, "Well George did you win?" "Bet your life we did."

And that is how we paid the mortgage.

The End.

A Bawbee From Carlyle.

I used to see Carlyle when I lived as a child in Chelsea. I regarded him with extraordinary aversion and fear. One day I was sent to post a letter. I suppose I was older, though unconscious, as always, of anything ahead. I cannoned into Carlyle. The impact laid me flat on the pavement, where I yelled for some minutes, though soothed eventually by England's great thinker. And then—this is the point of the story—Carlyle dived into his pockets, produced a halfpenny and said kindly, "Here is a bawbee for Bobby." I have the halfpenny to this day. When Mr. Carlyle died I was put into deep mourning. He was the first and perhaps the most interesting of all my street acquaintances.—Robert Ross in London Bystander.

Self Reliance.

The spirit of self help is the root of all genuine growth in the individual, and, exhibited in the lives of many, it constitutes the true source of national vigor and strength. Help from without is often enfeebling in its effects, but help from within invariably invigorates. Whatever is done for men or classes to a certain extent takes away the stimulus and necessity of doing for themselves, and where men are subjected to overguidance and overgovernment the inevitable tendency is to render them comparatively helpless.—Samuel Smiles.

A Field at Home.

A Boston gentleman was showing a West African who is interested in missionary work a number of photographs.

"What is this?' asked the visitor, gazing in wonder at one of them.

"But has your church no missionaries to send among these people?" was the quick rejoinder. – Boston Transcript.

Financier Sails for Europe In Poor Health, It Is Said.

CARRIES HIS OWN SUPPLIES

Morgan Takes Especially Prepared Foods Aboard Ocean Liner.

New York, Jan. 27.—J. Pierpont Morgan was a passenger on the White Star liner Celtic for Europe. He was accompanied only by a man servant. When interviewers sought to get a statement from him he replied gruffly, "I have nothing to say," and sought the seclusion of his cabin.

Mr. Morgan took aboard the Celtic with him a crate of live chickens and two crates of fresh food products from his Highland Falls farm. He also took enough bottled water to last throughout the voyage. Specially prepared food products will be ready for him when he arrives in Italy and he had ordered fresh fruits and fresh eggs from the Azores.

The financier's stomach has gone back on him, it is said, and he will take no chances with other than the freshest obtainable food.

MAIL CLERKS IN SECRET SESSION

Form Organization at Meeting in St. Paul.

DECIDE TO ACT AS A UNIT

Resignations of Majority of Men Employed in Northwest Placed In Hands of Officers.

St. Paul, Jan. 28.—Forming a permanent secret organization to be known as "The Brotherhood of Railway Postal Mail Clerks," 200 railway mail clerks, representing 2,000 clerks from different cities in the Northwest, met in secret session in St. Paul and adopted resolutions demanding radical changes in the present system. As an evidence of their intention to see that their demands are given a hearing the clerks turned over to officials of the new organization signed resignations to become effective when 75 per cent of the signers deem it advisable.

The clerks explain that they cannot strike and that their only resource is to resign. The formation of the organization, however, indicates that the men have determined to act as a unit in their opposition to the present attitude of the department. The resolutions adopted were sent to the department at Washington. The clerks demand an eight-hour day, full pay for men filling vacancies, the reinstatement of suspended clerks and a method of arbitrating differences.

Requirements of membership in the Brotherhood of Railway Postal Clerks is contained in the following pledge, signed by each of the 200 men present:

"We, the undersigned railway postal clerks, do hereby pledge ourselves to support whatever action is deemed advisable by 75 per cent of the signers for the purpose of enabling the officers of this organization to execute the will of said organization. We hereby place our resignations at the disposal of the officers with the foregoing restrictions."

The object of this action was declared by the clerks not a threat of a strike, but to create public sentiment that will demand a thorough investigation of conditions under which they work.

FORCED TO DROP IN THE SEA

McCurdy Flies to Within Ten Miles of Havana.

Havana, Jan. 31.—One of the most spectacular flights in an aeroplane ever essayed by an aviator failed of complete success by less than ten miles, when J. A. D. McCurdy was forced to land in the water outside the entrance of Havana harbor because of a break in a small part of the engine, a ruptured crank case, permitting of escape of all the lubrication oil.

Starting from the aviation field on the outskirts of Key West at 7:32 a. m., the daring young Canadian directed his course direct for this city. Just as success seemed certain he discovered that his engine was running hot and he was forced to descend on the surface of the water when within sight of his coveted goal.

It was a bitter disappointment for McCurdy, who had waited at Key West for a week for favorable weather to essay the self imposed task.

THREATEN TO GO ON STRIKE

Chicago Street Railway Employes Dissatisfied.

Chicago, Jan. 29.—Eight thousand employes of the Chicago City Railway company threaten to strike unless agreement is reached within the next few days on a dispute over the interpretation of a clause in the working agreement relative to maximum and minimum hours of work and minimum rates of pay.

The working agreement contains a clause providing that the men shall be employed a minimum of nine hours a day and a maximum of eleven hours a day.

This clause is interpreted by the men to mean that the motormen and conductors shall receive nine hours' pay for any number of hours work less than nine hours.

ROOSEVELT TO MAKE TOUR

Fifteen Engagements to Speak on Extensive Trip.

New York, Jan. 26.—Theodore Roosevelt's next tour will begin here March 8 and will sweep around the boundaries of the country, through the South Atlantic and Gulf states, the new Southwest, up the Pacific coast to Idaho and Montana and then direct home. Colonel Roosevelt has accepted fifteen engagements to speak, and probably will make more. The subject matter of his speeches has not been made public.

FREE TRADE IN FOOD PRODUCTS

Terms of Agreement Between Canada and United States.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH LANDS

Reciprocity Plan Simultaneously Laid Before American Congress and Canadian Parliament.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Within less than ten months after the initiation by President Taft of negotiations with the Canadian government there was laid simultaneously before the American congress at Washington and the Canadian parliament at Ottawa a reciprocity arrangement.

Usually such arrangements take the form of a treaty, but in the present instance this was not done, with the result that considerable time will be saved in the consummation of the agreement, which can be made effective by a simple majority vote in each of the two legislatures.

The animating purpose of Secretary Knox appeared to have been to secure a reduction of the "high cost of living" by greatly enlarging the free list so far as it relates to foodstuffs coming from Canada.

The intention of the commissioners to remove all duties on printing paper and wood pulp was effected so far as the Dominion government could do it outside the limitations existing in the laws of the Canadian provincial governments imposing an export duty on wood cut on crown lands in Canada.

The agreement, to become effective, must be put in the shape of law amendatory of the existing tariff acts in the United States and in Canada and it will require sharp work to accomplish this so far as congress is concerned, in the brief period of time remaining of the present session.

The terms of the agreement were made public simultaneously at Washington and Ottawa. President Taft sent it to congress with an extended message urging the confirmation of the proposed treaty. The state department gave out a summary of the tariff changes as follows:

Summary of Tariff Changes.

"The basis of the agreement is this:

"Reciprocity on leading food products such as wheat and other grains; dairy products, fresh fruits and vegetables, eggs and poultry, cattle, sheep and other live animals. Also certain commodities now free in one country are to be made free by the other, such as cottonseed oil by Canada and rough lumber by the United States.

"Tin and terne plates, now dutiable in both countries, are made mutually free; barbed wire fencing, now exempted from duty by Canada, is also exempted by the United States. Some new materials, such as mica and gypsum, which enter into numerous industries, are to be made free by the United States.

"Printing paper is to become free on the removal of all restrictions on the exportation of pulpwood.

"Mutually reduced identical rates on secondary food products such as fresh meats, canned meats, bacon and hams, lard and lard compounds, canned vegetables, flour, cereal preparations, and other foodstuffs partly manufactured.

"Mutually reduced rates on a list of manufactured commodities which includes motor vehicles, cutlery, clocks and watches, sanitary fixtures, satchels and similar leather goods, plate glass, brass band instruments, printing ink and miscellaneous articles. Agricultural implements, such as plows, harvesters, threshing machines and drills are reduced by Canada to the United States rates.

"A small list of articles is given as special by each country. Canada reduces coal to 45 cents per ton and cement to 11 cents per hundred pounds. The United States reduces iron ore to 10 cents per ton, lowers the rate on aluminum products, and on dressed lumber."

SAYS ROYAL PAIR ARE HAPPY

Envoy Denies Story of Break Between Alfonso and Victoria.

Washington, Jan. 29.—The attention of the Spanish legation having been attracted by certain publications that domestic infelicity has brought about an estrangement between King Alfonso and his royal spouse, Queen Victoria, Minister Rieno entered an emphatic denial of the story.

The minister asserts unhesitatingly that the royal pair enjoy the happiest of relations.

The rumors of separation are believed by him to have been set afloat maliciously by anti-dynastic influences.

ARCHBISHOP RYAN.

Condition of Philadelphia Prelate Extremely Grave.

IS PREPARED FOR THE END

Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia in Serious Condition.

Philadelphia, Jan. 31.—The condition of the Most Rev. Patrick John Ryan, archbishop of Philadelphia, who has been ailing for some time, is extremely grave. He passed a bad night. The venerable prelate suffers from frequent weak spells of long duration, from which he barely rallies.

Early in the day the archbishop was conscious and fully realized his precarious condition. He recognized those about him and said he was always prepared and ready to meet God.

NORTHWEST WILL OPPOSE TREATY

Congressmen Aroused Over Agreement With Canada.

Washington, Jan. 27.—A storm of protest has been aroused among Northwestern members over the proposed reciprocity treaty which was outlined in a special message to congress by President Taft. The instrument in effect would place practically all of the agricultural products on the free list so far as trade with the Dominion is concerned.

Doubt is expressed by many Northwestern members that the treaty and the concurrent legislation which will have to be enacted to put the instrument into force can be passed at this session. There was a report, if the treaty failed at this time, the president might be disposed to call congress in extra session in March.

The burden of talk of Northwestern members is the treaty would be a severe blow to the agriculture industry of that section. The terms of the treaty have not been fully digested by Northwestern senators and representatives as yet, but those who have examined it express disapproval.

The indications are the proposed arrangement will be opposed by a majority of the Northwestern contingent and members from New England, who are bitterly set against some of its provisions.

The administration is of opinion that the majority of the Republicans and a considerable number of Democrats will stand by the treaty because it places many articles of every day necessity on the free list. However, it is realized, as congress will adjourn on March 4, determined opposition can prevent action at this session.

TIDAL WAVE IN PHILIPPINES

Score of Natives Perish in Flood Following Volcanic Eruption.

Manila, Jan. 31.—Twenty persons, all natives, lost their lives in the tidal wave which followed the eruption of the volcano Taal, according to press advices received here.

All the towns within a radius of fully twenty miles have suffered damage from the rain of mud and stones, which still continues. The natives in all directions are abandoning their villages and fleeing to the hills in terror.

The eruptions continue. The sky is cloudless and there is no wind, but the muddy rain falls steadily. The natives have abandoned their village homes in the vicinity of Lake Taal and sought refuge in the surrounding hills.

TAFT PRAISES TRADE TREATY

President Makes Address at Ohio Society's Banquet.

LAUDS PRESIDENT M'KINLEY

Pays High Tribute to Martyred Executive's Attitude on Commercial Expansion — Declares Reciprocity Will Increase the Market for Our Numerous Products Among the People of Our Northern Neighbor.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The last public utterances of President McKinley in favor of reciprocity, made the day before he was assassinated at Buffalo, were recalled by President Taft in an address at the Ohio society's anniversary banquet in commemoration of the McKinley birthday.

Many men associated with President McKinley in public office and prominent Ohioans were present. Justice Day, former Vice President Fairbanks and Senator Dick of Ohio were among the speakers

President Taft eulogized the character of the martyred president and paid a high tribute to his attitude on the commercial expansion of the country, with particular reference to the declarations in favor of reciprocity generally made by President McKinley at the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo.

"The broadening effect of the national responsibility McKinley had had to carry," said President Taft, "shows itself in no respect more conspicuously than in this change of view on his part in respect of a policy of which he had always been the chief exponent. May we not hope that the change he advocated may soon find expression in our national policy toward our good neighbor on the North who has come half way to meet us? May the fragrance of his beloved memory lead those upon whom is the responsibility, and incline their minds and hearts to this end.

Meaning of the Agreement.

"The Canadian agreement, if confirmed by legislative action, will be a fitting close to a century's controversies and permanently establish good feeling and commercial union between kindred peoples. We shall find a rapidly increasing market for our numerous products among the people of our neighbor. We shall deepen and widen the sources of our food supply in territory close at hand.

"Our kinship, our common sympathies, our similar moral and social ideas, furnish the strongest reason for supporting this agreement.

"Canada is our neighbor for 3,000 miles. We have not always acted toward her in a manner most conciliatory or with due regard to her sensibilities. She has become a great country—indeed, a nation. She causes us to use no forts or battleships. She does not attack us and never will. She extends the brotherly hand of friendship and proposes closer relations with mutual benefits. Ought we to decline? The last words of McKinley urge acceptance. I am proud as a son of Ohio to bring forward for approval and effective action a measure carrying the policy which he proclaimed and made his own at the acme of his great career."

AGAINST THE TRADE TREATY

Resolution Introduced In the Minnesota House.

St. Paul, Jan. 31.—Representative S. N. Lee of Clay county went before the lower house with a resolution against the Canadian reciprocity treaty. Mr. Lee's resolution is stronger than the one offered in the senate Friday by F. E. Putnam. It demands of the Minnesota senator and representatives in congress that they use their best efforts to prevent the ratification of the agreement made by the president with Canada.

The senate will take up the reapportionment question again this week.

Discrimination against soldiers and sailors in uniform is made an offense in Minnesota, under the terms of a bill which is to be introduced at the request of the army and navy recruiting stations.

The state legal department is preparing a bill which will be introduced this week, carrying out the recommendations made by Attorney General George T. Simpson in his biennial report as to collection of inheritance taxes.

JUMPS OFF CAB TO DEATH

Breaking of Engine Rod Causes Loss of Fireman's Life.

Montevideo, Minn., Jan. 31.—One man killed and one badly injured resulted from the breaking of a side rod on an engine on Watson sag, about eight miles west of here.

Freight train No. 496 was coming east when the broken rod tore through the engine cab. Charles Whitskie, a brakeman, who was riding in the engine, was badly injured.

Helge Brenden, the fireman, jumped from the engine and struck his head on the frozen ground and soon died.

ORANGES BRING BOTH SURPRISE

Because a well known business man of this city has been greeted the past few mornings at the breakfast table by more delicious and juicy oranges than he had been accustomed to, and because some very attractive new orange knives and spoons caught his attention, prompted him to ask his wife the cause of the breakfast's added charm.

Her answer resulted in his buying theatre tickets that night! The thrifty wife had been reading the newspaper "ads" which tell of a particular brand of extra fine California oranges whose wrappers bring the spoons and knives free.

Now all her neighbors are following her example and as a result most of the local fruit stands are doing an enormous orange business.

AWAITED WITH MUCH INTEREST

Senator Cummins' Forthcoming Statement on Reciprocity.

MANY MEMBERS ARE SILENT

Senators and Congressmen Evidently Waiting to Hear From Home Before Going on Record for or Against the Trade Agreement With Canada. Senator Young of Iowa Arrives in Washington to Oppose Treaty.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Both sides to the controversy over the Canadian reciprocity agreement await with great interest Senator Cummins statement of his attitude toward the instrument. For the first time probably in his career the Iowa senator shows a reluctance to discuss the tariff and has turned off all inquiries on the subject with the explanation that he will make known his intentions in a week or so. The arrival here of his colleague, Senator Young, may assist Cummins in making up his mind upon the question of Canadian reciprocity.

When Mr. Young reached Washington he at once proceeded to the Capitol, where he made arrangements to address the senate in opposition to the pending agreement.

The Iowan was among the early arrivals in the senate chamber. He awaited a chance to break into the debate, but a favorable opportunity was not presented. Mr. Young will remain in Washington several days. Before he returns to Iowa he will deliver a speech in opposition to the Taft agreement, taking the position; it is understood, that it proposes an abandonment of the policy of protection so far as farm products are concerned.

Senator Cummins is not the only progressive who has refrained from speaking out on the Canadian agreement. Senator La Follette has made no comment on it. Senator Clapp of Minnesota has not expressed an opinion on the agreement, saying that before doing so he desired to examine its provisions with the greatest possible care. Senators Borah and Bristow are arrayed with the opposition.

Beveridge Opposes Agreement.

Senator Beveridge of Indiana strongly approves the agreement and has announced that he will support it. Senator Crawford of South Dakota is noncommittal. As heretofore stated Senators McCumber of North Dakota and Gamble of South Dakota are bitterly hostile to the agreement.

The prediction was made by a member who has canvassed the situation that when the time comes to vote on the agreement five Minnesota representatives will stand by it. The member in question expressed the belief that Representatives Tawney and Hammond, as well as Stevens, Miller and Nye, will vote to establish reciprocal trade relations with Canada. Representatives Tawney and Hammond are listed among the opponents of the agreement, both indicating, however, that "it is a step in the right direction," although taking exception to the transfer of barley and other products of the state to the free list. Representatives Stevens, Miller and Nye are actively supporting the agreement. Mr. Stevens particularly is enthusiastic over it and makes the prediction the McCall bill, embodying the terms of the instrument, will be passed by the house by a substantial majority if it is brought to a vote.

While Senator Nelson still refuses to comment on the agreement he is freely discussing the subject with callers.

GRONNA WILL TAKE SEAT

Senator Purcell of North Dakota Steps Out Feb. 3.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Senator Purcell of North Dakota, who is serving by appointment of the governor of the state, will quit the upper house Feb. 3, although it was his earnest wish to remain in the senate until March 3.

Mr. Purcell sent an emissary to Senator Elect Gronna, expressing a desire not to be relieved until the end of the current session. Mr. Gronna sent back word that it was his intention to present himself to be sworn in Friday.

Mr. Gronna added that he felt it to be his duty to qualify as soon as he had cleared up certain matters in the house in which he was interested. He could not see his way clear to remain out of the senate until March 3 to oblige Mr. Purcell.

His Expectations.

LOST IN THE CATACOMBS

By GROVER J. GRIFFIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When I was a boy reading stories of Rome in connection with my studies the great desire of my life was to visit the Eternal City and the localities at which the incidents I read about occurred. I wished to go over the seven hills on which the city had been built; I wished to see the Forum, the home of the vestal virgins, the spot where Castor and Pollux appeared, marked now by the ruins of their temple; I wished to see the Coliseum, the triumphal arches, the Pantheon. Above all, I desired to go down into the catacombs where the early Christians secretly deposited their dead.

The time finally came when I reached the object of my desires. I visited Rome. On the steamer crossing the Atlantic and later steaming over the Mediterranean I met Marian Chambers, and, sitting on deck moonlight nights with her, I caught from her a fever—the fever of love. By the time we reached Gibraltar I was down, and during the whole voyage from there to Naples I was very ill with this irritating disease. I was cured on the homeopathic principal that like cures like. The love of the girl given in gradually increased doses put me in a normal condition.

By the time we reached Rome I was ready to enjoy the sights I had counted on seeing ever since I began to study Latin. And now I had a loved companion to visit them with me. The catacombs that had interested me most I reserved till the last. Marian and I had a fancy for slipping away from those we traveled with and going sightseeing together. One morning we took a carriage, drove out on the Appian way and stopped at the entrance of those subterranean passages I had long wished to explore.

We were in time to join a party about to descend, were each given a wax taper, and a monk in a white cowl, who was to pilot us, led us down a stone staircase at the bottom of which were the catacombs.

We followed the taper light procession for awhile, but finally—at the time I would not tell how it happened, but now I am an old married man I will admit that I was never happy for half an hour at a time without a kiss from my Marian, and I led her away from the others for the purpose of taking one. As soon as this object had been accomplished we started on after the others. Immediately we came to a split in the passage, and the party had gone so far that we could not tell which of the two avenues they had taken. Making choice of the left hand passage, we ran as fast as we could, only to find new splits and turns and corners, but not the party. We were lost.

People have been lost before in these underground burial places and have narrated their experiences. In our case there is something different from any of them. I had a box of matches in my pocket that I carried for cigar lighters. We also had two tapers. As soon as I realized that we were lost I put out both the tapers, and, being in a small open space where was a Christian's skeleton in a sarcophagus, we sat down on the latter to think.

What would be the result of our thus being lost underground? We would not be missed by the party we had joined, for we knew not one of them. Parties were going through the catacombs every day, but would they happen to come our way? Besides, we might starve before we were discovered. There was nothing whatever for us to subsist on. We might try to find our way out, but there were many miles of these subterranean passages, and we were liable to wander farther from the entrance. The result of our deliberations was to remain where we were.

I will pass over some twenty hours of our captivity without attempting to describe our feelings. The most hopeless part of it was that our friends did not know where we were. We passed most of the time in the dark, for I wished to save our tapers and matches for any opportunity that might occur. While sitting on the sarcophagus something ran on my foot. I scratched a match, and its flame revealed the two glistening eyes of a rat.

I at once lighted a taper, and while Marian held it I tried to catch the rat. If he would serve no other purpose we might need to eat him. I didn't have much trouble getting my hands on him. I think he knew we were lost there and was willing to help us out. Then an idea occurred to me. Scribbling a note on a letter I had in my pocket, stating that we were lost in the catacombs, I held the rat while Marian tied the note with a strip torn from her handkerchief around the little fellow's neck. Then we put him down. He gave us the most knowing look in the world and ran away.

Half an hour later I felt the rat running over my feet. I lit a taper and saw that he was without either the note or the strip by which it had been fastened to him. This gave us hope that it had been removed by a human being. Ten minutes later I heard a halloo. I replied, and after a number of calls we could see the dim light of tapers, then a party coming to search for us. They had received the message, but had not missed us when the party we had started with returned.

We brought the rat out with us. He sleeps at night in a cage and by day goes where he likes.

Hogarth Used to Forget.

William Hogarth, the famous English artist, was so absentminded he caused his friends much entertainment. When he was prosperous enough to have his own carriage he first used it to make a call upon the lord mayor When he came out of the Mansion House it was raining hard, and the artist tramped the entire way home wet to the skin. When asked why he had not come in the carriage he said he forgot all about it, and a messenger had to be dispatched to the coachman to tell him to return.

DO YOU NEED OVERALLS?

If You Do, Why Don't You Make Them Yourself?—It's Dead Easy.

Many a man says that he would be glad to do chores about the house, to trim the grass or weed the garden if he had overalls.

The trouble is that when he wishes to wear overalls the stores are closed and he cannot buy them. I wonder that men do not make them for themselves.

To provide a pattern you must have an outline or perspective plan of your contour from the belt line down to the ankles. This may be obtained by sitting in wet clay and, on arising, pouring plaster of Paris in the impression. When this hardens lift the mold, lean it against the wall and obtain measurements with a tapeline. Another way is to dust talcum powder on the carpet until it is thickly coated. Then sit down on the talcum powder and carpet, thus removing the talcum from the floor where you have been. Then cut around the outlines of that impression with a sharp knife, remove the carpet so detached, and you have a pattern for one side of the overalls.

Purchase several yards of denim and cut it into the shape indicated by either pattern you have now obtained. Make two sets of these pieces and sew them edge to edge. Pockets may be made by cutting slits in the material and sewing empty salt sacks.—Wilbur D. Nesbit in Delineator.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Their Use on an Important Scale Dates From 1876.

The first experimental philosopher to discover that electric light could be produced by a dry battery was Sir Humphry Davy, who in 1810 exhibited a light three inches long, between carbon points, before the Royal society of London. But no commercial value was attached to the use of electricity as an illuminant until more than half a century later. The Centennial exhibition, held in Philadelphia in 1876, really marks the era of our present form of electric light, though electric lights had been in use abroad prior to that time. The exhibition of models and practical demonstrations of electric lights at Philadelphia in 1876 attracted the attention of scientists and capitalists in this country, and the first incandescent lamps and the first arc system were put to practical use in a small way in 1878. The Brush arc light gained favor in the beginning as the most adaptable for street lighting, and Cleveland, O., the home of Charles Francis Brush, the inventor, was the initial American city to adopt the arc system for street lighting.

Since 1878 both the Brush arc system and the Edison incandescent system have developed.—Marc M. Reynolds in Moody's Magazine.

Halcyon Days.

"Alcyone, or Halcyone, the daughter of Aeolus, married Ceyx," said the Latin professor. "Ceyx was drowned, and Alcyone on learning of his fate threw herself into the sea. The gods were moved by the tragedy of the young lovers. They brought them back to life in the form of halcyons, or kingfishers, and they decreed that for the seven days from Dec. 22 to Dec. 29 the sea should remain calm while the sea birds built their nests upon it. Those seven days, the last of the year, are therefore called halcyon days—days of tranquillity, a kind of very late Indian summer. Here in America we have no real halcyon days, but the myth of Alcyone and Ceyx comes from the Mediterranean, and in that blue and gold region it is a fact that the year is ushered out by a procession of still, mild, splendid days—silent and glittering days of halcyon weather."—Washington Post.

Lifting a Child.

"I wish," said the woman who has children of her own, "that women would understand the delicate mechanism of a child. How would they like a giant to come along and suddenly drag them from the ground by one arm, as I have seen so many people do to children? When you're lifting a child lift it evenly by both arms or from the waist. Don't yank it up by a grab at one wrist and then wonder why it cries. It makes me so angry I always want to pull the arm of that inconsiderate woman hard and see if she wouldn't cry too. It's a thing that mothers and aunts and sisters ought to learn."—Philadelphia Times.

BEAT HIM TO THE STATION.

The Message That Got There Before the Patrolman Did.

"When I was a patrolman," says a prominent detective, "there used to be a sergeant on the force who had it in for me. He reported me for various delinquencies, and—well, he's dead now, and I won't say anything against him. He got sick, and it was reported at the station that he wasn't expected to live. So the boss called me and told me to go around and see if I could do anything for the old fellow. I called at the house and asked if I could see him. They let me in. I tiptoed into the room where the sergeant was in bed and said, 'The lieutenant sent me around to see how you were getting along.'

"He spoke with difficulty, but I could make out what he said. 'Go back,' he grunted, 'and tell 'em that I'm getting along fine The boys have fixed me up all right, and I don't need anything I'm feeling better.'

"So I went back to the station. I was stopped a couple of times on my way and got in about half an hour later. Then I made my report. 'He says he's better and doesn't need anything,' says I. The lieutenant jumped up. 'Do you mean to say that you saw him?' says he. 'I did,' says I. 'And he told you he was all right?' 'Yes, sir.' 'You blamed liar!' shouts the lieutenant. 'I got a message ten minutes ago that he was dead!'

"And it was true. What do you think of that old scoundrel trying to get me in bad with his dying breath?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Picture of Night.

Along the high hedged lane John Strong swung, the June gloaming deepening into night. He loved to shove his face into the night. He gloried in the uncertainty of night, the indefiniteness of night, and his soul cried back a wild answer to the cry of the nighthawk and the owl. Night is more primitive than day; night is more calamitous; night is a savage; night everywhere is the true aborigine. Day has taken on civilization. Night hurls the world back to the day of the war club, the flint arrowhead, the painted visage. John Strong loved the night with an almost malevolent love. In the night he could hear the Valkyries screaming, the witches riding their broomsticks, the ghouls scraping the mold from off the new buried coffin. John Strong swung along, his face set to meet oncoming night.—Adventure.

It is easier to enrich ourselves with a thousand virtues than to correct ourselves of a single fault.—Bruyere.

TO AILING WOMEN.

No woman can be healthy and well if the kidneys are sick. Poisons that pass off in the secretions when the kidneys are well, are retained in the body when the kidneys are sick. Kidneys and bladder become inflamed and swollen and worse troubles quickly follow. This is often the true cause of bearing down pains, lameness, backache, sideache, etc. Uric poisoning also causes headaches, dizzy spells, languor, nervousness and rheumatic pain.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, a remedy that cures sick kidneys. You will get better as the kidneys get better, and health will return when the kidneys are well. Let a Thief River Falls woman tell you about Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. O. Christofferson, 414 St. Paul Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results and they have also been taken with benefit by other members of our family. We keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house all the time and do not think we could get along without them."

THE WRESTLING MATCH

In the preliminaries Mahone threw Fox twice in succession in a very short time.

When Gorden and Klien went on the mat everybody was expecting a battle royal. Gordons challenge was to throw Klien three times in one houn with toe and strange holds barred.

It soon became apparent that the policeman wrestler had the advantage not only of weight but of better training and more science. In the first round he threw his man in 4 minutes 20 seconds while in the second round it took 8 minutes.

A long rest was taken before starting the 3rd round and Gordon seemed to be perfectly fresh again and he made the last and final throw in just 1 minute and 30 seconds.

Everybody expressed themselves as well satisfied with the match and that absolutely justice was given to each contestant. Everything was carried on in an orderly manner.

Warren friends and former neighbors of the family will be interested to learn that Miss Kate R. Wood, long a resident of this city and who moved to Washington some years ago was married on the 3rd inst., at the home of her mother, Mrs. W. W. Wood in Brewster Wash., to C. E. Ball, of that place. —Her brothers, W. J. and Raymond, and her cousin, W. J. Walker, are at present living in western Canada.—Warren Register.

COURT HOUSE NOW OCCUPIED

New Red Lake Palace Entered by Officials This Week.

The palatial structure on the hill, the Red Lake county Courthouse, was this week turned over by contracter Brady to its future occupants the county officials.

The building is a splendid one and Mr. Brady has certainly made himself proud by his untiring efforts in making this building fill the specifications as called for by the contractors to the very letter.

From a standpoint of architecture, material used and workmanship this building has few peers in our state and even tho Red Lake County may have the smallest assessed valuation it boasts of one of the best county buildings in the state.

The rooms are all large and comfortably arranged. Auditor Latendresse will be found on the ground floor in the south east room. Treasurer Kindseth is located in the southwest room with a small room for the Commissioners between him and the auditor. Directly in front of the entering stairway you meet the gentle smiles of Judge Perrault: while you hear coming from the northeast room the thundering laugh of Frank Jeffers. Next to the Register of Deeds and on the center of the north side are the official headquarters of Sheriff Fellman while the northwest room is occupied by Clerk of Court Johnson. County Attorney Boughton will be located on the second floor just above the treasurer's office and Superintendent of Schools, Anderson will occupy the Southeast corner on the same floor for the present.

The second floor also holds a spacious and elegantly equipped Courtroom, Judges' room, and three jury rooms. The building is steam-heated and electric lighted and is artistically arranged with all the modern conveniences.

A LETTER FROM CHARLEY ALEXANDER.

Feb. 1st 1911.

To my friends;

I have been getting letters asking me if I had seen anything of the noble President up around this country. No, man, no, neither do I want to see the animal, some told me he was going east when last seen, some told me if I saw him to ship him back by express and they would pay the bill. I have heard the Walking Boss kicking about some prices of timber falling short on the estimate and saying he had seen some awful tracks in the woods of a man that toed in a little. Probably there are reasons the same as why the City Treasury was short.

Now I wish my friends would quit writing so many letters as I am very busy and have not got time to answer them all. If I were one of those lucky ones that could land a county office where I had time to spare and easy money to buy stamps it would be different, so do me a favor and quit writing.

Yours truly,
Chas. Alexander.

BILLS OF INTEREST

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7.—Several local bills affecting northern Minnesota passed the House today.

Mr. Steenerson's bill to wind up affairs on the Red Lake Indian reservation went through. It provides that hereafter all lands ceded on what is known as the Red Lake reservation, now undisposed of, shall be subjected to homestead entry at a price of $4 an acre for all lands not heretofore entered. For all lands embraced in cancelled entries price shall be same as that at which they were originally entered, or $2.50 an acre, provided that where entries have been or shall hereafter be cancelled pursuant to contests, contestant shall have a preference right to enter land embraced in such cancelled entry as prescribed in the act of July 26, 1892.

STOCKMEN'S MEETING

Third Meeting of Series of Farmer's Institutes Will be Held Next Wednesday.

The next session of the farmer's institutes at the Lincoln School Gymnasium will be held next Wednesday Feb. 15th beginning at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

The subject that will receive particular attention at this time is livestock.

Professor W. H. Tomhave the livestock specialist of the College of Agriculture of the State University will be in charge of the meeting. He is exceedingly well fitted to take a lead in this line of work having spent years studying livestock while serving the United States Government in its department of agriculture as well as a term in the service of the government of Manchuria.

Gustafson the veteran creamery patron and Gold Medal man will discuss the breeding and feeding of dairy stock.

Dr. Newell the veterinary surgeon will also address the assembly on the subject "Infectious Diseases and Their Control", and will no doubt be as interesting to those not directly interested in livestock as it will be instructive to those interested.

These institutes are great opportunities provided by the state for the aid and instruction of the people and everybody should grasp the opportunity and attend every meeting.

THUNE—GUTTERUD

On Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock P. M., occurred the marriage of Miss Minnie Thune of this city to Thorvald Gutterud of Fairdale, Walsh County, N. Dak., at the home of the bride's parents.

Only a few of the near relatives and friends of the contracting parties were present at the ceremony, which was conducted by the Rev. A. L. Larson.

A dainty wedding luncheon was served to those present after the ceremony.

The happy couple will make their future home upon a farm near Fairdale, N. Dak. The Press extends congratulations.

MINNESOTA'S FIFTY-THIRD CONVENTION

Minnesota's Fifty-Third Annual Sunday School Convention will be held in Mankato, March 8-9-10, 1911. It promises to eclipse all previous conventions in size and strength of program. Many Sunday School specialists from outside the State will attend. Here are some of them: G. C. Pearce, Chicago, Superintendent of the Adult Bible Class Deparement of North America; Hebert H. Moninger, Cincinnati, Ohio, writer of many books and manager of the Standard Publishing Company of Cincinnati and expert on Teacher Training; E. O. Sellers, Chicago, composer of music and director of the music of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago; Mr. Sellers will lead the music at the Convention; Jodge McKenzie Cleland, Chicago, who has done for the men and women of Chicago, who are down and out, what Judge Ben Lindsey hasdone for the boys of Denver. Every man in Minnesota should hear Judge Cleland.

The people of Mankato are making preparations for at least 1000 visitors. The business men of Mankato are raising nearly $500 to properly care for this convention. This fact gives some idea of the interests Mankato has in the coming convention and indicates something of the hospitality and enthusiasm of the "Key to Minnesota" City.

Each county is entitled to as many delegates as can be induced to come. County officers in every county of the State are the "Boosters Committee" for that county. Mankato is expecting at least 1000 regular delegates. Many visitors will also attend. Programs will be ready for distribution February 20th. Apply to the Minnesota Sunday School Association, 871, Snelling Ave., St. Paul Minnesota.

BASKET BALL.

The North Star College Basket ball team that was to have played the local High School team last Friday did not put in their appearance on account of a snow blockade on the Wheatline preventing the trains from running on schedule time. A number of interesting inter class games were played in lieuw of the one advertized A good sized crowd attended.

Arrangements have been made for the North Star College team to come here to-night to play the game that was scheduled for a week ago. This promises to be a very interesting game and as it isthe first of a series of interscholastic games it will be watched by local athletic enthusiasties.

NEW FACTORY WILL LOCATE HERE

Dr. Grundy Leases Building to Owners of Confectionery Factory.

Another jobbing and manufacturingestablishment will be doing business in our city in the near futrue having leased the Grundy building on Third St. for a term of five years as a location for their new large confectionery factory and jobbing house.

Peter Nicholas, the head of the new firm, is an experienced candy maker having worked in a number of the largers factories in the United States. He comes now directly from the Arcade in Minneapolis and expects to put in a full line of machinery and appliances at a cost of several thousand dollars, and to make this city headquarters for Northernwestern Minnesota, N. Dakota and Montana for all goods of this nature. It is Mr. Nicholas intention to conduct a retail shop in connection with his wholesale and jobbing department.

Doctor Grundy is to be congratulated upon his success in bringing this new industry to the city.

It is not definitely known what S. T. Dakin will do as he is out of town at present, but he will likely secure another location.

ADOPT CONSTITUTION

At the meeting of the Commercial Club last Friday evening the committee on Constitution and By-laws reported and the Club took up the report section by section and everything proved satisfactory except the section relating to the duties of the secretary and treasurer over which some difference of opinions developed.

An attempt was made to postpone the defining of secretary's duties, the naming of his salary and his election until a special meeting to be held Friady, Feb. 17th, but thise motion was lost because the majority held that his duties should be defined at this meeting.

The principal point of amendment to the section as submitted was to make it the duty of the Secretary to collect all dues insead of the Treasurer.

The Constitution and by-laws as amended and finally adopted provides for regular monthly meetings of the Club on the first Friday of each month and an annual meeting on the first Friday of February. It provides for quarterly payment of dues in advance and that any member whose dues are in arrears one quarter or more be suspended from the privileges of membership.

On motion duly carried the election of permanent secretary and the naming of his salary was postponed to a special meeting called at 8 o'clock P. M., Friday, Feb. 17th. The way and means committee was instructed to bestir themselves in the meantime to see how liberally the Club would be supported.

In making the motion to adjourn, Dan Shaw made the statement that he would introduce a resolution at our next meeting recommending the adoption of the Commission form of government for our city. Everybody should join and attend. Be a Booster.

HOUSE BURNS

On Wednesday of last week in the midst of the worst blizzard of the season, Thom Bjerke lost his house by fire and almost everything in the house

On account of the blizzard no one was out and around and, as the fire is supposed to have started from sparks from the chimney, it had gained such headway before it was discovered that it was impossible with the means at hand to check the flames

It was with difficulty that Mr. and Mrs. Bjerke managed to get out two or three pieces of their furniture including a writing-desk containing the records and papers belonging to the town clerk's office of the town of North as Mr. Bjerke is town clerk.

The building was totally destroyed together with most of its contents. The loss is estimated at about $400. No Insurance.

MODERN METHODS OF POLITICS

As They Affect the Cashman Distance Freight Tariff Bill in Legislature.

By Lynn Haines.

There are only two elements in politics—property and patriotism. The conflict between special privilege on one hand and equality of power and opportunity on the other is as eternal as the ages. It has marked every period in the politics of America. There is nothing else to politics today. For proof one need not look beyond the Legislature.

• • •

In past political epochs this property power in politics manifested itself and maintained its advantage over the people through such crude means as the colonization of voters, the bribery of election officials, the purchasing of law makers and executives. In these later years sentimen has become aroused and uncompromising in its condemnation of such practices. Accordingly the corporations have been compelled to change their methods. The predatory interests no longer depend solely upon boss and boodleism for the continuance of their commercial supremacy. Instead they go directly to the people and through the subtle, insidious of public opinion shape legislation as they desire. It would be impossible to find a better illustration of this than in fight over the Cashman distance tariff bill. A decade ago the railroads would probably have accomplished its defeat directly by bribery or blackmail, or both. Today the transportation trust is attacking the measure indirectly through the agencies of publicity which are controlled by selfish interests and obviously used by them to misdirect the public mind and dull the public conscience.

• • •

First, a word about the bill. Every informed person knows that the railroads have corrupted politics; but through their control of conventions and commissions and legislatures and executives they have compelled the public to pay dividends on stock that is at least half water. But exhorbitant rates are not so evil in their influence upon individuals and industrialism as discriminative rates. Because they have been permitted and do today fix rates almost at will, discriminating as they choose, the railroads are able to coldly decree which communities shall flourish and which decay and die. The map of America has been made by the transportation trust. The ebb and flow of population has been determined not by the character and industry of people, or by the natural advantages of one section over another, but by the desire of "empire builders" to so manipulate the relative growth of communities as to make the maximum of business for the railroads.

There are two transportation theories, which great railroad minds understand to be fundamentally different. One deals with the smallest possible number of large centers. This, in a word, means that both the producer and the consumer have to pay the maximum of transportation taxes.

The other theory deals with the greatest number of small manufacturing and distributing centers, each serving its surrounding territory. This would mean the minimum of both freight and passenger business for the railroads, and a corresponding saving for the people.

Through discriminative rates the railroads have built up one great center—St. Paul and Minneapolis—at the expense of every other section of the state. They could not keep Duluth from growth because of its lake port advantages, so that enterprising city was given the same rates as the Twin Cities. But hundreds of country towns in the state have not been permitted to grow beyond the importance of little retailing villages. As a direct result it can safely be said that Minnesota has a transportation tribute not only as exorbitantly high, but for an aggreate distance least twice as great, and consequently twice as burden-some as it would have been had not the railroads arrogantly directed the population and industries of the state into great centers.

The Cashman distance tariff bill is aimed at discriminative rates. Under its provisions a manufacturer or wholesaler in the smallest town would pay the same freight charges as his competitor in the largest city. It would operate to distribute a population more evenly throughout the state. It would end discrimination by making rates equal. But I do not intend to discuss the merits or demerits of the bill at this time.

The phase of the situation that every citizen of the state should understand is that the railroad ring has pressed the button which set in motion the whole special interest system of improvising public opinion against the measure. Simultaneously the large city jobbers and most of the large city dailies chorused their objection to the bill. Then subservient interests here there and everywhere climed in with a resounding note of protest. The result is a state of sentiment almost wholly mechanical, which is befogging the issue and making it appear that even the communities to be most benefited by the bill are up in arms against it.

The transportation trust, backed by big business, is a mighty power; when it has an ally in the city press it is almost omnipotent. Senator Chasman is making a fight which has seldom been parallaled in the strength and ingenuity of the opposition.

Public opinion is also being misdirected in connection with reapportionment. The dailies are attempting to arouse the entire state by a false analysis of the present status of that issue in the legislature. There has not yet been a vote in either House or Senate which could be construed as a test on reapportionment. The Hackney-Congdon resolution which was voted down in the Senate, and passed the House, arbitrarly fixed the maximum number of representatives for both branches. Several senators voted against it becouse they preferred, for various reasons, to wait until the bill itself was presented. Yet they have paraded before the whole stae as enemies of a fair reapportionment bill.

• • •

While I am suggesting general legislative conditions, there is another unknown influence that should be considered. Bribery by big special interests has been gradually disappearing. Aside from finalcial assistance in the conduct of campaigns in certain cases, legislators have practically no connection with the exchequer of any organization. But as other sources of revenue have grown loss, "legislative side lines" have been developed. The selfish, personal element has appeared more and more. Log rolling, and petty graft, has become a greater menace to good legislation. But more deplorable and disgusting than all else are the "hold up" schemes that have been consumated in the past or are in process of incubation.

The present legislature is well worth watching. It is the most important and interesting in the history of the state.

SAUGSTAD WINS IN CONTEST

Stephens' Boasted Lead Fails to Materialize at Vote.

After a long drawn out parlayance the Senate on Tuesday seated John Saugstad as senator from Polk county. A. D. Stephens the contestant claimed to have had pledges enough to seat him but at the test vote taken last Tuesday he lost out by a vote of 33 to 27. This seems one more case where corporate interests were not able to thwart the will of the people.

ANOTHER NEWSPAPER IN OUR CITY.

Mr. H. E. Mussey will again enter the newspaper arena having rented the building just north of the old City Hall where he started in the newspaper business twenty years ago

Just when the new paper will make its appearance and under what name we have not learned but it will probably be in the near future, Mr. Mussey having resigned his position as mail carrier for Uncle Sam.

There are few if any cities in the state the size of ours or even under the 10,000 mark that support more than two papers so we shall be a unique city in that respect at least.

LET DITCH CONTRACTS

Big Pieces of Northern Minnesota Work Have Been Awarded

Warren, Minn., Feb. 7.—Two big ditch contracts have just been awarded here. One of them, Marshall County Ditch No. 22, was awarded to George Castle of Crookston. This job includes the moving of 100,486 cubic yards of dirt at 10 cents per yard, amounting to $10,048.60, and in addition $660 for roadmaking, totaling close to $11,000. Mr. Castle will start the work as early in the spring as the ground will permit.

The other job let was Judicial Ditch No. 15, which went to the Northwestern Drainage company, 301,368 yards, at 10.85 cents per yard, amounting to $32,698, with the roadmaking at $120 per mile.

O. L. Hamrey of Crookston is the engineer on both jobs.

Mrs. Eastman left yesterday afternoon for St. Cloud where she will visit with friends for a few days.

COUNTY OPTION BILL DEFEATED

Measure is Defeated in House of Representatives by Vote of 69 to 50.

With but one member absent, the county option bill was defeated in the House late Tuesday afternoon by a vote of 69 to 50.

On roll call following an even three hours of uninterrupted debate, during which not a vote was changed, as there were a good many on the floor who knew within one or two of what the roll call would reveal. In spite of the certainty that nothing was to be gained by it the debate was arranged, talked out and finally finished to the entire satisfaction of the county optionists. The antis participated with vigor and put a fine show and kept their ranks intact.

The call of the House, which was taken at 11o'clock showed only Fisher and Ferguson absent. The call was continued until it was certain Mr. Ferguson was to be present. The drys demanded the call, not that they hoped to profit by the presence of the absentees, but because they were determined every man should be put on record. In this they were entirely successful, and when the roll has been called in the Senate there will be no doubt in the minds of the people as to the exact position of each member of the Legislature on this question.

Not Dead, Say Advocates

County option has not been killed, according to the advocates of the doctrine, but it is admitted that it has been laid away with fitting ceremonies for at least two years.

As the time for the roll call drew near the interest of the galleries was manifested by the silence that crept over them. Twice the Speaker rose to say: "If there is no further debate—" but each time some one rose to speak. Once is was Frank E. Minette, the next time it was John G. Lennon and before the Speaker had time to ask about the debate and of the business F. L. Palmer rose to say a few things.

Every one that had any idea on county option or any subject that could by the widest stretch of imagination be dragged in under the county option guise got it out of his system There were a great many speeches, some short, but mostly rather lengthy and in general there were about as many talking for the measure as against it. So free was the debate that both sides admitted there was no restraint discoverable and praised the House for the fairness of its attitude.

Roll Call is Ordered.

When the last words had been uttered the Speaker called upon the clerk to give the bill its third reading This was done and the roll call was ordered.

When the Speaker announced the result of the vote there was a demonstration that lasted a minute or two. Almost immediately the House adjourned and the gallaries soon were emptied. The county optionists were not downhearted, but, on the contrary seemed to feel that they had really scored a victory by making a showing of fifty votes in the House and by being in a position to insure absolute fair play.

The roll call showed the following votes:

BEMIDJI CITY ELECTION

Interest Waking Up in Contest to Be held Feb. 21.

Bemidji, Minn., Feb. 6.—(Special to The Herald.)—Interest in the city election to be held Feb. 21st is livening up. Mayor J. C. Parker and J. H. Grant, the public ownership candidate, have filed for mayor and it is very probable that another candidate will announce himself in the near future. For city clerk there are four candidates, Charles Hoyt, George Stein, Charles Schroeder, and Garfield Akerberger, the public ownership candidate. Four men are after the office of alderman-at-large, the fight for this office gives promise of being the hottest of all, George Kirk, the present one, F. L. Johnson, who was for several years a member of the city council, Thomas Maloy, for several terms city clerk and F. M. Malzahn, the public ownership candidate. The candidates for alderman are as follows: First ward, John Moberg and N. L. Hakkerup; Second ward, F. L. Bursely and F. W. Bell; Third ward, F. L. Bisair and J. E. Carson.

RED CROSS SACRED

The American Red Cross has requested the Solicitor General of the United States to advise it as to the proper steps for the enforcement of that section of its federal charter relating to the use of its emblem and name for advertising purposes by manufacturers, retailers, physicians, charitable organizations, barbers, and others.

It is believed that many persons who use the emblem or the name of the Red Cross for advertising purposes do so in ignorance of the fact that such use is forbidden by law with penalties for violation which, in aggravated cases, may be a fine of $500 and imprisonment for one year. The scope of the law is shown by the following extract:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, or association other than the American National Red Cross and its duly authorized employees and agents and the army and navy sanitary and hospital authorities of the United States, for the purpose of trade or as an advertisement to induce the sale of any article whatsoever, or for any business or charitable purpose to use within the territory of the United States of America and its exterior possessions the emblem of the Greek Red Cross on a white ground, or any sign or insigna made or colored in imitation thereof, or of the words "Red Cross' or 'Geneva,' or any combination of these words."

The United States has entered into a treaty with all the civilized governments of the world to prevent the use of the emblem and name of the Red Cross except as above stated and this law is entended as a means of complying with the terms of the trea-
Already there are evidences that public sentiment is responding to this movement to respect the peculiar significance of the Red Cross and to protect it against abuse. The American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, and the Association of Military Surgeons have put themselves on record in favor of the movement. Ambulances in New York have given up the Red Cross and have adopted the green St. Andrew's cross instead. The Retail Druggists' Association and the Master Barbers' Association have passed resolutions urging their members to refrain from the use of the symbol of the Red Cross.

Fro mmany sources are coming protests against the use of this emblem, which means so much to the soldier on the battle-field and the sufferer in time of disaster, as an advertisement of such things as dynamite, sausage casings, kindling wood, toilet paper, washboards, stoves, shoes, mineral water, toothbrushes, and the like The officers of the American Red Cross are hoping that the example of a great department store in Los Angeles may be widely followed. The proprietor of this store has declined to carry in stock any article bearing the Red Cross as a trade-mark.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY COMMISSION REPORTS.

Compensation for Injuries Is Provided in Bill by Majority, From Which Commissioner George M. Gillette Dissents.

H. V. Mercer and W. E. McEwen, members of the Minnesota employers Liability commission created in 1909, presented a workingmen's compensation bill to the legislature, with a report on the subject covering 289 pages George M. Gillette of Minneapolis the third member of the commission, does not sign the report, but files a memorandum giving his three reasons for refusing. These are replied to by the other members in separate statements.

Mr. Gillette's reasons for refusing to sign are briefly these: First, that he favors assessing the employees for a part of the cost; second, that the compulsory scheme provided is probably unconstitutional; third, that the cost to industries will be a great burden. Mr. Gillette represents the interests of employers, who will oppose the bill as drawn. Mr. McEwen represents organized labor, and Mr. Mercer, as an attorney, is the "disinterested third party" on the commission.

The following summary of the work of the commission as given by the Minneapolis Journal will be of interest to busy readers.

Is result of act 1909 legislature, creating state commission on employer's liability.

Bill endorsed by two members of commission, George M. Gillette, representing employers dissenting.

Mr. Gillette submits brief statement and will prepare amendments to bill.

Gillette objections summarized: First, bill should have mutual feature, employees contributing part of cost; second, doubts whether bill is valid with compulsory feature, also because it does not require actual fault of employer shown and because it deprives injured man of jury trial; third, because increased cost of system will be serious burden on industry.

Objections answered in statements by Mr. Mercer and Mr. McEwen.

Bill provides schedule of benefits and superseded common law remidies.

All industrial employments where accidents occur come under act.

Compensation for death fixed at $3,000, payable in installments within five years.

No compensation during first two weeks, except $100 for medical expenses.

Funeral expenses of $100 allowed if death occurs within five years.

* * * * * * * * * *

(Too late for last week).

Inga has been on the sick list for the last week.

Johnny Stiener has been absent from school yesterday and today.

C. A. Swanson was at the school house sawing wood last Thursday.

We had the storm-windows put on our school house last week and the result is that we are having nicer weather this week.

Edwin Koglin was absent from school today.

Since we are having nicer weather the children get no more sleigh rides to school.

Get your valentines ready to mail at our post office the 14th of February. For further information call on our Postmaster, Edwin Swanson or his assistant, Edwin Koglin.

The Club held a business meeting last Friday after noon. It was voted on to have a program, Friday evening, Feb. 24th. After the program the school will challenge the visitors and patrons who wish to take part for a spelling down match. Come and take part. All are welcome.

It was also decided to have a debate in our school during the last session next Friday afternoon. The subject chosen for debate is: Resolved, "that the negroes have been more ill-treated in our country than the Indians."

The speakers on the affirmitive are Edwin and Augusta Swanson, Amy Whitman, Louie Meyer, Iena Riedle and Paul. Those on the negative are Egbert Malberg, Lizzie Fursnau, Sarah Swanson, Ruth Furstnau, Ella Meyer and Edwin Koglin.

The following resolution was unanomously adopted:

Where as God in his great mercy has called to His home her dear Grandmother: Be it resolved that we, the schoolmates and friends of Amy Whitman, do hereby extend our most heartfelt and sincere sympathy to her in bereavement.

The section men from Thief River Falls found one of the rails on the Great Northern track close by the school house broken and displaced to-day when going over the track just before the local was due. It must have been luck that brought them there just at the right time.

To-morrow begins the shortest but the most Patriotic month of the year.

We hope to be well acquainted with Lincoln and Washington before it leaves and if you come to hear us the 24th you will also have a chance to partake of our Patriotic enthusium and historical knowledge.

Dear Correspondent; If it is possible for you, kindly send in your notes so as to reach here not later than on Wednesdays as otherwise we cannot get them in print that week.—Thief River Press.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease precsribed local remedies, and by constanlty failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

BACK TO THE FARM

There are many evidences that the city man, wearied with the never ending struggle for existence in the crowded centers of population, has begun to think about the green fields of the country and a little farm of his own, where he can spend his later years in independence. Evidences multiply too that a decided change is coming in the mental attitude of the farm youth on the subject of life on the farm. Daily there is growing an appreciation of the dignity of farming as a profession.

In preparation for a life in the country thousands of parents are sending their sons to the various agricultural colleges, and an increasing number of these students are from the cities. The farmers themselves in many localities are taking up the short term scientific course provided by numerous colleges. The United States Government through its Reclamation Service is providing the land, and the Department of Agriculture, the states in their experiment stations, the railroads with their lecture cars and exhibits, are all encouraging the back to the farm movement.

Throughout the land there are thousands of people now residing in the cities and towns who are studying farming with a view ultimately of removing to the country. They are simply book farmers, yet it is surprising how quickly these same people make good when they go into the game in real earnest.

On many of the irrigation projects of the Government the managers report that a surprisingly large number of city bred folks have taken up farms. A crop census of the farm furnishes reassuring evidence, that the city fellow is more than holding his own, and in some instances has been more successful than many of the experienced farmers. These successes are not exceptional. The reports show a very small percentage of failures on the part of settlers of all classes. This fact when taken in connection with the statistics of the commercial agencies which show from 50 to 75 per cent of failures in all other professions should tend to accelerate and encourage greatly the much desired efflux from the city to the country.

January 31st, 1911.

The annual meeting of the Minnesota Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis held last week Wednesday, Jan. 25th was attended by delegates from a dozen Minnesota cities. The officers of last year were re-elected, namely, Dr. H. A. Tomlinson of St. Peter, Pres.; Mrs. C. G. Higbee and Dr. W. L. Beebe of St Paul. Vice President; Dr. H. L. Taylor of St. Paul, Sec.; and Mr. H. W. Parker of St. Paul, Treas.

There was no set program, the report of the Executive Secretary, and reports from the delegates taking up the time. Summarized reports from all the local societies will be included in the report of the association to be printed. Any one can secure a copy from Christopher Easton, Executive Secretary, Old Capitol, St. Paul.

The report covered the educational work of the year and showed a large amount of work done by the state and local associations. It was generally agreed that the cities had been fairly well aroused and the call for education was now from the rural districts. How to extend the anti-tuberculosis message to the districts not reached was the main theme of the discussion. Plans for special rural exhibits to be provided by the state were presented. Also suggestions for lectures in school houses.

All agreed that the state and counties should provide a large number of beds for cases of tuberculosis that could not be treated satisfactorily at home. The Legislation Committees which is drafting a bill providing for state aid to county tuberculosis hospitals was continued and it is hoped its efforts will be successful and will be backed up by all public spirited citizens throughout the state.

April 30th has been set aside this year as "Tuberculosis Day," and will be observed in 200,000 churches in the country in a manner similar to that of "Tuberculosis Sunday" in 1910, when over 40,000 sermons were preached on the prevention of consumption. In this first official announcement of the occasion made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis today, the leaders of the movement state that they hope to enlist all of the 33,000,000 church members in the country.

In one respect Tuberculosis Day will differ from Tuberculosis Sunday of 1910. Instead of resquesting the churches to give the tuberculosis cause a special Sunday service, the National Association is going to ask this year that meetings, at which the subject of tuberculosis and its prevention can be discussed, be held on Sunday, April 30th, or on any other day near that date, either in the week preceeding or the week following. "What we want," says Dr. Livingston Farrand Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in a report on this movement, "is to have this whole subject of tuberculosis discussed in all of the 200,000 churches of the United States at as nearly the same time as possible. This does not mean that a stated service must be given over to this work, though that might be desirable, but that any minister, or other authority whom he may invite, can present the problem to his congregation before or after his regular service, or an any day within the week preceeding or following April 30th."

The National Association is planning to gather statistics from thousands of ministers, showing how serious a problem tuberculosis is to every church. These figures will show among other things the number of deaths last year from tuberculosis in the church congregation, and the ways in which the pastors are called on to minister to sufferers from this disease. It is planned also to issue millions of circulars and pamphlets on the prevention of tuberculosis, both from the national office and from the headquarters of the 450 anti-tuberculosis associations who will co-operate in the movement.

Alcohol and spiritus liquors causes more tuberculosis than any other one thing in the world.

Alcohol prepares the body that we may grow tuberculosis. It is well to remember that the seed is not every thing. But just as the farmer does not reap his crop of grain without the cultivation of the ground properly and prepares it and fertilizes it so the great majority do not get tuberculosis if they avoid strong drinks and do not cultivate a body soil proper for its growth.

Prof. Guttstadt of Berlin made a study of Prussia and the Prussian government in 1904 published these records. In Prussia 161 people out of every 1000 die of tuberculosis. Prof. Guttstadt found the greatest number of deaths came where alcohol was used fore or less commonly. Of every 1000 bartenders who died 556 have tuberculosis; of every 1000 brewers who die 345 have tuberculosis; of every 1000 school teachers who die 143 have tuberculosis; of every 1000 physicians who die 113 have tuberculosis; of every 1000 clergymen who die 76 have tuberculosis.

Those who use alcohol are more susceptible to germs of disease. In saloons expectoration is more common and the microbes are inhaled from the dried saliva upon the floor. The disease is also carried by drinking from glasses that have only been rinsed in cold water. So we find the open saloon is not only a place of shame stains of crime and dark blots of disgrace, but a place where the body is made susceptible to the most deadly diseases the human race has to contend with today. Oh! that the people would wake up and fight this enemy of God and man.

Search the history of this hateful thing and find one page over which some mother can bow her head and thank God for all the saloon did for her boy. There is no such record. All its history is written in tears and blood with smears of shame.

BETTER CORN.

Much has been written and said of the neb of increasing the acreage of corn in Minnesota, and of the gain which would accrue therefrom; and much more might be said with profit. If, however, an increase in acreage shall in any way reduce the amount of labor and attention bestowed upon the present acreage, we emphatically protest against any such action.

The production in our state, as shown by the ten-year average of 29.4 bushels per acre, is far below what it should be; for double that amount is by no means an impossibility. Would not an average yield of 50 bushels of corn per acre mark a greater advance by Minnesota in the way of corn-growing than a doubled acreage? And would it not bring agreater direct financial profit to the producer The successful dairyman is not distinguished by a number of cows he keeps, but by the general producing capacity of his herd when balanced against the cost of production. In a like manner successful corn growing is to be attained not by increasing the number of acres, but by making every acre produce a maximum profit which virtually means an increased yield. From the standpoint of economy, it is more profitable to grow fifty bushels of corn from one acre than to grow sixty blshels from twice that area. To the farmer who is getting a very creditable profit from every acre of corn he is growing we do not hesitate to say "Inrsease your acreage of corn;" but to the framer who is now attaining but a small net profit from his crop we would say, "Grow better corn this year." Such a framer can profitibly give attention during the coming stason to good seed, a better-prepared seed-bed, and a more thorough cultivation.—O. M. Olson, University Farm.

OUR CREED AND PURPOSE

We maintain that farming is, and shuold be, one of the most dignified professions in the world, and that the American farmer is the hope of this nation. We believe that the farmer is of more importance than the farm, and should be first improved; that the skillful hand and cultured mind are his greatest assets; that the boys and girls are his most valuable crop. We would kindle among our readers an ambition for more intelligent farming, and would make not only better farms but better homes, better men and woman, boys and girls.

Animals are as uncomfortable as a man would be when forced to stand or lie on a cold cement floor. Such a floor should be covered knee-deep with straw, especially for milch-cows and young stock. Fattening beeves will show thier appreciation of such comfort by taking on flesh more rapidly.

According to the experts of the North Dakota Agricultural College, damage to trees by rabbits gnawing the bark can be stopped in the following way: Make a thick whitewash; slaching the lime over night improves it. To each pailful of the whitewash add three teaspoonfuls of Paris green and paint the trees with it. Stir frequently when applying it.

That the year 1910 was a year of scanty and insufficient rainful in Minnesota is a fact which gives no assurance that there will be more rain in 1911. The chances for 1911 are no better and no worse than for the previous year. It is well, then, that farmers should plan in advance to get the largest possible benefit from what ever moisture shall be available. This can everywhere be done by a resort to "dry farming" methods. These involve more work, but they practically insure a crop, and probably a better crop than would be secured by ordinary methods aided by an average rainful. Irrigation is another method of crop insurance, a study of the possibilities of which, in the presence of Minnesota's thousands of brimming lakes and streams and of an exhaustless underground water supply, may well engage the leisure hours of our farmers. With so much water everywhere else, is it absolutely necessary that we should suffer again, as we did last season, for want of a litle on the surface of our fields?

WATER TRANSPORTATION AND POWER IN MINNESOTA.

Whatever the stake of the cities in the proper conservation and development of the state's water-wealth through the construction of canals for drainage, transportation and water-power, the stake of the farmers is larger yet. Cheap water transporation, which shall deliver the grain and produce of the Red River Valley and intervening regions at the Twin Cities for one-fourth the cost of railroad freight, would alone add a large percentage to the value of every farm. When to this is added the development, on the same canals, of water-power sufficient, when electrically transmitted to operate trolley lines, and manufacturies and farm machinery in a good part of Minnesota, the farmer's concern in the matter is doubled.

The "Mershon waterway and water-power development scheme," now before the legislature, promises all these things. Its canals will stretch twelve feet deep, from the Lake of the Woods to Traverse Lake and from Granite Falls, on the Minnesota twenty feet deep, to Lake Superior, wih a branch to the Twin Cities. Another system connects Vermillion Lake, via Red Lake, with the first-named canal. The amount of power to be secured in connection with these canals is variously estimated at from 500,000 to 1,000,000 horse-power. This estimate is 'backed' by several of the most famous engineers in the country. Large areas of swamps would also be drained by the canals, and floods prevented. And the enticing thing about the project is the claim that the rentals of the water-power will, in a very few years, pay the entire cost of all the works; so that the state will then possess the whole system, yielding a great annual revenue, without the permanent investment of a dollar. What is asked of the Legislature by the projectors, at present, is that the scheme shall be investigated by an engineering commission, to determine on its feasibility and its commercial value if carried out. A bill appropriating $40,000 for such investigation, introduced by Representative L. C. Spooner, of Morris, is now pending.—C. R. Burns, University Farm.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

Canadian Reciprocity Treaty Insurging Insurgents Secretary? CARTER.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 8, 1911.—The bill providing for the creation of a permanent tariff board having passed the House will now be forced to run the gauntlet of the Senate, which is not altogether friendly to the tariff commission idea. Bailey, of Texas, the Democratic leader of the Senate, has declared himself strongly opposed, and that being the case the chances are that the Senate will find all the obstacles it can to put in the way of the final passage of the bill.

• • •

That was a stormy session in the House on the Monday night that the tariff board bill finally passed. The Democrats conducted a successful and spectacular filibuster, until the usually placid disposition of Champ Clark was aroused and he became quite disturbed at the antics of his colleagues, who were obstructing legislation. The outcome was that the bill passed with a whoop, the vote being 186 to 93, thirty Democrats joining hands with the Republicans to put the bill through, including Champ Clark, the next Speaker of the House. Hammond of Minnesota cast his vote for the bill, at well as all the others of the Minnesota delegation.

• • •

Insurgents did not insurge during the nine hours debate on the tariff board bill. They supported the measure, because they thought it was the best that could be had at this time, on the theory that a half loaf is better than none at all. In fact, the regulars and insurgents in this particular instance got together in a most brotherly fashion, reminding one of the quiet, peaceful days when there were no insurgents within the camp of the regulars, and machinery was well oiled.

• • •

The Democrats, I am informed, are opposed to the general proposition of a tariff board, on the ground that it looks like abrogating one of the functions of Congress, numely to originate bills for revenue purposes. It is pointed out, however, that the functions of a tariff board will be administrative, not legislative, and that its duties will be confined to collecting data as to the cost of production at home and abroad, for the use of Congress in revising the tariff. The Democratic leaders have had their ears to the ground. While they oppose a tariff board on principle, yet they have been listening, and, to use the words of Mr. Clark, of Missoura, "the demand for such a board is insistent and increasing." Hammond of Minnesota is finding himself rather a delicate position with reference to the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty, which Congress will shortly be called upon to pass on. Mr. Hammond's party associates favor the treaty for the most part, and it is presumed that the inclinations of the second district Congressmen are in that direction. It must be remembered, however, that the district Mr. Hammond represents is made up in the main of farmers, who are producers. Herein lies the nut that Hammond finds so hard to crack: If he comes out in favor of the treaty, he will have his farmer friends on his back. If, on the other hand, he takes a stand against the treaty he will have his free trade and reciprocity constituents to deal with. On the whole it is an embarrassing situation, which could only be relieved by placing Hammond in a city district, where he could consistently speak his mind and convictions.

• • •

It is assested here that the proposed reciprocity treaty will be popular in the larger centers of population, where the high cost of living is a factor. The jobbers, wholesalers, manufactors generally are writing to their members of Congress urging the ratification of the treaty. It will thus be seen that the cities, as a rule, are favoring the proposition. But, on the other hand, the agricultural districts are opposed to the treaty ratofication and the representatives from these sections are on the war path, fighting the proposed trade agreement.

• • •

Opinion is divided as to whether the President will gain popularity as the result of the reciprocity pact or not. There are some who declare that the agreement is unfair to the agricultural classes, for the reason that agricultural products are on the free list. In other words, the farmers will be obliged to bear the brunt of the losses in prices which their products will bring under the proposed treaty, without any compensating returns. The opponents to the compact assert that it means free trade for the farmer, but protection to the manufacturer, who will be the greatest beneficiary, while on the other hand the American land-farmer along the Canadian border will be obliged to sell his wheat, grown on high price land, in competition with Canadian grain, grown on cheap er land.

• • •

B. D. White, a Minnesota man by the way, who has been at the head of the dairy manufacturing investigations of the dairy division of the department of agriculture has recently resigned his position with the government and will hereafter be with the Crown Cork and Seal Co., of Baltimore co-operation which manufactres a machine for botting milk. Mr. White has signed a three years' contract with this company, at a salary the third year of $5000 a year. He will be in charge of the sales department.

Steps have been taken by the National Republican Progressive League for the organization in practically every State of State branches. There have been so many applications for membership from everystate that the leaders in the new movement have concluded that some such step as arranged for is necessary. Although the League is but in its infancy requests from all over the country have been pouring in for speakers to take the platform and stump to preach the new gospel of popular gavernment, which the progressive Republicans hope to make an accomplished fact by means of the initiative referendum, direct primaries, and the recall. Roosevelt's recent announcement that he is a progressive Republican is looked upon as a clear gain to the cause.

• • •

Th announcement that Ballinger is to quit the secretary-ship of the Interior March 4, to be succeeded by Senator Carter, in the event that the latter does not come back to the Senate from Montana, does not bring much comfort to those who had hoped to see a progressive Republican in full sympathy with conservation policies land this position. Carter has always belonged to the Aldrich group of Senators and it has been rymored that in case he was returned to the Senate, he would succeed the Rhode Island Senator as the Republican leader in the upper chamber.

• • •

The Senate may be the scene of several spectacular preformances after all, if the threats of insurgent Senators mean anything. Senator Brown, who belongs to this group has announced his intention to block appropriation bills, unless the Senate votes this session on the following propositions: the validity of the Lorimer election the resolution to amend the constitution for direct election of Senators, the tariff commission, and the Sulloway bill to increase pensions.

• • •

It is a dead sure thing that the Minnesota farmers are strongly opposed to the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty and they are not slow to let their members know how they feel on this subject. One Minnesota farmer opposed on the ground that if grain values fall farmers will desert their lands.

WOMEN OBTAIN SILVER

That women have learned the profit of reading newspaper advertisements is shown by the number of household heads who are taking advantage of the "ads" exploiting a certain brand of excellent oranges.

The succulent spheres arrived direct from California groves only a comparatively few hours past, but already fruit dealers all over the city are busy answering the demand by generous bags for the golden fruit, wrappers from which bring table silver to the thrifty women who are thus supplying their families with the most healthful of all fruits. PUBLICITY OF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX LISTS.

Bemidji, Minn., Jan. 19.—Complete publicity of personal tax lists is provided for in a bill drafted by Rudolph Lee, editor of the Long Prairie Leader and Chairman of the committee appointed by the Northern Minnesota Editorial association at its recent meeting in Staples to draw up such a measure.

The bill, backed by the editors in this part of the state, is in the hands of A. G. Rutledge of this city, secretary-treasurer of the Northern Minnsota Editorial association. Mr. Rutledge is in St. Paul, and will see that the measure is introduced at once by some member of the House from a northern district. The bill provides:

"There shall be published in one regular issue in the official paper in each county of this state, between the 1st day of January and the 15th day of January in each year a list of all the persons against whom personal property taxes have been levied for the preceeding year, which list shall be furnished the printer by the county auditor. Such list shall give the name of the taxpayer, the town, the city, or village in which he lives and the total amount of tax against him.

ORANGE JUICE INEBRIATE CURE; MAKES BAR ODOR "DISGUISING"

Doctor Tells Vegetarian Society Cooked Food Is Source of 95 Per Cent of All Human Ills—Unfried Viands Ideal.

Knight of the flowing bowl, attention!

If you wish to stop dallying with the cup that cheers, eat oranges.

The advice was given by Dr. George J. Drews to the Chicago Vegetarian Society in an address on "Cooked Food vs. Unfried Food."

"Orange juice is the best antidote for an alcoholic appetite," he said. "When any one feels a desire to drink anything intoxicating all he has to do is to buy a couple of oranges. After eating them the desire will soon pass away. The secret lies in the sugar of the orange. It immediately causes a wholesome digust even for the odor of a farroom.

"About 95 per cent of all diseases are caused by eating in contact with food fire makes unnatural. It gives it a sweet taste which causes an abnormal appetite. In consequence the system becomes overworked and the blood deteriorates."—Chicago Tribune.

SUNKIST ORANGES
SUNKIST LEMONS

For Breakfast Try "Sunkist" Oranges

Luscious Tree-Ripened Fruit

It is not sufficient to know that oranges are the most healthful of all fruits. It is quite as important to know the kind of oranges that are most healthful and most palatable. The very finest California oranges are now packed under the label "Sunkist." Please serve "Sunkist" oranges at breakfast tomorrow and learn the superiority of tree-ripened, seedless, fiberless oranges over the commonplace kind. Don't fail to save the wrappers.

There is so much "meat" and nourishment in "Sunkist" oranges and so little waste that, in addition to their extra fine flavor and goodness, they are really the most economical oranges to buy.

"Sunkist" Lemons Juiciest

Lemons differ as much as oranges. Pithy, thick-skinned lemons contain very little juice. You waste money when you buy them. Please ask for "Sunkist" Lemons and note how uniformly sound each one is, and what a small percentage is skin and fiber.

Get This Valuable Orange Spoon

Save 12 "Sunkist" orange (or lemon) wrappers and send them to us, with 12 cents to pay charges, packing, etc., and we will present you with a genuine Rogers Orange Spoon, of beautiful design and highest quality. Begin saving wrappers today. If you desire more than one, send 12 "Sunkist" wrappers and 12 cents for each additional spoon. In remitting, please send one-cent stamps when the amount is less than 24 cents; on amounts above 24 cents, we prefer money order, express order or bank draft. Don't send cash. We will be glad to send you complete list of valuable premiums. We honor both "Sunkist" and "Red Ball" wrappers for premiums. (32)

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, FEB. 10, 1911

The "Hoboes" held a convention at Milwaukee last Saturday. Their next one will be held at Minneapolis. It seems that they are coming west.

President Taft is threatening to call an extra session of Congress in case they should adjourn without passing the Canadian Reciprocity Treaty

It seems that our Senator Nelson is right in with the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate. The Old Gent must expect to feather his nest while he has a chance. Well, there will be no more chance for Knute.

Senator Cummins of Iowa is reported as being in favor of extension of Federal control of railroad interests. He declares that the public will accept socialism before they will bow to monopoly. We believe he is right.

Two Ramsey county senators are opposed to re-apportionment. Ramsey county has nothing to fear but then some senators and representatives are far more important in their own estimations than the entire district which they represent.

According to some fanciful reporter of the city dailies society has been holding its breath for the past two weeks of expectant hush awaiting the great event of the Gould-Decies nuptials. It looks to us as tho the greatest part of the event was in the daily papers. We agree with the magazine that put it thus: "Enie Menie Mo, Catch an Heiress with the Dough; If she stings you let her go, Easy Money Mine Mo".

The person who never dares to enter on any new project can never expect to do anything of permanent benefit to the world at large. It is the man who tries something new who makes all the sacrifices necessary for the worlds progress. Do not fear to launch out. You may lose, but if you do it is sure the world will win and you may get your reward here or in the hereafter.

The man who is ready to quit just because he has a few adversities does not deserve to succeed. It is the fellow who will profit by defeat who will ultimately turn them into victories.

The recent recall of Mayor Hi Gill of Seattle because of his failure to prosecute the vicious elements and in fact his similar attitude on reform measures, may win many to the cause of woman suffragism. Mayor Gill admitted that his defeat was due to woman suffrage as the women lead the campaign against him. It is to be hoped that the women of Seattle may rouse some of their sister voters in other states to better their record in proving that the granting of the suffrage makes better legislation possible.

The Senators and House members of the Ninth Congressional district have unanimously agreed to stand for the following reapportionment of said district. As will be observed, this plan adds one Senator and three House members to the 9th, district and takes in Koochiching county as part of a senatorial district. As districts are likely to be re-numbered no number is here attached.

A. L. Hanson, Chairman, Senate.
G. H. Mattson, Chairman, House.
Reapportionment sub-committee

Otter Tail, Population 46,036, Senators one, Representatives four. Becker. Clay and Wilkin, Population 47,543 Senators one, Representatives three. Norman, Mahnomen Clearwater and Red Lake, Population 39,505, Senators one, Representatives three. Polk, Population 36,001, Senators one Representatives two. Roseau, Marshall, and Kittson, Population 37,345, Senators one, Representatives three. Beltrami and Koochiching Population 25,768, Senators one, Representatives one.

This evidently means that Norman county will be entitled to one representative, Clearwater and Mahnomen will be entitled to one while Pennington and Red Lake will get one and the five will be entitled to one senator.

The reapportionment bill has not as yet been passed by the legislature but it will came up for consideration in the near future.

FOR WORLD PEACE.

We, the Rising Generation, want a World Agreement for Universal Peace.

We want our war vessels and battleships disarmed and turned into a Public University of Travel, a White Fleet of Peace that will tour the world every year.

We want these ships maned by the best instructors in Foreign Art. Literature, Travel, History, Live Languages, Sociology, Human Nature and Universal Brotherhood.

We want the students selected by all-around merit from the graduates of Public High Schools and Industrial High Schools of all States.

We wan this postgraduate year of Travel given at the expense of the nation, the students co-operating systematically in all the work done aboard ship.

We believe in these things.
We pray for them.
We talk for them.
We work for them.
We vote to this end.

IN BUSINESS CIRCLES
(By Gilson Gardner-

Washington, D. C., Feb, 6.—Taft and sure defeat, or progressive candidate with a chance to win? That is how the presidential situation presents itself to Republicans.

And the presidential situation is more discussed in Washington today than reciprocity, Lorimer or ship-subsidy.

The men who manupulate conventions have begun to move. Maneuvering is required to get the delegates and the time before the national convention is none too long.

That Taft will be renominated and that the Democrats will win is an opinion universally voiced in private by those veterans of the party who belong to the regular so-called standpat wing. Of course, they cannot say this publicly and officially, but it is the unanimous expression in all cloak-room conferences. It is the opinion of men like Cannon, Tawney, Lodge, Penrose, Crane and Fairbanks and indeed of all Taft's friends.

They figure Taft's weakness as follows:

First—His failure to receive indorsement at the hands of former Pres Roosevelt.

Second—His alliance with such unpopular influences in the party as Aldrich, Cannon, Ballenger and others who are generally credited with connections with special privilege;

Third—The hostility of the progressive wing, led by men like LaFollette Cummins. Beveridge, Pinchot and Roosevelt;

Fourth—The public disapproval of Taft's mad faith in accepting the presidency as a progressive, and then administering the office as a reactionary;

Fifth—The bad effects of his support of Ballinger and opposition to genuine conservation.

Sixth—Such other things as Taft's acquiescence in the Aldrich tariff bill his use of patronage to coerce progressives, his defeat of the income tax amendment, etc.;

Seventh—The cumulative effect of these as seen in the repudiation of the party in the late elections.

Such are admitted to be the elements of weakness in Taft's candidacy. Opposed to these are the facts that he has the confidence of the powerful business interests generally spoken of as Wall St.; that there is a strong sentiment in favor of giving any president a second term and that the regulars in his party favor his renomination. But contributing much more powerfully to the chances of Taft's renomination are these facts:

First—That the Republican organization is controlled by big business.

Second—That the Southern delegates are brought under Taft control by federal patronage and cash.

Third—That the Southern delegates, combined with the delegates who can be delivered by the state machines controlled by such as Penrose, Lorimer, Crane, Aldrich, Carter and Warren, make up two-thirds of the delegates in the convention.

In short, Taft's nomination can be forced by the combination of machine politicians and big business.

Will it?

That is another question.

"Do you propose to try to defeat New England senator of a senator said the New England senator, with Taft's nomination?" inquired a New England senator of a senator prominent in the organization of the progressive league.

"Do you propose to put the party on the rocks by nominating Taft?" was the reply.

"Better go on the rocks with Taft than with a progressive candidate," sai dthe New England senator, with frankness.

"Or win with a progressive candidate?" pursued the man from the West.

"You will never get the chance," replied the representative of special privilege.

But that is not the universal answer. Defeat is not a pleasant prospect for any politician. Ti fight for the nomination of a man predestined to defeat does not enthuse even a Tawney or a Hitchcock. There are scores of lame ducks serving in this congress who blame their defeat on their party regularly and hold the party's titular leader responsible. These men want success; they want to get back into power and do not want to wait four or eight years for a Democrat administration to show what it can do before getting back. They look at the victory of the progressives in Wisconsin, Minnesota and elsewhere and learn the simple lesson that standpatism means defeat and pregressivism means success. They begin to wonder if it is not time to trim their sails to the prevailing winds instead of waiting for the winds to change, and they are wondering if it might not be well to name some popular man like La Follette, Roosevelt or Pinchot, on the chance that such a nomination might avert the sure calamity and show the way into green fields again.

And this Progressive league has settled it. If it were not previously certain that Taft would be defeated if renominated, the organization of the Progressive league has made it so. Here is organized defection in the party—a league of irreconcilables warring on the popular side and every man ready to go to the last ditch to defeat the nomination and election of Taft.

The political weatherwise shake their heads.

You notice that the men who control the delegates are not running to their newspaper friends to tell them about resolutions indorsing Taft for another term.

To tell the truth, even the political weatherbeaton agent of special privilege is a bit shy of this Taft renomination business. He is disposed to hold off and see what can be done. Many of his kind will be found announcing that it is too early yet to talk about the presidency and that it will be time enough next year. But the thing which really makes him pause is that question:

Shall it be Taft and sure defeat, or a progressive candidate with a chance to win?—St. Paul Daily News.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE CIGARET.

Gov. Adolph O. Eberhart says it is not the province of his office to inquire whether or not cigarets are sold in the state capitol.

The governor took an oath a month ago to take care that the laws of his state are faithfully executed.

Other governors have looked upon that oath as meaning what it says.

Acting under it, Gov. William R. Merriam stopped the Hall-Fitzsimmons fight.

Acting under it, David M. Clough and John A. Johnson forbade the bringing of liquor into the statehouse that legislators might celebrate riotously the close of a drunken session.

The oath of office of a governor sometimes is but the group of words upon a printed page; sometimes, when a Folk or Stubbs takes it, it becomes a living vital force for good among the people.

Minnesota's governor is not a Folk and his oath cannot mean any more to the people than it does to him.

For that Minnesota is to be pitied. —St. Paul Daily News.

VILLAGE WANTS NEW CASE.

After being defeated in the supreme court the contestants in the village of Red Lake Falls, who are striving to set aside the formation of Pennington Co., and to nulify the action of the voters in the fall election, have secured permission to have a hearing before Atty. Gen. Simpson next Tuesday, with the hope that he will grant them quo warranto proceedings, and in the event that he does they will open the whole case anew.—Duluth News Tribune.

The business will be continued however, as before by the new partnership of Henry Eide and Hans Angell Mr. Eide having given up his position with the Langseth Mercantile Co. Carl has not decided yet what he will do in the future.

The local lodge of the I. O. G. T. which was organized here last week will hold their first regular meeting on Thursday Feb. 16th at the Rest Room of the Co-operative Store. O. Brevik the organizer from Climax will be present to take the lead in getting the lodge going. New members will be initiated.

The "Man on the Box" as given at the Auditorium Tuesday evening to a very well pleased audience was one of the best if not the best play ever given at a local theatre. The play itself, the costumeing, the stage settings and minor details, were all such that they added rather than, as is so often the case, detracted from the playing. The play was good to put it briefly, and anyone who missed it has probably regretted it ere this judging from the comments heard the last few days.

School Notes

Bishop Morrison, of Duluth, and Rev. Jones, of Crookston, made the Lincoln school a visit on Tuesday afternoon. The gentlemen expressed surprise at the size of the enrollment and at the modern facilities and equipment of the building. The students were treated to a brief but eloquent address by the Bishop.

The board of education at its last meeting gave the old high school building the name of "Washington." This was to avoid confusion in having two schools known as high schools. All the buildings are now known by titles of one name each, which makes for brevity and convenience. They are the Lincoln, Mechanical, Washington, Knox and Central.

A farmers' institute will be held at the Lincoln gymnasium next Wednesday at 11 a. m.. Professor Tomhave, of the College of Agriculture will preside. He is known as the state's stock expert and will surely bring to his audience something of interest and value. Mr. Charles Gustafson, of this city, than whom there is no better dairy stock man in this section of country, will relate his experiences with breeding and feeding. Dr. Newell, the veterinary surgeon, has also been secured to address the farmers on contagious diseases and how to prevent them. This trio ought to be able to make this meeting of great value to any person owning stock of any kind Everybody is cordially invited. The date is Wednesday, Feb. 15th.

The dedicatory program cannot be announced until next week, as it appears impossible to secure the attendance at one time of all those throughout the state who are interested in this event.

Supt. J. H. Hay delivers an address on "Making for Citizenship" before the North Central Teachers' Association at Bemidji next Friday.

New shades are being hung in the Lincoln this week. The floors are also being oiled, so visitors hereafter will find the building in good order.

Cards are in the hands of all the the grades teachers, on which is recorded the temperature of the several rooms at hour periods. The health of the pupils is of more consequence than their mental training. Given the former and the studies will be easily cared for

The program attachment in Lincoln ring warning and class bells. It also cut out the bells at four and and on Saturdays and Sundays. This automatic arrangement of bell ringing prevents any waste of time and compels promptness on the part of both teachers and pupils.

It is the modern idea to extend the use of a school building to those who cannot properly be classed as day students. This may be for civic purposes, for gymnastic work or for amusement proper. A gymnasium is the best place for young men to spend their evenings, if it is equipped with facilities for instruction and amusement and under proper supervision. The local high school gym ought to be so used. The young men of the city are deserving and worthy of it.

MIXED METAPHORS
By A. W. Clark

If the mountain don't come to the farm boy the farm boy will go to the city; wisdom did not die with Mohammet.

The best way to lift the drudgery of farm life into the field of art is to keep a hired girl.

The legislators are puzzling over "How to beat the Constitution;" "What's the Constitution between friends?.

And now state Engineer Ralph is to be investigated; wonder if he has let the Steal culvert men pay off both ends against the middle?

Your Uncle did keep his boy on the farm till the chain broke.

The city man goes to the country to get fresh air and things; the country-man goes to the city to get fresh too.

Cannon and Lorimer seem to have discovered the meat the jackass doth feed upon.

Rollis has quit fighting long enough to break out the roads.

The editor has nothing to do with this hot stuff; its your Uncle's own invention and he stands ready to answer before the bar of judgment when called that it is void of malice. If you like it, just give the editor a hunch.

As the month went out your heifer came in and butter dropped four cents a pound. And people wonder "Why the boy don't stay on the Farm."

From a farmer's point of view, free trade with Canada is like blowing up the grainery to kill the rats.

The average high school girl is wondering these days "how it is going to fit."

County Superintendent of Schools, E. A. Mostue, left yesterday morning for Bemidji where he will attend the Northern Minnesota Educational Association on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. He will not be at his office at the Auditorium on Saturday on account thereof.

Stafford Curran spent Sunday and Monday with his home folks leaving for Minneapolis Monday evening. From there he expected to go to Brainard to officiate as best man at his brother's wedding before returning to his work at Marble but a slight operation which was found necessary may detain him.

Mrs. Creapo and Miss Druice McCaulley went to Thief River Falls Wednesday morning. In the evening Mrs. Carl and Miss Dora McCaulley went up on the local. The entire party attended the performance given at the opera house in the evening, "The Burgomaster"—Mahnomen Pioneer.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church and congregation will meet at the home of Mrs. Chris Christianson's in the two-story Evenson flat on Main Ave., on Friday afternoon, Feb. 10th at 3:30 sharp. A fine program has been arranged for the hour above stated, after which will be the election of officers for the coming year, All are invited to be present.

MOYLAN

Snow, more snow, much more snow There is enough to make a pessimist of most anyone who has some hauling to do.

Miss Sollum of New Folden closed the school work of this year in Dist. No. 110 last Thursday. This is early, but school has been in session since early in the fall.

Mrs. Geo. Wold, who has been quite ill during January is a slower process than the loss of her health. Dr. Gamble gave her a professional call on Wednesday.

Mr. Lamporter, the secretary of the Peoples Co-operative Telephone Company was around last week collecting the wherewithals of the company. All's well except the roads.

Paul Sund of Esplee passed thru here enroute to Thief River Falls on Saturday.

The final report of Marshall county is somewhat voluminous and gives an account of those who have received a slice. If the business of the county keeps on growing thus a few years more it will be a close second to the Standard Oil Company.

Rev. Bjornson conducted services in the Anstad school house on Sunday. The Annual meeting of the local organization was also held.

Victor Bolly's contract with Geo. Wold expired last Monday. He moved closer to the Ditch so as to be reminded of it, oftener.

A "Sanbeam" came our way the other ady. Even it seems to be effected by the weather. Its frozen fast to Red Lake on one side and thawed out to Pennington on the other.

KRATKA

Stephen Singer has been up to the head of the Lakes the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Young were callers at J. R. Hesby's Sunday.

Ella Henry spent a pleasant week in Thief River Falls last week.

On account of unbroken roads our mail carrier returned the same way he came out for four days last week. We think it would be an excellent idea for the farmers to "pull together" and each do his share toward making the roads passable.

At the creamery meeting Monday it was decided to run the plant this summer.

Our local butcher, J. R. Hesby, butchered a cow and three calves for J. D. Turnwall last Monday. They were taken to town and Mr. Turnwall returned thru Wednesday's storm.

Altho a little tardy it will perhaps be still in line to congratulate our neighbor, Henry Rummestrand, and wish him and his bride a life of happiness and prosperity. These parts used to be thot of as "Bachelor's Paradise" (?) but by the looks of things paradise was not yet complete and we are glad to see so many made happy by completion.

P. Paulson and Albert Hanson were business callers in Thief River Falls last week.

EXCEL

Christian Johnson and Herman Simonson spent Friday evening at Ed Larson's.

Mrs. P. Swanson visited at Warren over Sunday with her son and other friends.

P. O. Malberg spent the first of the week in Warren attending the County Commissioners Meeting.

Nick Baker, Ed Rupprecht, Henry Meyer and Willis Warring visited at Steinhauer's last Thursday evening.

A large crowd of young people gathered at Malberg's Friday evening and all attending report having had a good time.

LOST:—An eye; finder please return to Nick's ox.

A number of young people visited at Hoffman's Sunday evening.

It is rumored that wedding bells will soon be ringing. We wonder who will be the guilty ones?

Ellen Johnson, Hilda, Victor, and Edwin Swanson and Christ and Harold Johnson spent Sunday evening at Malberg's.

How many know if the ground-hog saw his shadow last Thursday?

Nick Baker had a circus one day last week. If you want to know the particulars, ask parties concerned.

R. F. D. NO. 2.

A crowd visited at C. Swartz's and all that were present reported a good time.

Fred Steinhauer has started his feed mill now.

A crowd of young folks visited at Malberg's last Friday evening and all that were present reported a very pleasant time.

Mr. Omer Warring and Miss. Agnes Olson visited at Simon Warring's last Sunday. Hope they had a very pleasant time.

A crowd of young Excel boys visited at Steinhauer's last week, intending to see Miss Jackman, but they left. They had a good time just the same.

Some of the young people spent an evening of last week at A. Hoffman's all reporting a good time.

Wonder what was the matter with Frank Heiser last Sunday that he did not show up.

RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE

A religious conference will be held by the Trinity Congregation of Hauges Synode from the 16th to the 19th of February. This conference will be held at the Swedish Lutheran Augustana church commencing at 10:30 a. m., on the 16th. Rev. Berge Olson from Winsor will preach the opening sermon. The text for discussion will be Luc. 13, 6-9., introduced by Rev. S. C. Simonson from St. Paul. Several of the neighboring pastors have promised to be present, and we hope for a meeting with showers of blessings. Please tell your neighbor about this meeting and be present your self and invite as many as you can to come.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

MINNESOTA EXHIBITION CAR DOING GOOD WORK

REPORTS OF IMMIGRATION AGENT FULLERTON INDICATE GREAT INFLUX OF SETTLERS INTO MINNESOTA NEXT SPRING.

A great part of the salaried public are still seeking new locations, where comparatively cheap lands can be had, which will insure a good income in return for the labor put in. This is strongly evidenced by the reports received from Traveling Immigration Agent Sam Fullerton, in charge of the Minnesota Exhibition Car, to State Immigration Agent Welch and E. C. Leedy, General Immigration Agent of the Great Northern Ry. in St. Paul.

This car is now completing a most successful tour through the State of Illinois, some forty-five towns having been visited with an attendance of 1,000 to 3,000 people daily.

Everywhere most flattering comments were heard regarding the apparent agricultural possibilities of Minnesota, the greatest interest of the Illinois farmer being centered in the corn and vegetable exhibit of the car. Many who had already decided to locate in other sections of the country, the South and the far West having the preference, were made converts to the land of large grain yields —Minnesota.

Minnesota also came in for her share of interest at the United States Land and Irrigation Congress, which closed in Chicago recently. The Minnesota portion of the Great Northern's booth was most attractively gotten up, and from inquiries made and the demand for literature, some twenty thousand Minnesota Bulletins as well as local Minnesota Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club booklets being distributed, would indicate a great influx of homeseekers and investors into Minnesota next spring.

Chicago Mayor Is Not a Candidate for Re-Election.

BUSSE OUT OF CONTEST

Will Not Seek Another Term as Mayor of Chicago.

Chicago, Feb. 7.—Mayor Busse has put at rest all rumors that he would be a candidate for re-election.

"I long ago made up my mind not to seek another term as mayor," the city executive said.

It is expected the mayor's announcement will be followed by a launching of the boom of John R. Thompson, former county treasurer, for the Republican nomination.

MEXICAN REGULARS MARCH INTO JUAREZ

Doub[illegible]

El Paso, [illegible]—Colonel Rabago and [illegible] of 300 federals entered the city of Juarez unmolested by the insurrecto forces. They were received with joyful acclaim by the people of the city.

The star of the insurrectos' leader, Pasqual Orozco, who was to occupy the city of Juarez, appears to be on the wane. His policy of delay has enabled reinforcements to reach Juarez and the probability of taking that city is now considered much more remote.

Other reinforcements, in the shape of General Navarro's column, are en route from Chihuahua and it is expected here the federals will be able to hold their city and that knowing this the insurrectos will retire. There is a rumor that the insurrectos are near Juarez but this cannot be verified.

STATE CAPITOL IN RUINS

Lightning Hits Missouri Structure and Causes Total Loss.

Jefferson City, Mo., Feb. 7.—The Missouri capitol building was entirely destroyed by fire. The total loss, including the structure and many records and state papers in the offices of the governor, secretary of state and treasurer, is estimated at $1,000,000, with no insurance.

The fire was caused by lightning.

Holy Lands of All Religions.

Christians call Palestine the Holy Land because it was the birthplace of the Christian religion on earth as well as that of the Saviour, whose birth, ministry and death are inseparably associated with the history of Jerusalem and vicinity. To the Mohammedans Mecca, in Arabia, is the holy land, it being the birthplace of Mohammed, the saviour of the followers of that faith.

India is the holy land of the Chinese and other oriental Buddhists, it being the native land of Sakya Muni, the supreme Buddha. Elis, one of the several divisions of the ancient Peloponnesus, was the Mecca and the Jerusalem of the ancient Greeks. The temple of Olympus Zeus was situated in Elis, and the sacred festivals were held there each year. With Achaia it is at present a part of Greece. The believers in the Sinto religion make annual pilgrimage to Sitsa Kara, the immense stone pillar where their supreme ruler last stood while talking to men.—New York World.

SHIP SUBSIDY BILL PASSES

Vice President Casts Deciding Vote in Senate.

FIRST INSTANCE IN HISTORY

Never Before Has the Presiding Officer Exercised His Constitutional Prerogative.

Washington, Feb. 3.—For the first time in the history of the government the vice president of the United States exercised his constitutional prerogative of casting a vote to break ties in connection with three successive roll calls in the senate. By the first of these votes he saved from impending defeat the ocean mail or ship subsidy bill and by the third forced an adjournment of the senate on a vote having direct bearing on the resolution looking to the election of senators by direct vote of the people.

The vote on the passage of the subsidy bill, both in committee of the whole and in the senate proper, stood 39 to 39, and on adjournment 37 to 37. On all three occasions the vice president voted in the affirmative.

Another notable occurrence in connection with the vote on the subsidy bill was the absence of the new Democratic senator from West Virginia, Clarence Wayland Watson, who had taken his seat early in the day as the successor to Senator Elkins.

After the result became known the opponents of the bill, including all of the Democrats, realized Mr. Watson's absence had prevented the defeat of the bill. He was the only Democrat present during any of the roll calls whose vote was not cast against the measure.

When, in accordance with the previous agreement, the subsidy bill was laid before the senate at 2 o'clock, Senator Gallinger presented a substitute for the entire measure as originally introduced. The first bill granted a bounty only to American built vessels plying from American ports to the southern half of South America, but the substitute extended it to the Philippines, Japan, China and Australia.

TRAIN STRIKES AUTOMOBILE

Two Persons Killed and Several Seriously Injured.

St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 3.—Edna Cooper was killed and five companions were injured, probably fatally, one of whom, Stanley Clark, has since died, when a Chicago Great Western motor car ran down an automobile in which the six young people were riding.

The automobile belonged to Judge O. M. Spencer, general solicitor for the Burlington railroad, and was in charge of his son Tom, seventeen years old. The others were Lela Cooper, Roger Morton, Stanley Clark and Myrtle Smith, members of leading families.

The accident occured at the foot of a deep cut and the automobile was struck in the center and dragged a distance of 200 yards.

FAIR FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Coast City Wins Over New Orleans in House Fight.

Washington, Feb. 2.—The house of representatives, by a vote of 188 to 159, decided in favor of San Francisco and against New Orleans as the city in which an exposition to celebrate the opening of the Panama canal in 1915 shall be held. This vote was taken on a roll call to determine whether the San Francisco resolution or the New Orleans bill should have consideration in the house. On a final vote the San Francisco resolution was passed by a vote of 259 to 43.

The advocates of San Francisco are claiming that their fight is won and that the senate will ratify the action of the house.

PRESIDENT DAVILA TO QUIT

Bonilla Will Shortly Assume the Presidency of Honduras.

New Orleans, Feb. 5.—President Davila of Honduras will abdicate his office immediately and flee to Mexico, according to a cablegram received here from Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras.

According to this message Davila has asked President Taft to secure for him a safe departure from Honduras.

Bonilla, it is expected, will enter Tegucigalpa within a few days and assume the presidency, to which he was elected in 1906 for a term of six years.

BRITISH RULERS.

King George and Queen Mary Open Parliament in State.

KING AND QUEEN ATTEND

Imposing Ceremony Marks Opening of British Parliament.

London, Feb. 7.—The formal opening of the new parliament was marked by gorgeous ceremony and was attended by King George and Queen Mary and their suites, most of the dignitaries of the empire, many members of the diplomatic corps and all others who could crowd within the doors of Westminster. The speech from the throne was brief and formal and made small reference to the great issues that underlie the assembling of the members for the present session.

Both Lord Lansdowne, in the house of lords, and A. J. Balfour, in the house of commons, the respective leaders of the opposition, took occasion to denounce the reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada, but the evening session of parliament was mainly devoted to getting the legislative ship under way.

BALLINGER CASE BACK TO HOUSE

Agriculture Committee Returns Three Reports.

Washington, Feb. 3.—By a unanimous vote of the committee on agriculture the house was requested to discharge that committee from further consideration of the report of the investigating committee on the Ballinger-Pinchot case.

The committee held that it has not jurisdiction over a report made by another committee or commission created by act of congress.

The three reports on the Ballinger-Pinchot case, one exonerating Mr. Ballinger of any wrongdoing, another, recommending his dismissal from the cabinet and the third severely arraigning his administration of the interior department, thus go back to the house and take their place on the calendar. Opponents of Mr. Ballinger are thus placed in a position to air the case in the house.

It is the purpose of Representative Madison, the Kansas progressive, and the Democratic members of the committee to insist that action shall be taken on the case by the house. Whether they will be able to press it to a vote remains to be developed.

SHOT DEAD ON THE STREET

Persian Minister of Finance Is Assassinated.

Teheran, Persia, Feb. 5.—Sani-Ed-Doweleh, Persian minister of finance, was shot dead in the street here. His assassins, two Armenians, escaped.

The minister was returning home from a meeting of parliament when he was attacked. Death was almost instantaneous. The murderers also killed two policemen.

As he fell the murderers turned and fled. They were quickly pursued by persons who had witnessed the killing.

There was great excitement throughout the city as the news spread.

PLAGUE RAGES UNCHECKED

Thousands of Chinese Victims of the Epidemic.

Peking, Feb. 2.—Reports received here from the health expert sent to Harbin to investigate the pulmonary plague now raging there say the situation is serious.

Thousands of natives are dying and efforts to check the disease have failed.

It is not believed there can be any adequate move made in stamping out the malady until the arrival of warm weather.

Thirty Dead in Spanish Wreck.

Barcelona, Spain, Feb. 3.—The derailing of the passenger train at Valencia was caused by a washout of the roadbed. Thirty persons were killed.

Not Always.

"Whenever I hear the suffrage combated," said an English lord, "on the score of woman's protected, sheltered, petted life I think of a poor woman I once questioned in England.

"This poor creature had been beaten by her husband in a drunken fury. The man had been drunk, it appears, for ten days running.

"'My good friend,' I said to her, 'does your husband always drink like that?'

"'No, my lord,' she answered. 'Sometimes I gets hout o' work.'"

TEN MEN KILLED IN EXPLOSION

Gelatine Powder House Blows Up at Ishpeming, Mich.

BODIES BLOWN TO ATOMS

Every Occupant of the Structure Meets Instant Death When Disaster Occurs.

Marquette, Mich., Feb. 7.—In one of the most disastrous explosions ever recorded in Upper Michigan ten men met instant death at the plant of the Pluto Powder company, in the outskirts of Ishpeming. Another man was injured. The bodies of the dead were blown to pieces.

The one injured employe is Fred Harris, a teamster, who was thrown to the ground by the force of the shock and was slightly hurt.

The explosion took place in the gelatine powder house. Every man in this building was blown to pieces.

What caused the explosion will never be known. Gelatine powder is largely composed of nitroglycerin and it is supposed that the mixture was being stirred in the big crucible within the house when it exploded.

Havoc Might Have Been Greater.

About 1,000 pounds exploded. Only twenty minutes before the disaster 5,000 pounds of the explosive had been removed, otherwise the havoc would have been much greater. As it was the plant was little damaged and the shock felt in Ishpeming was hardly perceptible. Windows at Winthrop, a mile away, however, were broken.

Immediately on the reverberations of the explosion the men employed in the other buildings poured out into the open air to learn what part of the plant had been blown up.

They hastened to the scene of the explosion and where the gelatine building had stood and found a stretch of bare ground and the timbers splintered into slivers and scattered over a wide area. Only a few fragments of the bodies have yet been recovered.

The property loss is comparatively trifling, compared with the loss of life, amounting to probably less than $5,000.

DEATH LIST ABOUT THIRTY

Terrific Explosion of Dynamite at Jersey City.

New York, Feb. 2.—A cargo of dynamite in transit from a freight car to the hold of a lighter moored at pier No. 7, Communipaw, N. J., let go 150 yards south of the Jersey City terminal of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and in the widespread ruin that followed seven men are known to have been killed, seven more are missing, hundreds were wounded and varying reports leave from fifteen to twenty more unaccounted for.

Thirty seems to be a conservative estimate of the dead, and property damage will hardly fall below $750,000. The cause of the explosion probably never will be known.

The Jersey Central terminal was wrecked, three ferryboats in the slips were torn and splintered, lower Manhattan across the river was shaken from the street level to the top of the Singer tower, severe damage was done in Brooklyn and Staten Island and to the immigrant detention station on Ellis island; the shock was felt at Amityville, L. I., thirty-five miles distant, and in New Jersey, at Long Branch, forty-five miles away. The damage is so widely scattered that it is impossible as yet to more than roughly estimate it, but in Manhattan alone it is placed at $100,000 and on Ellis island at from $10,000 to $25,000. In all $750,000 appears to be a fair estimate.

TEN NEGROES SMOTHERED

Air Pump Breaks Down While Workmen Are in Caisson.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 2.—Trapped like rats ten workmen, all negroes, were suffocated here in a caisson in the Passaic river. The victims constituted a night shift engaged in work, preparatory to the erection of the Center street bridge, between here and Harrison. The accident occurred on a floating pontoon anchored off the Newark bank of the river and close to the bridge. While the entire night gang was in the bottom of the caisson the steam engine broke down. As a result the air supply to the men was cut off and they suffocated. The bodies were recovered.

Fishing Village Adrift.

Helsingfors, Finland, Feb. 6.—An entire fishing village of 253 men which had been established on the ice outside of Bjorko sound was carried out to sea in a gale. The disaster was not discovered until the village was already out of sight. Boats have been sent to the rescue, but have not yet returned.

The Spectacled Bear.

The spectacled bear of Ecuador is so called because of a patch of white around each eye, which makes the animal look as though he was peering through a pair of great spectacles.

In size and general color the spectacled bear looks not unlike the American black bear. But its hair is very shaggy. At each side of the head is a white bar, which gives the animal the appearance of wearing a halter. But the most distinctive feature is the white around the eyes.

MINNESOTA EXHIBITION CAR DOING GOOD WORK

PORTION OF MINNESOTA EXHIBIT IN GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY BOOTH AT UNITED STATES LAND AND IRRIGATION CONGRESS RECENTLY HELD IN CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

A great part of the salaried public are still seeking new locations, where comparatively cheap lands can be had, which will insure a good income in return for the labor put in. This is strongly evidenced by the reports received from Traveling Immigration Agent Sam Fullerton, in charge of the Minnesota Exhibition Car, to State Immigration Agent Welch and E. C. Leedy, General Immigration Agent of the Great Northern Ry. in St. Paul.

This car is now completing a most successful tour through the State of Illinois, some forty-five towns having been visited with an attendance of 1,000 to 3,000 people daily.

Everywhere most flattering comments were heard regarding the apparent agricultural possibilities of Minnesota, the greatest interest of the Illinois farmer being centered in the corn and vegetable exhibit of the car. Many who had already decided to locate in other sections of the country, the South and the far West having the preference, were made converts to the land of large grain yields—Minnesota.

Minnesota also came in for her share of interest at the United States Land and Irrigation Congress, which closed in Chicago recently. The Minnesota portion of the Great Northern's booth was most attractively gotten up, and from inquiries made and the demand for literature, some twenty thousand Minnesota Bulletins as well as local Minnesota, Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club booklets being distributed, would indicate a great influx of homeseekers and investors into Minnesota next spring.

FRED A. BUSSE.

Chicago Mayor Is Not a Candidate for Re-Election.

BUSSE OUT OF CONTEST

Will Not Seek Another Term as Mayor of Chicago.

Chicago, Feb. 7.—Mayor Busse has put at rest all rumors that he would be a candidate for re-election.

"I long ago made up my mind not to seek another term as mayor," the city executive said.

It is expected the mayor's announcement will be followed by a launching of the boom of John R. Thompson, former county treasurer, for the Republican nomination.

MEXICAN REGULARS MARCH INTO JUAREZ

Do[illegible]

El Paso, [illegible]—Colonel Rabago and [illegible] of 300 federals entered the city of Juarez unmolested by the insurrecto forces. They were received with joyful acclaim by the people of the city.

The star of the insurrectos' leader, Pasqual Orozco, who was to occupy the city of Juarez, appears to be on the wane. His policy of delay has enabled reinforcements to reach Juarez and the probability of taking that city is now considered much more remote.

Other reinforcements, in the shape of General Navarro's column, are en route from Chihuahua and it is expected here the federals will be able to hold their city and that knowing this the insurrectos will retire. There is a rumor that the insurrectos are near Juarez but this cannot be verified.

STATE CAPITOL IN RUINS

Lightning Hits Missouri Structure and Causes Total Loss.

Jefferson City, Mo., Feb. 7.—The Missouri capitol building was entirely destroyed by fire. The total loss, including the structure and many records and state papers in the offices of the governor, secretary of state and treasurer, is estimated at $1,000,000, with no insurance.

The fire was caused by lightning.

Holy Lands of All Religions.

Christians call Palestine the Holy Land because it was the birthplace of the Christian religion on earth as well as that of the Saviour, whose birth, ministry and death are inseparably associated with the history of Jerusalem and vicinity. To the Mohammedans Mecca, in Arabia, is the holy land, it being the birthplace of Mohammed, the saviour of the followers of that faith.

India is the holy land of the Chinese and other oriental Buddhists, it being the native land of Sakya Muni, the supreme Buddha. Elis, one of the several divisions of the ancient Peloponnesus, was the Mecca and the Jerusalem of the ancient Greeks. The temple of Olympian Zeus was situated at Elis, and the sacred festivals were held there each year. With Achaia it is at present a part of Greece. The believers in the Shinto religion make annual pilgrimage to [illegible], the immense stone pillar where their supreme ruler last stood while talking to men.—New York World.

SHIP SUBSIDY BILL PASSES

Vice President Casts Deciding Vote in Senate.

FIRST INSTANCE IN HISTORY

Washington, Feb. 3.—For the first time in the history of the government the vice president of the United States exercised his constitutional prerogative of casting a vote to break ties in connection with three successive roll calls in the senate. By the first of these votes he saved from impending defeat the ocean mail or ship subsidy bill and by the third forced an adjournment of the senate on a vote having direct bearing on the resolution looking to the election of senators by direct vote of the people.

The vote on the passage of the subsidy bill, both in committee of the whole and in the senate proper, stood 39 to 39, and on adjournment 37 to 37. On all three occasions the vice president voted in the affirmative.

Another notable occurrence in connection with the vote on the subsidy bill was the absence of the new Democratic senator from West Virginia, Clarence Wayland Watson, who had taken his seat early in the day as the successor to Senator Elkins.

After the result became known the opponents of the bill, including all of the Democrats, realized Mr. Watson's absence had prevented the defeat of the bill. He was the only Democrat present during any of the roll calls whose vote was not cast against the measure.

When, in accordance with the previous agreement, the subsidy bill was laid before the senate at 2 o'clock, Senator Gallinger presented a substitute for the entire measure as originally introduced. The first bill granted a bounty only to American built vessels plying from American ports to the southern half of South America, but the substitute extended it to the Philippines, Japan, China and Australia.

TRAIN STRIKES AUTOMOBILE

Two Persons Killed and Several Seriously Injured.

St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 3.—Edna Cooper was killed and five companions were injured, probably fatally, one of whom, Stanley Clark, has since died, when a Chicago Great Western motor car ran down an automobile in which the six young people were riding.

The automobile belonged to Judge O. M. Spencer, general solicitor for the Burlington railroad, and was in charge of his son Tom, seventeen years old. The others were Lela Cooper, Roger Morton, Stanley Clark and Myrtle Smith, members of leading families.

The accident occured at the foot of a deep cut and the automobile was struck in the center and dragged a distance of 200 yards.

FAIR FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Coast City Wins Over New Orleans in House Fight.

Washington, Feb. 2.—The house of representatives, by a vote of 188 to 159, decided in favor of San Francisco and against New Orleans as the city in which an exposition to celebrate the opening of the Panama canal in 1915 shall be held. This vote was taken on a roll call to determine whether the San Francisco resolution or the New Orleans bill should have consideration in the house. On a final vote the San Francisco resolution was passed by a vote of 259 to 43.

The advocates of San Francisco are claiming that their fight is won and that the senate will ratify the action of the house.

PRESIDENT DAVILA TO QUIT

Bonilla Will Shortly Assume the Presidency of Honduras.

New Orleans, Feb. 5.—President Davila of Honduras will abdicate his office immediately and flee to Mexico, according to a cablegram received here from Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras.

According to this message Davila has asked President Taft to secure for him a safe departure from Honduras.

Bonilla, it is expected, will enter Tegucigalpa within a few days and assume the presidency, to which he was elected in 1906 for a term of six years.

Rear Admiral Sperry Dead.

Washington, Feb. 2.—Rear Admiral Charles Stillman Sperry, U. S. N., retired, who commanded the Atlantic fleet on the last leg of its round the world voyage, died suddenly at Garfield hospital here of pneumonia.

King George and Queen Mary Open Parliament in State.

KING AND QUEEN ATTEND

Imposing Ceremony Marks Opening of British Parliament.

London, Feb. 7.—The formal opening of the new parliament was marked by gorgeous ceremony and was attended by King George and Queen Mary and their suites, most of the dignitaries of the empire, many members of the diplomatic corps and all others who could crowd within the doors of Westminster. The speech from the throne was brief and formal and made small reference to the great issues that underlie the assembling of the members for the present session.

Both Lord Lansdowne, in the house of lords, and A. J. Balfour, in the house of commons, the respective leaders of the opposition, took occasion to denounce the reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada, but the evening session of parliament was mainly devoted to getting the legislative ship under way.

BALLINGER CASE BACK TO HOUSE

Agriculture Committee Returns Three Reports.

Washington, Feb. 3.—By a unanimous vote of the committee on agriculture the house was requested to discharge that committee from further consideration of the report of the investigating committee on the Ballinger-Pinchot case.

The committee held that it has not jurisdiction over a report made by another committee or commission created by act of congress.

The three reports on the Ballinger-Pinchot case, one exonerating Mr. Ballinger of any wrongdoing, another recommending his dismissal from the cabinet and the third severely arraigning his administration of the interior department, thus go back to the house and take their place on the calendar. Opponents of Mr. Ballinger are thus placed in a position to air the case in the house.

It is the purpose of Representative Madison, the Kansas progressive, and the Democratic members of the committee to insist that action shall be taken on the case by the house. Whether they will be able to press it to a vote remains to be developed.

SHOT DEAD ON THE STREET

Persian Minister of Finance Is Assassinated.

Teheran, Persia, Feb. 5.—Sani-Ed-Doweleh, Persian minister of finance, was shot dead in the street here. His assassins, two Armenians, escaped.

The minister was returning home from a meeting of parliament when he was attacked. Death was almost instantaneous. The murderers also killed two policemen.

As he fell the murderers turned and fled. They were quickly pursued by persons who had witnessed the killing.

There was great excitement throughout the city as the news spread.

PLAGUE RAGES UNCHECKED

Thousands of Chinese Victims of the Epidemic.

Peking, Feb. 2.—Reports received here from the health expert sent to Harbin to investigate the pulmonary plague now raging there say the situation is serious.

Thousands of natives are dying and efforts to check the disease have failed.

It is not believed there can be any adequate move made in stamping out the malady until the arrival of warm weather.

Thirty Dead in Spanish Wreck.

Barcelona, Spain, Feb. 3.—The derailing of the passenger train at Valencia was caused by a washout of the roadbed. Thirty persons were killed.

Not Always.

"Whenever I hear the suffrage combated," said an English lord, "on the score of woman's protected, sheltered, petted life I think of a poor woman I once questioned in England.

"This poor creature had been beaten by her husband in a drunken fury. The man had been drunk, it appears, for ten days running.

"'My good friend,' I said to her, 'does your husband always drink like that?'

"'No, my lord,' she answered. 'Sometimes I gets hout o' work.'"

TEN MEN KILLED IN EXPLOSION

Gelatine Powder House Blows Up at Ishpeming, Mich.

BODIES BLOWN TO ATOMS

Every Occupant of the Structure Meets Instant Death When Disaster Occurs.

Marquette, Mich., Feb. 7.—In one of the most disastrous explosions ever recorded in Upper Michigan ten men met instant death at the plant of the Pluto Powder company, in the outskirts of Ishpeming. Another man was injured. The bodies of the dead were blown to pieces.

The one injured employe is Fred Harris, a teamster, who was thrown to the ground by the force of the shock and was slightly hurt.

The explosion took place in the gelatine powder house. Every man in this building was blown to pieces.

What caused the explosion will never be known. Gelatine powder is largely composed of nitroglycerin and it is supposed that the mixture was being stirred in the big crucible within the house when it exploded.

Havoc Might Have Been Greater.

About 1,000 pounds exploded. Only twenty minutes before the disaster 5,000 pounds of the explosive had been removed, otherwise the havoc would have been much greater. As it was the plant was little damaged and the shock felt in Ishpeming was hardly perceptible. Windows at Winthrop, a mile away, however, were broken.

Immediately on the reverberations of the explosion the men employed in the other buildings poured out into the open air to learn what part of the plant had been blown up.

They hastened to the scene of the explosion and where the gelatine building had stood and found a stretch of bare ground and the timbers splintered into slivers and scattered over a wide area. Only a few fragments of the bodies have yet been recovered.

The property loss is comparatively trifling, compared with the loss of life, amounting to probably less than $5,000.

DEATH LIST ABOUT THIRTY

Terrific Explosion of Dynamite at Jersey City.

New York, Feb. 2.—A cargo of dynamite in transit from a freight car to the hold of a lighter moored at pier No. 7, Communipaw, N. J., let go 150 yards south of the Jersey City terminal of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and in the widespread ruin that followed seven men are known to have been killed, seven more are missing, hundreds were wounded and varying reports leave from fifteen to twenty more unaccounted for.

Thirty seems to be a conservative estimate of the dead, and property damage will hardly fall below $750,000. The cause of the explosion probably never will be known.

The Jersey Central terminal was wrecked, three ferryboats in the slips were sunk and splintered, lower Manhattan across the river was shaken from the street level to the top of the Singer tower; severe damage was done in Brooklyn and Staten Island and to the immigrant detention station on Ellis island; the shock was felt at Amityville, L. I., thirty-five miles distant, and in New Jersey, at Long Branch, forty-five miles away. The damage is so widely scattered that it is impossible as yet to more than roughly estimate it, but in Manhattan alone it is placed at $100,000 and on Ellis island at from $10,000 to $25,000. In all $750,000 appears to be a fair estimate.

TEN NEGROES SMOTHERED

Air Pump Breaks Down While Workmen Are in Caisson.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 2.—Trapped like rats ten workmen, all negroes, were suffocated here in a caisson in the Passaic river. The victims constituted a night shift engaged in work, preparatory to the erection of the Center street bridge, between here and Harrison. The accident occurred on a floating pontoon anchored off the Newark bank of the river and close to the bridge. While the entire night gang was in the bottom of the caisson the steam engine broke down. As a result the air supply to the men was cut off and they suffocated. The bodies were recovered.

Fishing Village Adrift.

Helsingfors, Finland, Feb. 6.—An entire fishing village of 253 men which had been established on the ice outside of Bjorko sound was carried out to sea in a gale. The disaster was not discovered until the village was already out of sight. Boats have been sent to the rescue, but have not yet returned.

The Spectacled Bear.

The spectacled bear of Ecuador is so called because of a patch of white around each eye, which makes the animal look as though he was peering through a pair of great spectacles.

In size and general color the spectacled bear looks not unlike the American black bear. But its hair is very shaggy. At each side of the head is a white bar, which gives the animal the appearance of wearing a halter. But the most distinctive feature is the white around the eyes.

CONFESSES BRUTAL CRIME

Finn Admits Murdering His Companion With an Axe.

[illegible] [illegible] ... derer of James Edward, who was killed here on Jan. 21, before Municipal Judge Riordan confessed to the murder of Edward.

He said he walked along the road with him with a short axe concealed on his person and when the opportunity offered stepped back and hit Edward on the head, afterwards hitting him a number of times with the axe to make sure he was dead. He then took a time check out of his pocket, came to town, cashed it here and left for Duluth.

ANITA.

We are having some real cold weather now days.

Snow in this part of the country is quite deep, but of course, the snow banks are the deepest.

Water around here is quite scorce this winter. Some farmers are hauling water while others are digging new wells. But so for we have not learned of any having had luck with the new wells.

Miss Emily Jacobson will soon leave for Grand Forks where she will work.

A crowd of young people spent Sunday evening at Charlie Swartz's.

Miss Emma Heiser spent Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Saugen.

Mabel and Edwin Sjorsvold took the freight to Thief River Falls last Friday.

Charlie and Rudolph Sagmoen, Edwin Sjorsvold and Thilda Hagen spent Thursday evening with the Heiser young people. Call again, don't get discouraged because the storm Wednesday spoiled our intentions.

Miss Jennie Sagmoen is in Crookston at present.

All we need now is some body to break roads in this part of the country. Loose snow is almost 18 inches deep.

Charlie and Rudolph Sagmoen were hauling hay last Saturday. That's the way boys, don't let snow and cold weather scare you.

GERMANTOWN.

Snow, snow, everywhere, for a change a little blizzard. Roads are getting difficult to travel as the snow is getting so deep.

The mumps are still raging among our young people. Last week Mr. Bewe, our teacher, got it and school had to be closed.

Henry Dau returned yesterday from Nebraska where he had spent the summer.

Last night the old Germans went over to congratulate Mrs. Thos. Clemen in the celebration of her 38th birthday, and as usual had a good time.

Manager Johnson went to Thief River Falls Saturday on a business and pleasure trip. Now Jones took him down and also took care to land him safe home again.

Mr. Feyan came up yesterday to arrange matters for overhouling the ditching machines.

How is your wood-pile is a common question now days; it is getting mighty slim, and once in a while you don't see a fellow for a couple of days as it takes a long time to get a load of wood.

Frank Kainz was up last week at Grygla chopping cord-wood.

BRAY

The snow-storm we had last Wednesday has got them all beat so far.

Mrs. A. P. Hogstrom entertained the Ladies Aid last Thursday and a large crowd attended in spite of the bad roads.

John Olson called on Charley Englund Wednesday afternoon.

Gust Akerlund and Elvina Blom visited at Christ Person's Tuesday evening.

If the ground hog showed up at all last Thursday, he certainly could not help seeing his shadow, and according to the old tradition, we are to have six weeks of cold weather yet. Well, let her rip while they are at it.

Peter Lindblom was at Wylie last Tuesday.

Crown Bros. entertained quite a few of their friends Thursday evening at their home, the evening being spent playing games and a good time was had by all present.

Quite a few young people from attended the Young Peoples Society Sunday evening.

SYNOD CHURCH

EXTRA SESSION SEEMS CERTAIN

President and His Advisers Considering Question.

CANADIAN TREATY THE ISSUE

Should the Senate Fail to Ratify the Agreement by March 4 It Is Pointed Out That a Clause Pledges the Two Governments to Use Their Utmost Efforts to Secure the Desired Legislation.

Washington, Feb. 7.—A new phase of the Canadian reciprocity agreement has bobbed up and it may point the way to a special session of congress. President Taft and his advisers are now considering the extent to which the administration stands obligated under this clause of the agreement:

"It is agreed that the desired tariff changes shall not take the formal shape of a treaty, but that the governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by concurrent legislation at Washington and Ottawa."

The question that now presents itself turns on the words "utmost efforts." The president and his advisers, it is understood, are now asking themselves if the calling of a special session would not be included in this obligation in the event of congress failing to act upon the reciprocity bill before March 4 next.

The president and his advisers have prided themselves upon the cordial spirit in which the Canadian negotiations have been carried out and if delay by congress were to jeopardize the agreement it is a question whether the president would not feel bound under his pledge to the Canadian negotiations to call an extra session.

Administration advisers who are taking this view of the situation declare the power of calling congress in special session would clearly come within the scope of the "utmost efforts" pledged if, in the president's opinion, a delay might decrease the chance for the enactment of the reciprocity legislation. It is pointed out that the failure of President Taft to act along this line might lead to charges on the Canadian government of bad faith.

Members of congress who heard of the question that has arisen in administration circles were greatly interested and were of the opinion that the emphasizing of this obligation would help to arouse the senate to a necessity for a vote on the proposition before March 4.

Advocates of the Canadian reciprocity agreement find a precedent for the calling of an extra session on this subject in the action of President McKinley in calling congress together to consider the question of Cuban reciprocity.

DEMOCRATS ENDORSE PACT

Minority in House Pledges Party to Canadian Agreement.

Washington, Feb. 7.—Favorable action of the house on the Canadian reciprocity agreement was assured when the caucus of Democratic representatives formally pledged the party to vote for the agreement.

The resolution endorsing the Canadian agreement was carried, 90 to 22. On motion of Mr. Clark of Missouri the action of the caucus was made unanimous.

More than a hundred attended the caucus. Champ Clark of Missouri, the minority leader, and Mr. Underwood of Alabama, who will be chairman of the ways and means committee of the next congress and who will begin work on schedule by schedule revision of the tariff as soon as this congress adjourns, led the movement to endorse the reciprocity agreement, both of them declaring for it unequivocally.

Messrs. Hammond of Minnesota, Brantley of Georgia, Webb of North Carolina, Legare of South Carolina and others spoke in opposition.

ENDS LIFE IN THE RIVER

Prominent Eau Claire Business Man Jumps Off Railroad Bridge.

Eau Claire, Wis., Feb. 7.—George H. Howe, president of the Howe Shoe company, one of the best known and most respected business men in Eau Claire, ended his life by jumping from the Milwaukee railroad bridge into the Chippewa river. The cause of the act is not known, but it is thought his mind suddenly gave way under a weight of depression and despondency due to worry and brooding and that in a fit of temporary insanity he took his own life. It was known that he had been depressed of late. He is survived by a wife.

Young Man Kills Himself.

Sauk Center, Minn., Feb. 7.—Edwin Ceynar, twenty-six years old, son of John Ceynar, a farmer living five miles from town, committed suicide by taking strychnine. He wanted to marry a young woman who lives near here, but was opposed by her friends. He became despondent and this is supposed to have caused him to take his life.

Montana Jurist Bitterly Scores Man He Sends to Penitentiary.

Bozeman, Mont., Feb. 7.—In sentencing Ross Maxwell, former Dakota ranchman, to two years in the penitentiary for criminal assault upon Miss Ethel Bromigan, an Iowa girl, who came to visit relatives near here, District Judge Lew Callaway delivered one of the most stinging rebukes ever heard in a Montana courtroom.

"If it were within my power I would blot out all memory of you from the minds of your mother, your wife and your sisters." The court declared that if the jury had not fixed sentence he would have liked to sent him up for a time that, when he returned, he would be like Rip Van Winkle.

ABANDON PLANS TO ASSAULT JUAREZ

Belief Prevails That Mexican Rebels Have Retired.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 7.—The belief prevails in official circles that General Pasqual Orozco has abandoned, for the present at least, his plans to attack Juarez.

This has relieved the tension that has existed across the international border for four days, but Mexican military and civil officials have not abated their vigilance.

No definite knowledge is obtainable here as to the location of Orozco's forces. Mexican officials are inclined to credit the report that the insurrecto chieftain has retired to Samalayuca, his supply camp, to effect his long delayed juncture with General Blanco's 700 troops.

Contradictory advices from the insurrecto junta here state that Orozco is camped ten miles west of Juarez within easy striking distance. The same advices report that he was joined by General Jose de la Luz Sanchez and a considerable force of rebels.

As to his immediate plans of campaign advices are equally conflicting.

The Change That Was Wrought.

The little man was explaining to his audience the benefits of physical culture. "Three years ago," he said, "I was a miserable wreck. Now, what do you suppose brought about this great change in me?" "What change?" said a voice from the audience. There was a succession of loud smiles, and some persons thought to see him collapse. But the little man was not to be put out. "Will the gentleman who asked 'What change?' kindly step up here?" he asked suavely. "I shall then be better able to explain. "That's right!" Then, grabbing the witty gentleman by the neck: "When I first took up physical culture I could not even lift a little man. Now (suiting action to word) I can throw one about like a bundle of rags." And finally he flung the interrupter half a dozen yards along the floor. "I trust, gentlemen, that you will see the force of my argument and that I have not hurt this gentleman's feelings by my explanation." There were no more interruptions.

Two Collars on a Dog.

Having bought a dog that he admired, a man undertook to buy a dog collar. The dog had a neck nearly as big as his head, and the dealer advised the man to buy two collars.

"What for?" said the man. "He's only got one neck, so I guess he can get along with only one collar, can't he?"

"Maybe so," said the man, so the man went away leading the dog by his new collar and chain. In less than a week he brought the dog back.

"I'm afraid I can't keep him," he said. "He is too obstreperous. I can't keep him tied up. His neck is the biggest part of him, and he is as strong as an ox, therefore it is a cinch for him to slip his collar off."

"That was why I wanted you to take two collars," said the dealer. "Put both on and fasten the chain to the back collar, and he can tug away all night without getting loose. He may commit suicide, but he won't get loose."—New York Sun.

Disappointed In Her.

"And so your father refuses to consent to our union."

"He does, Rodolphus."

The sad youth swallowed a sob.

"Is there nothing left for us, then, but an elopement?" said he.

"Nothing."

The girl was fond, but firm.

"Do you think, Clementine, that you could abandon this luxurious home, forget all the enjoyments of great wealth, banish yourself forever from your devoted parents' hearts and go west with a poor young man to enter a home of lifelong poverty and self denial?"

"I could, Rodolphus."

The sad youth rose wearily and reached for his hat.

"Then," said he, "you are far from being the practical girl I have all along taken you to be."

And with one last look around on the sumptuousness that some day he had hoped to share he sobbed and said farewell.—Browning's Magazine.

"Hey, mister, come back here. You've got to buy this book 'cause you've spoiled it by writing your name in it."

"Yes, but did you see the name?" the author asked.

"That don't make no difference," the lad insisted; "nobody'll want to buy it now."

And, hearing his train called, Mr. McCutcheon was forced to pay real money for one of his own books.—Success Magazine.

WINNIE AND FRANK

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Mr. Scarborough and I are very good friends—very good friends indeed. The question is whether we shall be more than friends. We like each other pretty well, but for my part there is one other that I'm not sure I love better than I love him. One day Mr. Scarborough and I went out in a boat, and it was evident before we had been together long that our minds were on the great question, "Shall we be more than friends?" We were very practical about it, exchanging views with a frankness not usual in such cases.

"For my part," he said, "I feel that I love you better than any other person in the world excepting one. That person, I confess, I do not approve of—one whose intellect is not by any means of the highest and whose good intentions are often not carried out."

"How singular!" I exclaimed. "You have spoken my case as well as your own. There is one whom I prefer to you. But, gracious, how faulty! I confess I am often put to the blush on account of Frank's shortcomings."

"Selfish?"

"Selfish at times beyond measure."

"That's just the way with my Winnie."

"How is it, then, that we prefer these unworthy persons to each other?" I asked.

There was a brief silence, at the end of which he asked:

"How long have you known this person?"

"Many years."

"I have noticed that the longer I have known Frank the greater selfishness I find."

"Same here. We have been companions since we were wee little things. My theory is that it is propinquity. I have known my Winnie and you have known your Frank so long that association has begotten love."

"But love is blind. If this is love we feel for those persons how is it that we see their faults so plainly?"

"Are what we see in them really faults?"

"What do you mean by that?"

"I will explain. I snatched a kiss from you. You are angry and blame me. In other words, you consider that I have committed a fault, whereas I have simply been following a natural instinct. Now, your Frank may place you in an embarrassing position without any intention to do so, yet you consider him at fault."

"That may apply to your Winnie, but not to my Frank. I confess you are much more worthy of my love than Frank. My love for Frank I admit is inexcusable, and yet I can't help it."

"And I will admit that my Winnie's thoughts and acts are gross in comparison with yours."

"How can you love such a person?"

"I would rather call it preference than love."

"There again we agree; it is preference in my case too."

While we were talking a cloud had been gathering behind us. Our backs being turned toward it, we did not see it. We were sitting in the stern of the boat, while I held the main sheet in my hand. Suddenly a squall struck us and capsized the boat, which sank. Three of us were in the water together, Mr. Scarborough, I and one life preserver. Mr. Scarborough could not swim at all, I a very little. A few strokes took me to the corks. Mr. Scarborough could not reach them, though they were not a man's length from him. He went down, and when he came up, by a desperate effort, I reached him with the life preserver.

"Take hold of it," I cried.

"No; it will bear but one of us."

"I can swim."

"Not enough to save yourself."

He went down a second time. When he came up I fought to get the preserver around him. He was unconscious, and I partly succeeded. Then a boat's nose poked itself against us. The rain and the wind beating up the waves had concealed it from us. A hand grasped each one of us and dragged us into the boat.

I hung over him anxiously until we got him to shore, where we applied the usual restoratives in such cases. After awhile he showed signs of life and finally came to himself.

The same evening, after having been revived, we resumed the talk that had been interrupted by the squall. But we now chatted under very different conditions. We had been dumped in the water with—so far as we knew at the time—a chance for but one to be saved. Each had preferred that the other have that chance. We sat locked in each other's arms.

"It has been proved conclusively today," he said, "that these other lovers of ours must take a back seat. I would not have done for Winnie what I did for you."

"Nor I for Frank."

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good! The squall blew us into the water, but it blew away at the same time our indecision between each other and these two other lovers."

"Thank heaven for that. I was awfully tired of it. But tell me who is this Winifred that has been my rival?"

"Who is Frank?"

"Tell me and I'll tell you."

"My name, as you know, is Edward W. Scarborough. Winnie is not Winifred, as you suppose, but Winslaw. I thought I loved myself better than you."

"And I am Evelyn Frances Boynton. I thought I loved myself better than you."

The Sad Part.

"Doesn't it make you sad," exclaimed the member of the Audubon society, "to see women wearing on their hats the feathers of the poor little birds?"

"It isn't the feathers that make me sad," replied the practical married man. "It's their bills."—Philadelphia Record.

The Man Who Was Bribed

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Abe Slinger and his wife being too lazy to work were determined to live on the community of Hopewell. The constable warned Abe that he couldn't do it. Abe said nothing, but Abe's clothing was found by the mill pond. Mrs. Slinger took on awful, and a soft hearted citizen started a purse for her and $60 were raised, and there were others who contributed food and clothing. The widow moved from the stable into a shanty.

Ten days after the powwow Abe Slinger appeared. He had been carried downstream by the current and thrown on an island, where he had remained unconscious for days and without food for other days. It was a pretty shy story, but the people had to believe it and congratulate the teller on his wonderful escape.

It was about sixty days later when the next event came off. A citizen who owned a farm outside the village hired Abe to dig a well. He had refused jobs not so hard or dangerous, but he took this one right away. He preferred well digging to even the postoffice steps. When he had been digging for two days and after he had thrown out hints about quicksand and cave-ins the alarm was given that the curbing of the well had caved in and that Abe was probably a dead man eighteen feet down.

There is only one thing to do in such a case—dig the poor fellow out. If living, succor him; if dead, contribute a fund to bury him and carry the widow along. There were some who wouldn't have come down but for the fact that Abe had gone to work and made no kick.

His desire to help himself opened all hearts. If that hadn't then there were the widow's tears and lamentations to fall back on. The sum of $100 was raised for her, and it was more clothes and more provisions.

The bottom of the well was struck at last, but there was no Abe. There sure had been a cave-in, but it hadn't caught him. There was a mystery on hand to be solved. If not at the bottom of the well, then where was he? The question was on every lip for four days, and then Abe came back to answer it himself. It was easily explained.

He had had warning of the coming cave-in and had scrambled out. Such was his terror that he had been temporarily out of his head. He remembered running away as fast as he could, but when his senses came back to him he was thirty miles away and hiding in a farmer's barn. As soon as he had recovered his nerve he came jogging along home and was ready to tackle the job again.

Hopewell shook its head in a doubting way, but did not talk much. Abe Slinger was coming to the front and becoming a hero. He had also moved from a shanty into a cottage and was living on the top shelf. As a matter of fact, he did finish the well and thereby made himself solid with all who might have otherwise criticised. Nevertheless the town constable felt that he had a duty to perform. He went to Abe and said:

"You went to your death in the river and returned. You went to your death in the well and returned. Don't try the little game again. If you do I don't believe the town will raise another dollar for your widow."

The summer had departed and late autumn had come. Abe hadn't tired himself out looking for any more jobs, but was now offered the position of night watchman of the village. It was a cold job and poor pay, and no one wanted it until he stepped forward. Not a robbery had ever been committed in the village, but there were taxpayers who thought it best to guard against such things happening. When the constable heard of the appointment he met Abe to say:

"No foolishness, now."

"If robbers come I shall kill some of them," was the reply.

"But if you have them kill you don't make a mess of it."

"I shall do my best to die, and when you see me lying dead you will be sorry for what you have said."

Two weeks passed, and then one night at midnight there were yells and shots and the noise of running, and the people turned out to find Abe Slinger missing. He was searched for, but not found. Next day there was a grand hunt, but no clew. Robbers had killed him and borne his body away—another public subscription for the widow—more provisions, fuel and clothing. She actually opened an account at the village bank and put on mourning. Another two weeks and the cat came back. Abe walked in to say that he had discovered three yeggmen about to break into the postoffice and when he had fired on them they had seized and chloroformed him and borne him away in a buggy. For twelve days he had known nothing, but now he had come back to take his job again.

Hopewell didn't say much. It didn't threaten. It didn't bring out tar and feathers. It simply asked the question of Abe Slinger:

"How much cash will you take to skate out of this town and stay skated?"

"One hundred dollars," was the prompt reply. And it was raised in an hour, and within an hour Abe and his wife were departing for new fields. They were poor, but honest, but Hopewell preferred the other kind.

The Road to Literary Success

A Story For Those Who Are Ambitious to Write

By JAMES B. HANSON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Perhaps if a census of persons who are scribbling were taken it would be found that half the educated people of the United States are trying to write for the other half. If the careers of authors of fiction are looked into it will be found that those who have achieved any enduring success nearly all gained it under similar circumstances. They began young, usually in the employ of some magazine or newspaper. Many of them became readers of manuscripts submitted for publication. In this atmosphere of mingled literature and publication they pass years occasionally trying to do some work for themselves.

Melville Ostrander at twenty-five, having been graduated at college and taken a number of postgraduate courses, determined to devote himself to literature, confining himself to fiction. Possessing an income sufficient to support him, it was not essential that he at once make money out of his profession. He reasoned that he was in the same position as other professional men who must expect to wait a reasonable time for an income.

There are persons, especially literary persons, who claim that the highest grade of fiction is that in which there are no incidents. The characters are expected to talk their way into the interest of the readers. Ostrander first fell under the influence of this school. He wrote novels in admirable English, in which his characters told their own story—if they had any to tell, which they had not—indirectly in conversations and by giving their own thoughts. His novels were always returned by the publishers as unavailable, except in one instance in which the work appeared with a sale of only a thousand copies—not enough to pay the cost of publication.

Ostrander, hearing that while the retrospective novel was the highest form of literature—so considered by critics—if he wished to succeed pecuniarily he must enter upon a more lively school. Henceforth he made his characters love madly and go through fire and water for one another. After writing a number of these stories without success he became discouraged. Spring coming on about that time, he concluded to go south for a trip.

In Florida he met a middle aged lady—he had by this time arrived at middle age himself—who had come to the south to recuperate from overwork. Miss Easton was in the employ of a publishing house in New York. In other words, she was one of those persons, already mentioned, who read the manuscripts of other people submitted for publication, at the same time trying to turn an honest penny by doing a little scribbling for themselves.

Miss Easton happened to be one of those women whose personality appealed to Mr. Ostrander. A man always sympathizes with a woman who is obliged to work, and especially one who works so hard as to endanger her health. Together they took part in those out of door amusements that may be enjoyed in the south even in the dead of winter. They boated together and drove together, finding something in the palmy tropical winter atmosphere and luxurious plants to warm the emotions even of middle age.

When a practical man discovers that he wants a woman he begins at once to find good and sufficient reasons why he should marry her. Mr. Ostrander in thinking the matter over concluded that Miss Easton would be a helpmeet to him in more ways than one. She could be a reader for him, correcting his manuscripts, making suggestions here and there and giving him hints in the practical or business part of his profession.

So one day when they were sitting among the palms and the flowers and the other reminders of spring he told her that he would be glad to lift the burden from her delicate shoulders to his own stronger ones. He had just enough income to get on with, but had his time to devote to literature and was determined to succeed in it. When he did doubtless they would have money to spend, not in travel for recuperation from hard work, but for pleasure. They would go abroad where he would be able to draw from new scenes and other peoples what would give him still greater fame.

Miss Easton in accepting his offer fell into a practical vein herself—indeed, a more practical vein that that of her lover. She told him that in order to succeed an author must make a market for his wares. He must write what the public wish to read rather than what the critics approved. It was not impossible that he might make a sudden high flight, but it was not probable. Usually time was required.

In this way Mr. Ostrander, a highly educated man, learned from Miss Easton, who had but common school training, that in all things sold for money there are certain fixed business rules that—though brilliant exceptions may occur—are practically inexorable.

Soon after their return to the north they were married. Mrs. Ostrander then told her husband that the publishing house she had been with was getting out a simple little story of hers in book form. It turned out that this simple little story had a very large sale and made the author's reputation.

And the result. The man who had taken up literature as a profession became the publisher of the former drudge and fortune was achieved for both.

A Story Pepys Tells.

Pepys tells in his diary that in the reign of King Charles II. a customer bargaining with a London merchant for claret hired a confederate to "thunder (which he had the art of doing upon a deal board) and to rain and hail—that is, make the noise of—so as to give them a pretense of undervaluing their merchant's wines, by saying this thunder would spoil and turn them, which was so reasonable to the merchant that he did abate two pistols per tun for the wine in belief of that."

FOR MORE CORN

In planning the apportionment of your acres among the several customary crops, for the coming season, will it not be well to set aside at least a few more acres for corn? At the average rate of production for corn and oats, in Minnesota, for the past ten years, corn is found to kield 600 pounds per acre more than oats. Its feeding value per pound is also greater. Why not give the ground, then, to the crop which yields the richest return?

It is true that there is more labor involved in the production of corn than oats; but is not the return for that labor, per hour, far greater? In calculating the compensatory return also is it not well to consider the feed value of corn stover as compared with that of oat straw? To make the most of such feed value, or course, you will need to enlarge your herd of cattle and increase the number of your hogs. You will also need a silo, if you have not one already. But it is through stock feeding that the wealth of the corn-harvest finds its way to your pocket; and the silo promotes the increase of that wealth annually, while its erection will add more than its cost to the value of your land.

And about seed-corn? While adding your acreage of corn, why not at the same time make strenuous effort to increase the product per acre, by a careful selection, testing and grading of the seed? Why not show that your are more than "an average farmer" by producing 40, 50 or 60 bushels to the acre, instead of the less than 30 bushels which the "average farmer" has won from Minnesota soil for ten seasons past? The larger yields named are within the reach of any man who will follow the instructions freely furnished in the bulletins sent out from the Minnesota University Farm.

There is a joy akin to that of creation in the harvesting of a crop bigger than you have ever harvested before—perhaps bigger than any of your neighbors have ever harvested. The extra bushels are Nature's "reward of merit." No blue ribbon won at the county fair can afford satisfaction half as great. Why not resolve this year, to be one of Nature's "Blue Bibboners?"—C. R. Burns, University Farm.

SIDE LIGHTS ON LEGISLATION

Analysis of County Option Vote. Prospects of Direct Legislation.

By Lynn Haines.

The expected happened. County Option was defeated in the House. The final vote on H. F. No. 201-the Rines bill-was 50 to 69.

••••••••

COMPLETING THE COUNT

Not a single one of the twenty-six House democrats voted for county option.

••••••••

Hillman, the socialist, all four prohibitionists, and forty-five republicans made up the affirmative vote.

••••••••

Every member went on record except W. A. Fisher of Minneapolis. He was seriously ill, but has sent word that he would have voted 'aye' had he been present.

••••••••

Counting Mr. Fisher, the absent member, the county option republicans had 46 to 43 for the opposition. They are still wondering why they did not control the republican caucus and organize the House.

••••••••

Frank Hopkins of Renville county delivered the longest and most puzzling speech. On the roll call he voted "no", which convinced most of his auditors that he had argued against the measure.

••••••••

W. I. Nolan followed Hopkins. He remarked that if the Renville member made that speech during the campaign, it was not strange that he was elected, as both sides must surely have felt that he was with them.

••••••••

Then Mr. Nolan made an argument for county option that was equalled only by the fine affirmative effort of J. A. Burnquist. N. J. Holmberg of Renville also delivered an excellant speech on the pro side of the subject.

••••••••

The debate lasted four hours. Every unpredjudiced listner awarded the honors to the opitionists. Hopkins argued both sides and neutralized himself. McKenzie and Lennon, the other verbal heavy-weights for the antis, talked about everything except the question at issue.

••••••••

I half expected to see some sign of a break in the Duluth delegation, but nothing in the vote on county option indicated that the steel trust and the brewery combine are not to continue their friendly legislative relation.

••••••••

The brewers were never in danger but their legislative lieutenants refused to take chances. There was a "Just before the battle mother" banquet the night before at which a ringing round of "testimonials" gave new courage and continuity to their crowd.

••••••••

Fundamentally considered, county option means a step toward democracy. Direct legislation means a much longer and more important step in that direction. Progressives are asking what is to happen to the initiative and referendum, if the related but less democratic idea of county option could only command 50 votes. It will depend upon the democrats. At present most of them seem inclined to stand for a measure with percentage so high that it would be practically worthless.

••••••••

Speaker Dunn publicily promised that he would apoint a temperance committee which would report back a county option bill. Seemingly fearful that he had not done so, he appeared before the committee and pleaded with them to make good his pledge to the people. The play would have looked more bona fide had he not insisted on having the House make final disposition of the measure on Friday, two days later The author and friends of the bill had to vote down the "fair play" speaker in order to get until the following Tuesday to prepare for the debate.

••••••••

L. C. Spooner did not speak on county option. His silence was noticeable because that was about the first important action on which he has made himself heard. In 1909 John G. Lennon was the most verbose statesman in the House. At this session Mr. Spooner has held the floor more than any other member. He pessesses magnificent mental machinery and his colleagues like to see it in motion. But many of them were not unmindful of the humor in the situation when Spooner once demonstrated in dollars and cents what it cost the state to listen to Lennon in the legislature.

••••••••

I would not care to be in the political boots of Senators L. O. Cooke, W. W. Dunn, F. L. Glotzbach, C. V. Johnson, G. H. Sullivan and S. D. Works. Legislative "explanations" are always dangerous and difficult. This will be especially true in the case of these six statesmen if they are called upon to justify their votes to unseat John Saugstad and give his place in the Senate to A. D. Stephens.

Mr. Stephens is a reactionary of the most pronounced and unalterable type. Mr. Saugstad is a progressive in politics. But that was not the issue in the contest between them which the Senate had to decide. The citizens of Polk County preferred Saugstad and gave him a majority of several votes. He was elected and had every right, moral and legal, to retain his seat.

I have studied this Stephens-Saugstal contest from all possible engles. Every point of view leads to the one enevitable conslusion; Its institutors must have been mistaken in their estimates of the probity of the Senate. There was nothing else upon which to hope for success in the attempt to thwart the plainly expressed will of the people and seat a Senator who had not been elected.

••••••••

BRIEF BITS OF COMMENT

Chester A. Congdon has a bill repealing the anti-cigarette law.

••••••••

The Clint Robinson resolution providing for an investigation into the campaign activities of certain special interests created consternation when it was introduced. John G. Lennon blocked it temporarily and later L. C. Spooner had it sent to the Committee on General Legislation.

••••••••

Representatives J. H. Johnson, Frankson, and Moriarity are the joint authors of a tonnage tax bill. The tax committee has the measure at present. That body is nearly unanimous in its opposition to the idea.

••••••••

Senator O. A. Lende has presented a bill extending the primary to the nomination of United States Senators. It follows the Oregon plan of publicly pledging members of the legislature to vote for the nominee of the people. The Ballinger bogie may lead the friends of Knute Nelson to oppose the measure, which is backed by the progressive republican league.

REMEMBER THE COMMERCIAL CLUB

Meeting at the Club Rooms tonight at Eight O'clock.

The Commercial Club will hold an adjourned meeting tonight to elect a permanent secretary and name his salary.

Dan Shaw will introduce a resolution looking to the adoption of the Commission form of Government for our city.

Be sure to attend.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE.
Crookston, Minnesota.
February 14, 1911.

Mr. J. M. Bishop,
Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Dear Sir:

Referring to yours of the 11th inst., requesting a copy of the bill just passed by Congress relative to the opening of the lands in the Eleven Towns.

We do nt have printed copies of the bill as yet but the following is copied from the Congressional Record of February 7th and apparently gives the full text of it:

(From the Congressional Record of February 7, 1911, H. R. 32222).

Be is enacted, etc., That hereafter all lands ceded under the act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in Minnesota," approved February 20, 1904, and undisposed of, shall be subject to homestead entry at the price of $4 per acre, payable as provided in section 3 of said act, for all lands not heretofore entered: and for all lands embraced in canceled entries the price shall be the same as that at which they were originally entered:

Provided: That where such entries have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contest, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as prescribed in the act of July 26, 1892.

(The amendment)

Provided further, That all lands entered under this act shall, in addition to the payments herein provided for, be subject to drainage charges, if any authorized under the act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908.

Respectfully,
Arthur P. Toupin.

THIEF RIVER HIGH DEDICATED

Governor Eberhart Will Deliver Address at Dedication Exercises February, 27th.

The date of dedication of the Lincoln High School building has been set by the Governor for Monday, February 27th—one week later than was first announced. This change was made to suit the convenience of the chief executive and their state officials who desired to be present at the exercises.

Monday afternoon will be devited to an inspection of the building by citizens and visitors. High School students will be delegated to lead parties of inspection and explain the purpose of the different rooms and apparatus. The schools will be in session all day. The dedicatory program will begin at the Lincoln assembly room at 7:30 sharp, and will be continued at the Auditorium at 8:30. This will permit everybody the opportunity of hearing the dedicatory address of Governor Eberhart, which will be delivered in the latter building. The official program appears in another column and will be followed exactly as announced. A sufficient number of programs will be prepared so that all who attend may be supplied. Invitations have been issued to all school boards and teachers in neighboring towns and to all state educational institutions. It is expected that the citizens will assist by their presence in making this ceremony an epoch marking event in the history of Thief River Falls. Everybody in town and the surrounding country is cordially invited.

Rejection of Commutation Proof Reversed.

Halvor K. Halvorson.

Certified from General Land Office

Under date of November 14, 1910, the Commissioner of the General Land Office rejected the Commutation proof of Halvor K. Halvorson, submitting upon his homestead entry for lots 2 and 7, Sec. 2, T, 151, N. R, 39 W., and the W. 1-2 of SE. 1-4 Sec. 35, T. 152 N., R. 39 W., 5th P. M., Crookston land district, Minnesota.

Halvorson's entry for said land was allowed November 16, 1908, and he submitted commutation proof thereon February 15, 1910, making payment of the remaining amount due on the purchase price of four dollars per acre.

The lands are a part of the ceded portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation, opened to entry under the provisions of the Act of February 20, 1904 (33Stat., 46), which fixed the price of four dollars per acre for such lands as were not purchased at public sale. That act provided, among other things, that entries were to be made subject to the provisions of the homestead laws, including Section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which grants the right of commutatoin by paying the purchase price after fourteen months' residence and cultivation.

The proof shows that Halvorson established residence on the land on the land on May 15, 1909, and that he had resided there continually for a period of nine months next preceeding the submission of his proof on February 15, 1910.

The action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was put mainly upon paragraph one of the circular of October 18, 1907 (36 L. D. 124), which reads as follows:

Commutation proof offered under a homestead entry made on or after November 1, 1907, will be rejected unless it is shown thereby that the entry-man has, in good faith, actually resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in such entry for the full period of at least fourteen months.

Inasmuch as the entry here in question was made after November 1, 1907, it not being shown that the entry man had resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in such entry for the full period of fourteen months, and the regulation seemingly applying to all homesteadentries, no reason was perceived by the Commissioner's office why such proof should be allowed.

In the essentially similar case of Tellef B. Nesland (Unreported), decided by Mr. Secretary Garfield December 17, 1907, referring to said Act of February 20, 1904, it was said:

While the act provides that purchasers of this land at public sale shall make final proof conformable to the homestead laws, it is nevertheless manifest from its provisions that the primary purpose of the act was to create from the sale of this land the largest possible fund for the benefit of the Indians, the act even going so far as to provide that persons who had exhausted their fights under the homestead law might become purchasers under the act, and that all such lands as remained unsold after five years from the date of the first sale shall be offered for sale "without any conditions whatever except the payment of the purchase price" at a rate of not less than four dollars per acre. In view thereof and of the large price paid by the purchasers of these lands at public sale, the Department is of opinion that the reasons existing for the rule applied in ordinary cases of Commutation proof in the matter of residence do not exist with respect to entries made by purchasers at public sale under this act. It is therefore held that as to such purchasers at public sale who have submitted or may submit, Commutation proof on their entries, the requirement of the statute as to residence are sufficiently met where such proof shows that actual residence was established on the land, in good faith, within six months from the date of entry; that such residence was maintained for such period, or periods as, when added to the period intervening between the date of entry and the establishment of residence equals fourteen months; and that the purchaser was actually residing on the land on the date of submitting such proof.

The case cited differed from the one hereunder consideration in that the land there involved was purchased at public sale, whereas that here involved was appropriated by subsequent entry. This difference is not material. A provision of said Act of February 20, 1904, reads as follows:

That after the first sale hereunder shall be closed, the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the price of four dollars per acre by qualified purchasers, subject to the same terms and conditions as herein prescribed as to the lands sold at first sale.

The lands here in question, therefore, are subject to sale and entry on the same terms and conditions as were those involved in the Nesland case, and of necessity, the same rule of administration should apply.

It appearing that Halvorson established his actual residence upon this land within six months from the date of his entry, that such residence was maintained for such period as, when added tothe period intervening between the date of the entry and the establishment of residence, equals a period of more than fourteen months, and that he was actually residing upon the land at the time of submitting such proof, it will, in the absence of objections, be accepted.

Frank Pierce,
First Assistant Secretary.

BAND CONCERT A GREAT SUCCESS

Large Audience Attends. Agreeably Surprised by Excellent Performances of local Band.

A large and appreciative audience was in attendance at the concert given at the Auditorium last Monday evening under the Auspices of the Local Band. The vocal solos of Mrs. O. F. Mellby das well received as evidenced by the repeated encores.

The cornet solo by Ed Moran, the local cornet teacher, made a decided hit with the audience, and richly deserved favorable comments.

The Concert Orchestra was in their glory with the "Prince of Pilsen" while the band, considering the short time it has been practising under a regular instructor, certainly did well in the numerous selections they rendered during the evening. The Junior Band was a pleasant surprise and assures us of the permanency of the regular band as it provides suitable recruits for the regulars as time and circumstances will require. Prof. Houle is to be complimented up on the manner in which the entire program was gotten up and rendered.

It was a great treat to all present and it is to be hoped that the band will arrange to give more concerts of this nature in the future.

MYSTERY AT CROOKSTON

Theodore Nelson Found Dead of Bullet Wound In Friend's Home.

Crookston, Minn., Feb 15.— The body of Theodore Nelson, aged 35 and married, employed by the Singer Sewing Machine campany here for several years, was found about 1 p. m., today at the home of Sivert Simpson, driver of a laundry wagon.

Simpson, Nelson and two friends had been drinking and went to the Simpson home. The two friends left and Simpson and his wife say they went upstairs, leaving Nelson to sleep on the couch, and that before they were undressed they heard a shot and, going down, found Nelson shot through the neck. He was dead when Dr. Randolph arrived.—Minneapolis Journal.

JAILED FOR SELLING LIQUOR TO INDIAN.

Cass Lake, Feb. 12.—J. H. Parkhurst was arrested yesterday afternoon, charged with having furnished liquor to an Indian. He was brought before Judge Ives for a hearing and bound over to the next term of court. Parkhurst, however, decided to appear before Hon. C. W. Stanton, judge of district court, and plead guilty. Judge Stanton sentenced the man to six months' hard labor at Stillwater together with a fine of $50. This is the second conviction secured during the week for furnishing booze to Indians and Mayor Dumas and his officers are determined to put a stop to the practice.

COUNTY ATLAS NOW READY

Special Work Covering Old Red Lake County Including Pennington County Delivered.

Geo. A. Ogle & Co., of Chicago, through their representative, H. H. Beckley, is delivering to its subscribers in Red Lake and Pennington counties, the atlas which has just come from the press. An atlas of these two counties is an important publication, and the subscribers and purchasers are certainly to be congratulated on the high character of the work which they are offered. A critical inspection of the work and careful comparison of the same with the official records show that it is correct in its detail.

It contains city plats of every city in the county with streets, numbers of lots and public enterprises, additions to the original townsites and a world of other information which can be procured only by an expensive investigation of the public records. Every farm in the county is outlined and the owner's name placed thereon in clear type, together with the geographical location of his farm home and the number of acres.

A large 14x16 page is used for the map of each township in the county, thus allowing ample space for the recording of the information with which the work is replete. Sectional lines and public roads are all correctly traced. A complete map of both counties is one feature of the work which commends it to the public in no small measure upon which the division line between the two counties is plainly marked.

The atlas is just the thing required by the busy man who needs to know a hundred and one things about these counties and his town without taking the trouble or incurring the expense of a trip to the court house. It is useful especially to real estate men and to those whose business calls them into the county.

It is a splendid book for the home. It gives the children a knowledge of the country which lies at their doors and to the older members, especially the farmers it is almost indispensible It has a fund of information not otherwise obtainable that is needed in the country home every day. It should have a place in every library and home in the two counties.

KING AND DAY TO PUBLISH BUTTE EVENING NEWS IN MONTANA.

Butte, Mont., Feb. 10.—Frank A. Day once the democratic Warwick of Minnesota and John E. King, late state librarian of Minnesota, are in Butte closing a deal for the plant of the Butte Evening News, which suspended publication last week. They will move the plant to Minnesota and there found the Sentinel, named after Mr. Day's little daily paper at his home town at Fairmont, Minn.

The Sentinel at Minnesota will be printed daily and will stand firmly for the principles of the unterfifled democracy. Messrs. Day and King are hopeful that Montana can be kept in the democratic column for many years to come. They will fight the party's battles and on many public questions are expected to take an advanced position. Just what will be their attitude on the pending senatorial contest, the bitterest known in Montana for some time, is as yet problematical.

The desertion of Minnesota by Day and King is taken to mean that they have given up all hope of electing another democratic candidate for governor in that state.—Minneapolis Journal.

PAINE—CURRAN

Wednesday evening at eight o'clock at the Catholic Parsonage at Brainard occurred the marriage of Miss May Paine to Mr. George Curran of this city. Reverend Father O'Mahaney officiating.

As a teacher for three years in our public schools the bride has made many friends who will be glad to welcome her to their midst as a permanent resident when she returns to make this her new home. The groom has grown to manhood here and the "Press" joins his numerous friends in extending congratulations.

BADLY SCALDED.

Tuesday morning, Morris, the small son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralston, was very severely scalded by a jet of boiling water from their steam radiator. The pressure had become so great that the safety was blown out and the steam driven with such force struck Morris almost directly in the eye so that for a time it was feared his eye-sight would be permanently injured. Tho he has suffered intensely it is now believed he will wholly recover.

PIONEER IS CALLED HENCE.

Charles A. Robbecke Answers Summons and Passes To His Reward.

The death of Charles A. Robbecke, Pioneer resident and hotel proprietor of this city, occurred at St. Joseph's Hospital, St. Paul, last Sunday, Feb. 12th, 1911 at 9 p. m. He was afflicted with cancer and, during the last year and a half in his valiant fight against that dread disease, the sympathy and interest of the entire community have been with him. The funeral services were the most impressive and largely attended of any ever held in this city, showing the respect and esteem with which the deceased was regarded by all. His happy and genial disposition, Indian war-time stories, and home cooking have made his hostelry famous as a Mecca for weary travellers; and to his many friends the void left by his loss can never be filled.

While the funeral services were conducted by the Odd Fellows Lodge, of which he was a charter member, he belonged to several other fraternal orders, namely, the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Elks and the Woodmen, representative bodies of which attended the funeral, and whose beautiful floral offerings paid mute tribute to their departed brother. Math Barzen, August Brown, Phil Zeh, John Durbin, C. C. Jackson and Michael Burns from among the pioneer settlers of our city acted as pall bearers.

His brother, William Robbecke of Chicago, his daughter, Mrs. Frank Lawrence of Fergus Falls and his brother-in-law, Charles Meyer of Roseau, were the only out of town relaives able to be present. There were also many fraternal brothers and friends from the neighboring communities in attendance.

Always one of the prime movers in any project towards the advancement of the city his loss will also be greatly felt in that respect, and it was in appreciation of this fact as well as because of the love and esteem in which he was held by all citizens of the local community that all business places were closed during the funeral services which, to accomodate the large attendance were held in the Auditorium.

CHARLES AUGUST ROBBECKE was born in Merrane, Province of Saxony, Germany, in the year 1852. Coming to this country at the age of 18 he was employed for three years as cook and baker in New York City. Coming of age, he enlisted in the U. S. army and saw five years service during the Indian troubles in the 70's on the western frontier.

On being mustered out he settled in Crookston where in 1880 he married Louise Meyers, of New Ulm and for two years conducted a successful restaurant. He then filed on a homestead which is located two miles west of Thief River Falls. After proving up he engaged in the hotel business at St. Hilaire.

In November of the year 1888 he came to Thief River Falls where he opened the Ogahmah Hotel which he conducted successfully to the time of his illness.

Left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father are his wife and eight children: Mrs. Frank Lawrence of Fergus Falls, Mrs. George Booren and Mrs. Hugo Anderson of Thief River Falls, Elsie, Florence and sons, Walter, Philip and Moritz; an aged father, a sister and two brothers in Germany also a brother, William Robbecke of Chicago. The funeral services were conducted under the auspices of the Odd Fellows Lodge, the sermon being preached by Rev. Smith. The remains were interred in Greenwood Cemetery in this city.

DESIRE TO BE CITIZENS.

The following have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States before Clerk of Court Ives namely, Reinert Knutson of this city, Bernt Jensen Myhre of the town of Smiley and Stanley Depta of Kratka.

Mr. Ives will be in a position to take applications for second papers next week and all who desire to take them out should apply at once as ninety days notice must be given before the court acts upon these applications. The court will convene about June 1st.

A GREAT INSTITUTE.

When one of the leading ministers of Minnesota returned from the state Sunday School Convention held at Minneapolis last year, he said: "This convention has given me a post-granale education in Sunday School work." This is just what all Minnesota Sunday School Conventions do for those who attend them. They are more than conventions; they are grea educational institutes which provide in three days, an education in sunday school work better than can be obtained in ayears' study of sunday school books. It is worth sacrifice of time and money on the part of any Sunday school worker.

Minnesota's. Fifty-third. Sunday School. Convention. to. be. held in Mankato, March 8-9-10 next will be Minnesota's greatest. It will consider methods for all Divisions and Departments of the Sunday school, speial studies in the problems of Elementary, adolescent and adult periods Bible Study, Missions, Pe a g. music, Adult Bible Calss work anil special emphasis will be placed on the spiritual side of the work. Every Sunday School in our country is expected to send the pastor, superintendent and department superintendents an das many others as can be induced to attend. GAS WIPES OUT ENTIRE FAMILY

Seven Persons Found Dead in Philadelphia Home.

Philadelphia, Feb. 13.—Seven members of one family, the father, mother and five children, were killed by illuminating gas in their home in the Ghetto district of this city. The dead are:

Hyman Berkowitz, aged forty-two; Rose, his wife, aged forty; Minnie, Michael, Israel, Rebecca and Pauline, whose ages range from eighteen years to five years.

When their bodies were discovered in the gas filled room by neighbors the father lay fully dressed on one bed with the two small boys, while the mother and the three girls were in another bed in the same room on the third floor.

The eldest girl, Minnie, was to have been married in a few days. Her trousseau was found honging in the room on the second floor.

FUNK OUT OF THE CONTEST

Quits Fight for the Senatorship From Iowa.

Des Moines, Feb. 12.—With the issuing of a statement of final withdrawal from the senatorial race by A. B. Funk there was a general scattering of his supporters, many of them casting complimentary votes for Warren Garst. Judge W. S. Kenyon remained high man among the Republicans.

The vote on the twentieth joint ballot was as follows: Kenyon, 42; Porter, 49; Young, 31; Garst, 20; Wallace, 1; G. W. Clarke, 2; total number of votes, 145; necessary to elect, 73.

Mikado Gives $750,000 to Poor.

TEXAS SENATOR FAVORS LORIMER

Bailey Makes Powerful Argument for Illinois Solon.

HOLDS FLOOR THREE HOURS

Probably the Largest Attendance of Members and Spectators During Preent Session Frequently Interrupt Bailey's Address With Applause. Speech Mainly a Review of the Law and Testimony With Many Novel Features.

Washington, Feb. 14.—Defense of Senator Lorimer of Illinois was offered by Senator Bailey of Texas in a speech so powerful that it was heard and applauded from time to time by what was perhaps the largest attendance of members and spectators seen on the floor and in the galleries of the senate chamber during the present session of congress. For three hours the Texan spoke, and at the end of that period announced he would continue his speech later.

His plea that the senator from Illinois be permitted to retain his seat was so elaborate in nature and delivered with such force and fervor that it placed Mr. Bailey in the chief place among the defenders of Mr. Lorimer.

In the main the speech was a review of the law and the testimony, but Mr. Bailey introduced many novel and striking features, not the least startling of which was the assertion that forgery had been resorted to to make a case against the Illinois senator. This he asserted had been in connection with the effort to show that Senator Holstlaw of the Illinois legislature had been bribed to vote for Mr. Lorimer. He pointed out that Holstlaw's name had been improperly spelled on the deposition slip used when the money he was alleged to have received had been placed in the bank.

Returning to Mr. White, Mr. Bailey denounced him as "a crook of the worst kind" and "an infamous dog," saying he had betrayed and tried to make money out of the labor element to whom he owed his election, "and yet," he said, "this miserable creature swears that he knew nothing of the existence of a jackpot. You can rest assured that if there had been a jackpot he would have been in it from the beginning."

CAUCUS ON PARTY NOMINEE

Iowa Republicans Seek to Break Senatorial Deadlock.

Des Moines, Feb. 14.—Three weeks having been wasted in fruitless joint balloting to select a successor to Senator Dolliver the progressive Republicans began the circulation of a call for a general Republican caucus to select a party nominee for the Iowa legislature.

Standpat Republicans, who have been supporting "Lafe" Young, declined heretofore to go into a caucus because they were demanding a special primary for Republicans at which to choose the successor of Dolliver. The bill for the primary failed of passage in both houses and the legislature faces the necessity of balloting every noon without hope of electing a colleague for Senator Cummins unless the Republicans get together on a nominee.

Supporters of W. S. Kenyon are pressing the caucus call. The standpatters are in constant conference and it is said that there is a chance of their breaking to some other candidate than "Lafe" Young.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease precsribed local remedies, and by constaulty failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

CAVANAGH
FOREST RANGER
BY HAMLIN GARLAND

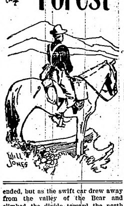
COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland



INTRODUCTION.

My Dear Mr. Garland—You have been kind enough to let me see the proofs of "Cavanagh, Forest Ranger." I have read it with mingled feelings—with keen appreciation of your sympathetic understanding of the problems which confronted the forest service before the western people understood it and with deep regret that I am no longer officially associated with its work, although I am as deeply interested and almost as closely in touch as ever.

Western frontier people faced life with a manly dependence on their own courage and capacity which did them and still does them high honor. Some of them were naturally slow to see the advantages of the new order. But now that they have seen it there is nowhere more intelligent, convinced and effective support of the conservation policies than in the west. The establishment of the new order in some places was not child's play. But there is a strain of fairness among the western people which you can always count on in such a fight as the forest service has made and won.

The service contains the best body of young men I know and many splendid veterans. It is nine-tenths made up of western men. It has met the west on its own ground, and it has won the contest—an episode of which you have so well described—because the west believes in what it stands for.

I have lived much among the western mountain men, differed with some of them and worked with many of them. Sometimes I have lost, and sometimes I have won, but every time the fight was worth while. I have come out of it all with a respect and liking for the west which will last as long as I do. Very sincerely yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

CHAPTER I.

THE DESERT CHARIOT.

LEE VIRGINIA WETHERFORD began her return journey into the mountain west with exultation. From the moment she opened her car window that August morning in Nebraska the plain called to her, sustained her illusions. It was all quite as big, as tawny, as she remembered it, fit arena for the epic deeds in which her father had been a leader bold and free.

Her memories of Roaring Fork and its people were childish and romantic. She recalled vividly the stagecoach which used to amble sedately, not to say wheezily, from the railway to the Fork and from the Fork back to the railway in the days ten years before when she had ridden away in it a tearful, despairing, long limbed girl and fully expected to find it waiting for her at Sulphur City, with old Tom Quentan still as its driver.

The first hint of "the new west" came to her by way of the pretentious Hotel Alma, which stood opposite the station at Sulphur and to which she was led by a colored porter of most elaborate and kindly manners.

This house, which furnishes an excellent dinner and an absorbing mixture of types both American and European, was vaguely disturbing to her. It was plainly not the old time west—the west her father had dominated in the days "before the invasion." It was indeed distinctly built for the tourist trade and was filled with all that might indicate the comfortable nearness of big game and good fishing.

Upon inquiry as to the stage she was amazed to hear that an automobile now made the journey to the Fork in five hours and that it left immediately after the midday meal.

At 2 o'clock, as the car came to the door, she entered it with a sense of having stepped from one invading chariot of progress to another, so big and shining and up to date was its glittering body, agleam with brass and glowing with brave red paint.

As they whirled madly down the valley, the girl was astonished at the transformation in the hot, dry land. Wire fences ran here and there, inclosing fields of alfalfa and wheat where once only the sagebrush and the greasewood grew. Painted farmhouses shone on the banks of the creeks and irrigating ditches flashed across the road with an air of business and decision.

For the first half hour it seemed as if the dominion of the cattleman had ended, but as the swift car drew away from the valley of the Bear and climbed the divide toward the north the free range was disclosed, with few changes save in the cattle, which were all of the hornless or hornless variety, appearing tame and spiritless in comparison with the old time half wild broadhorn breeds.

Lee began to wonder if she should find the Fork much changed—her mother was a bad correspondent.

Her unspoken question, opportunely asked by another, was answered by an old woman passenger. "Oh, Lord, yes! Summer tourists are crawlin' all over us sence this otto line begun. 'Pears like all the bare armed boobies and crosslegged little rips in Omaha and Denver had jest got to ride in and look us over. Two of them new hotels in Sulphur don't do a thing but feed these tenderfeet. I s'pose pro-hi-bition will be the next grand stand play on the part of our town lot boomers. We old cowpunchers don't care whether the town grows or not, but these hyer bankers and truck farmers are all for raisin' the price o' land and taxin' us quiet fellers out of our boots."

The girl was brought back to the vital phases of her life by the harsh voice of one of the men. "Lize Wetherford is goin' to get jumped one o' these days for sellin' whisky without a license. I've told her so too. Everybody knows she's a-doin' it, and what beats me is her goin' along in that way when a little time and money would set her straight with the law."

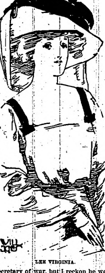
The shock of all this lay in the fact that Eliza Wetherford was the mother to whom Lee Virginia was returning after ten years of life in the east, and the significance of the man's words froze her blood for an instant.

The young fellow on the back seat slowly said, "I don't complain of Lize sellin' bad whisky, but the grub she sets up is fierce."

"The grub ain't so bad; it's the way she stacks it up," remarked another. "But, then, these little flybit cow towns are all alike and all bad, so far as hotels are concerned."

Lee Virginia, crimson and burning hot, was in agony lest they should go further in their criticism.

She knew that her mother kept a boarding house, and, while she was not proud of it, there was nothing disgraceful in it. Happily, the conversation turned aside and fell upon the government's forest policy, and Sam Gregg, a squat, wide mouthed, harsh voiced individual, cursed the action of Ross Cavanagh, the ranger in the district above the Fork. "He thinks he's secretary of war, but I reckon he won't after I interview him. He can't shuffle my sheep around over the hills at his own sweet will."



LEE VIRGINIA.

The young fellow on the back seat quietly interposed. "You want to be sure you've got the cinch on Cavanagh good and square, Sam, or he'll be a-ridin' you."

"He certainly is an arbitrary cuss," said the old woman. "They say he was one of Teddy's rough riders in the war. He sure can ride and handle a gun. 'Pears like he thinks he's runnin' the whole range," she continued, after a pause. "Can't nobody so much as shoot a grouse since he come in, and the supervisor upholds him in it."

Lee Virginia wondered about all this supervision, for it was new to her.

Gregg, the sheepman, went on: "As I tell Redfield, I don't object to the forest policy—it's a good thing for me; I get my sheep pastured cheaper than I could do any other way, but it makes me hot to have grazing lines run on me and my herders jacked up every time they get over the line. Ross run one bunch off the reservation last Friday. I'm going to find out about that. He'll learn he can't get 'arbitrary' with me."

He admitted his conversion shamelessly. "I'm for whatever will pay best. Just now, with a high tariff, sheep are the boys. So long as I can get on the reserve at 7 cents a head—lambs free—I'm going to put every dollar I've got into sheep."

"You're going to get thrown off altogether one of these days," said the young man on the back seat.

Thereupon a violent discussion arose over the question of the right of a sheepman to claim first grass for his flocks, and Gregg boasted that he cared nothing for "the dead line." "They've tried to run me out of Deer Creek, but I'm there to stay. I have 10,000 more on the way, and the man that tries to stop me will find trouble."

The car was descending into the valley of the Roaring Fork now, and wire fences and alfalfa fields on either side gave further evidence of the change in the land's dominion. Down past the courthouse, refurbished and deeper sunk in trees, Lee Virginia rode, recalling the wild night when 300 armed and vengeful cowboys surrounded it, holding three cattle barons and their hired invaders against all comers, resolute to be their own judge, jury and hangman. It was all as peaceful as a Sunday afternoon at this moment, with no sign of the fierce passions of the past.

The car crossed the Roaring Fork and drew up before two small shacks, one of which bore a faded sign, "The Wetherford House," and the other in fresher paint, "The Wetherford Cafe." On the sidewalk a group of Indians were sitting, and a half dozen slouching white men stood waiting at the door.

As Lee went past the hotel porch her heart beat hard and her breath shortened. In a flash she divined the truth. She understood why her mother had discouraged her coming home. It was not merely on account of the money. It was because she knew that her business was wrong.

What a squalid little den it was! How cheap, bald and petty the whole town seemed of a sudden! Lee Virginia halted and turned. There was only one thing to be done, and that was to make herself known. She retraced her steps, pulled open the broken screen door and entered the cafe. It was a low, dingy dining room filled with the odor of ham and bad coffee. At the tables ten or fifteen men, a motley throng, were busily feeding their voracious jaws, and on her left, behind a showcase filled with cigars, stood her mother, looking old, unkempt and worried. The changes in her were so great that the girl stood in shocked alarm. At last she raised her veil. "Mother," she said, "don't you know me?"

A look of surprise went over the older woman's flabby face—a glow which brought back something of her other self, as she cried, "Why, Lee Virginny, where did you come from?"

The boarders stopped chewing and stared in absorbed interest while Virginia kissed her blowsy mother.

"By the Lord, it's little Virginny!" said one old fellow. "It's her daughter."

Upon this a mutter of astonishment arose, and the waiter girls, giggling, marveling and envious, paused, their platters in hand, to exchange comment on the newcomer's hat and gown. A cowboy at the washing sink in the corner suspended his face polishing and gaped over his shoulder in silent ecstasy. Some of the men came forward to greet her, and, though she had some difficulty in recognizing one or two of them (so hardly had the years of her absence used them), she eventually succeeded in placing them all.

At length her mother led her through the archway which connected the two shanties, thence along a narrow hall into a small bedroom, into which the western sunset fell. It was a shabby place, but as a refuge from the crowd in the restaurant it was grateful.

Lize looked at her daughter critically. "I don't know what I'm going to do with a girl like you. Why, you're purty—purty as a picture. You were skinny as a child. I'm fair dazed. Great snakes, how you have opened out! You're the living image of your dad. What start'd you back? I told you to stay where you was."

"I had no place to go after Aunt Celia died. I had to come home."

"You wrote they was willing to keep you."

"They were, but I couldn't ask it of them. I had no right to burden them, and, besides, Mrs. Hall wrote me that you were sick."

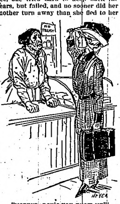
"I am, but I didn't want you to come back. Lay off your things and come out to supper. We'll talk afterward."

The eating house, the rooms and hallways were all of that desolate shabbiness which comes from shiftlessness joined with poverty. Everything on which the girl's eyes fell contrasted strongly with her aunt's home on the Brandywine—not because that house was large or luxurious, but because it was exquisitely in order and sweet with flowers and dainty arrangement of color.

She regretted bitterly that she had ever left her eastern friends. Her mother, in truth, showed little pleasure at her coming and almost nothing of the illness of which a neighbor had written. It was, indeed, this letter which had decided her to return to the west. She had come, led by a sense of duty, not by affection, for she had never loved her mother as a daughter should—they were in some way antipathetic—and now she found herself an unwelcome guest.

With aching head and shaking knees Virginia re-entered the dining room, which was now nearly empty of its "guests," but was still misty with the steam of food and swarming with flies. These pests buzzed like bees around the soiled places on the tablecloths, and one of her mother's first remarks was a fretful apology regarding her trials with those insects. "Seems like you can't keep 'em out," she said.

With desperate effort Lee conquered her disgust. "Never mind; I'm tired and a little upset. I don't need any dinner." Hastily sipping a cup of coffee, she tried hard to keep back the tears, but failed, and no sooner did her mother turn away than she fled to her room, there to sob unrestrainedly her despair and shame. "Oh, I can't stand it!" she called. "I can't, I can't!"



"MOTHER, DON'T YOU KNOW ME?"

She felt herself alien and solitary in the land of her birth.

Lize came in half an hour later, pathetic in her attempt at "slicking up." She was still handsome in a large featured way, but her gray hair was there and her face laid with a network of fretful lines. Her color was bad. At the moment her cheeks were yellow and sunken.

She complained of being short of breath and lame and tired. "I'm always tired," she explained. "'Pears like sometimes I can't scarcely drag myself around, but I do."

A pang of comprehending pain shot through Virginia's heart. If she could not love she could at least pity and help, and, reaching forth her hand, she patted her mother on the knee. "Poor old mammy!" she said. "I'm going to help you."

Lize was touched by this action of her proud daughter and smiled sadly. "This is no place for you. It's nothing but a measly little cow town gone to seed—and I'm gone to seed with it. I know it. But what is a feller to do? I'm stuck here, and I've got to make a living or quit. I can't quit, so I stagger along."

"I've come back to help you, mother. You must let me relieve you of some of the burden."

"What can you do, child?" Lize asked gently.

"I can teach."

"Not in this town you can't."

"Why not?"

"Well, there's a terrible prejudice against—well, against me. And, besides, the places are all filled for next year. The Wetherfords ain't among the first circles any more."

Lee Virginia remembered Gregg's charge against her mother. "What do you mean by the prejudice against you?" she asked.

Lize was evasive. "Since I took to running this restaurant my old friends kind of fell off, but never mind that tonight."

The girl's thought was now turned into other half forgotten channels. "I wish you would tell me more about father. I don't remember where he was buried."

"Neither do I, child. I mean I don't know exactly. You see, after that cattle war he went away to Texas. He never came back and never wrote, and by and by word came that he had died and was buried, but I never could go down to see where his grave was at."

"Didn't you know the name of the town?"

"Yes, but it was a new place away down in the Panhandle and nobody I knew lived there. And I never knew anything more. Well, I must go back into the restaurant. I hain't got a girl I can trust to count the cash."

Left alone, Lee Virginia wept no more, but her face settled into an expression of stern sadness. It seemed as if her girlhood had died out of her and that she was about to begin the same struggle with work and worry which had marked the lives of all the women she had known in her childhood.

CHAPTER II.

THE FOREST RANGER.

LEE VIRGINIA was awakened next morning by the passing of some one down the hall calling at each door, "Six o'clock!" She had not slept at all till after 1. She was lame, heart weary and dismayed, but she rose and dressed herself as neatly as before. She had decided to return to Sulphur. "I cannot endure this," she had repeated to herself a hundred times. "I will not!"

Hearing the clatter of dishes, she ventured with desperate courage into the dining room, which was again filled with cowboys, coal miners, ranchers and their tousled families and certain nondescript town loafers of tramp-like appearance.

Slipping into a seat at the end of the table which offered the cleanest cloth, Lee Virginia glanced round upon her neighbors with shrinking eyes. All were shoveling their food with knife blades and guzzling their coffee with bent heads. Their faces scared her, and she dropped her eyes.

At her left, however, sat two men whose greetings were frank and manly and whose table manners betrayed a higher form of life. One of them was a tall man with a lean red face, against which his blond mustache lay like a chalk mark. He wore a corduroy jacket cut in Norfolk style, and in the collar of his yellow shirt a green tie was loosely knotted. His hands were long and freckled, but were manifestly trained to polite usages.

The other man was younger and browner and of a compact, athletic figure. On the breast of his olive green coat hung a silver badge which bore a pine tree in the center. His shirt was tan colored and rough, but his head was handsome. He looked like a young officer in the undress uniform of the regular army. His hands were strong, but rather small, and the lines of his shoulders graceful. Most attractive of all were his eyes, so brown, so quietly humorous and so keen.

In the rumble of cheap and vulgar talk the voices of these men appealed to the troubled girl with great charm. She felt more akin to them than to any one else in the room, and from time to time she raised her eyes to their faces.

They were aware of her also, and their gaze was frankly admiring as well as wondering, and in passing the ham and eggs or the sugar they contrived to show her that they considered her a lady in a rough place and that they would like to know more about her.

She accepted their civilities with gratitude and listened to their talk with growing interest. It seemed that the young man had come down from the hills to meet his friend and take him back to his cabin.

"I can't do it today, Ross," said the older man. "I wish I could, but one meal of this kind is all I can stand these days."

Mrs. Wetherford, seizing the moment, came down to do the honors. "You fellers ought to know my girl. Virginny, this is Forest Supervisor Redfield, and this is Ross Cavanagh, his forest ranger in this district. You ought to know each other. My girl's just back from school, and she don't think much of the Fork. It's a little too coarse for her."

Lee flushed under this introduction, and her distress was so evident that both men came to her rescue.

The older man bowed and said, "I didn't know you had a daughter, Mrs. Wetherford." And Cavanagh, with a glance of admiration, added, "We've been wondering who you might be."

Lize went on: "I thought I'd got rid of her. She's been away now for about ten years. I don't know but it was a mistake. Look's like she's grown a little too fine haired for us doughies out here."

"So much the worse for us," replied Redfield.

This little dialogue gave the girl time to recover herself, but as Cavanagh watched the blush fade from her face, leaving it cold and white, he sympathized with her—pitied her from the bottom of his heart. He perceived that he was a chance spectator of the first scene in a painful domestic drama—one that might easily become a tragedy. He wondered what the forces might be which had brought such a daughter to this sloven, this virago. To see a maid of this delicate bloom thrust into such a place as Lize Wetherford's "hotel" had the reputation of being roused indignation.

"When did you reach town?" he asked, and into his voice his admiration crept.

"Only last night."

"You find great changes here?"

"Not so great as in my mother. It's all"— She stopped abruptly, and he understood.

Lize being drawn back to her cash register, Redfield turned to say: "My dear young lady, I don't suppose you remember me, but I knew you when you were a tot of five or six. I knew your father very well."

"Did you?" Her face lighted up.

"Yes, poor fellow; he went away from here rather under a cloud, you know."

"I remember a little of it. I was here when the shooting took place."

"So you were. Well, since then much has happened to us all," he explained to the ranger. "There wasn't room for a dashing young blood such as Ed Wetherford was in those days." He turned to Lee. "He was no worse than the men on the other side—it was dog eat dog—but some way the people rather settled on him as a scapegoat. He was forced out, and your mother has borne the brunt of it since. Those were lawless days."

More and more Lee Virginia's heart went out in trust toward these two men. Opposed to the malodorous, unshaven throng which filled the room, they seemed wondrously softened and sympathetic, and in the ranger's gaze was something else—something which made her troubles somehow less intolerable. She felt that he understood the difficult situation in which she found herself.

Redfield went on. "You find us horribly uncivilized after ten years' absence?"

"I find this uncivilized," she replied with fierce intensity, looking around the room. Then, on the impulse, she added: "I can't stand it! I came here to live with my mother, but this is too—too horrible!"

"I understand your repulsion," replied Redfield. "A thousand times I repeat, apropos of this country, 'Where every prospect pleases and only man is vile.'"

"Do you suppose it was as bad ten years ago?" she asked. "Was everything as dirty—as mean? Were the houses then as full of flies and smells?"

"I'm afraid they were. Of course the country isn't all like this, and there are neat homes and gentle people in Sulphur, but most cattlemen are—as they've always been—a shiftless, happy-go-lucky lot at best, and some of them have been worse, as you know."

"I never dreamed of finding my mother in such a place," she went on. "I don't know what to do or say. She isn't well. I ought to stay and help her, and yet—oh, it is disheartening!"

Lize tapped Redfield on the shoulder. "Come over here, Reddy, if you have finished your breakfast. I want to talk with you."

Redfield rose and followed his landlady behind the counter and there sat in earnest conversation while she made change. The tone in which her mother addressed the supervisor, her action of touching him as one man lays hand upon another, was profoundly revealing to Lee Virginia. She revolted from it without realizing exactly what it meant, and, feeling deeply but vaguely the forest ranger's sympathy, she asked:

"How can you endure this kind of life?"

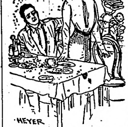
"I can't, and I don't," he answered cautiously, for they were being closely observed. "I am seldom in town. My dominion is more than a mile above this level. My cabin is 9,000 feet above the sea. It is clean and quiet up there."

"Are all the other restaurants in the village like this?"

"Worse. I come here because it is the best."

She rose. "I can't stand this air and these flies any longer. They're too disgusting."

He followed her into the other house, conscious of the dismay and bitterness which burst forth the instant they were alone. "What am I to do? She is my mother, but I've lost all sense of relationship to her. And these people, except you and Mr. Redfield, are all disgusting to me. It isn't because my mother is poor, it isn't because she's keeping boarders; it's something else." At this point her voice failed her.



"I CAN'T STAND THIS AIR AND THESE FLIES ANY LONGER."

"Let us go out into the air," suggested the ranger presently. "The mountain wind will do you good."

She followed him trustfully, and as she stepped from the squalor of the hotel into the splendor of the morning her head lifted. She drank the clear, crisp wind as one takes water in the desert.

"The air is clean, anyway," she said.

Cavanagh to divert her pointed away to the mountains. "There is my dominion. Up there I am sole ruler. No one can litter the earth with corruption or poison the streams."

She did not speak, but as she studied the ranger her face cleared. "It is beautiful up there."

He went on. "I hate all this scrap heap quite as heartily as you do, but up there are sweetness and sanity. The streams are germless, and the forest cannot be devastated. That is why I am a ranger. I could not endure life in a town like this."

He turned up the street toward the high hill to the south, and she kept step with him. As she did not speak, he asked, "What did you expect to do out here?"

"I hoped to teach," she replied, her voice still choked with her emotion. "I expected to find the country much improved."

"And so it is, but it is still a long way from an eastern state. Perhaps you will find the people less savage than they appear at first glance."

"It isn't the town or the people; it is my mother!" she burst forth again. "Tell me! A woman in the car yesterday accused my mother of selling whisky unlawfully. Is this so? Tell me!"

She faced him resolutely, and, perceiving that she could not be evaded, he made slow answer. "I don't know that she does, but I've heard it charged against her."

"Who made the charge?"

"One of the clergymen, and then it's common talk among the rough men of the town."

"But she's my mother!" wailed the girl, coming back to the central fact. "She has sent me money—she has been kind to me. What am I to do? She needs me, and yet the thought of staying here and facing her life frightens me."

The rotten board walks, the low rookeries, the unshaven, blear eyed men sitting on the thresholds of the saloons, the slattern squaws wandering abroad like bedraggled hens, made the girl stare with wonder and dismay. She had remembered the town street as a highway filled with splendid cavaliers, a list wherein heroic deeds were done with horse and pistol.

She perceived in the ranger the man of the new order, and with this in her mind she said: "You don't belong here? You're not a western man?"

"Not in the sense of having been born here," he replied. "I am, in fact, a native of England, though I've lived nearly twenty years of my life in the States."

She glanced at his badge. "How did you come to be a ranger—what does it mean? It's all new to me."

"It is new to the west," he answered smilingly, glad of a chance to turn her thought from her own personal griefs. "It has all come about since you went east. Uncle Sam has at last become provident and is now 'conserving his resources.' I am one of his representatives, with stewardship over some 90,000 acres of territory, mostly forest."

She looked at him with eyes of changing light. "You don't talk like an Englishman, and yet you are not like the men out here."

"I shouldn't care to be like some of them," he answered. "My being here is quite logical. I went into the cattle business like many another, and I went broke. I served under Colonel Roosevelt in the Cuban war and after my term was out naturally drifted back. I love the wilderness and have some natural taste for forestry, and I can ride and pack a horse as well as most cowboys; hence my uniform. I'm not the best forest ranger in the service, I'll admit, but I fancy I'm a fair average."

"And that is your badge—the pine tree?"

"Yes, and I am proud of it. Some of the fellows are not, but so far as I am concerned I am glad to be known as a defender of the forest. A tree means much to me. I never mark one for felling without a sense of responsibility to the future."

Her questions came slowly, like those of a child. "Where do you live?"

"Directly up the South Fork about twenty miles."

"What do you do?"

He smiled. "Not much. I ride the trails, guard the game, put out fires, scale lumber, burn brush, build bridges, herd cattle, count sheep, survey land and a few other odd chores. It's supposed to be a soft snap, but I can't see it that way."

"Do you live alone?"

"Yes, for the larger part of the time. I have an assistant, who is with me during part of the summer months. Mostly I am alone. However, I am supposed to keep open house, and I catch a visitor now and then."

"Do you expect to do this always?"

He smiled again. "There you touch my secret spring. I have the hope of being chief forester some time—I mean we all have the prospect of promotion to sustain us. The service is so new that any one with even a knowledge of forestry is in demand. By and by real foresters will arise."

She returned abruptly to her own problem. "I dread to go back to my mother, but I must. Oh, how I hate that hotel! I loathe the flies, the smells, the people that eat there, the waiters—everything!" She shuddered.

"Many of the evils you mention could be reformed, except, of course, some of the people who come to eat. I fear several of them have gone beyond reformation."

As they started back down the street she saw the motor stage just leaving the door of the office. "That settles one question," she said. "I can't get away till tomorrow."

"Where would you go if you broke camp—back to the east?"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A sportsman of great imaginative gifts and fond of telling his exploits related that at one shot he had brought down two partridges and a hare. His explanation was that, although he had only hit one partridge, the bird in falling had clutched at another partridge and brought that to earth entangled in its claws.

"But how about the hare?" he was asked.

"Oh," was the calm reply, "my gun kicked and knocked me backward, and I fell on the hare as it ran past!"

An Old Christmas Law.

The general court of Massachusetts Bay Colony, following the example of the English parliament, in 1650 enacted a law that "anybody who is found observing, by abstinence from labor, feasting or any other way, any such day as Christmas day shall pay for every such offense 5 shillings." This law was repealed in 1681.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, FEB. 17, 1911

The reciprocity treaty seems to be one of the certainties of the future. The only problem right here is: How will it affect the northwestern farmer?

Re-apportionment will be put to its test in the house next Tuesday. Chances seem to be about even. If we cannot get fair representation we might have another state if that would suit the south end better.

Our Senators have recently passeed on, and fully authorized its two contested members to proceed with their work. It does seem that the senate does have some ideas of reform.

The man who tries to do something and fails is infinately better than he who tries to do nothing and yet beautifully succeeds.—Anonymous.

He who takes conditions as they are and makes the best of his opportunities is the only man worth the while. Almost any fool can make success if he has a big enough start.

Exsenator A. D. Stephens of Polk county evidently is trying to keep in the limelight. He is now out critizising the state reform school at Red Wing. He says there have been such deeds committed there that it should be called "The School of Crime". Well, when you gather up all the rogues in the state and put them together what do you expect.

The Bemidji High school is to have a Normal Department. We are glad to see that as we beleive that the three years work done along that line in our City's High School has demonstrated that that is what the frontier needs if it can have nothing better.

FARMER'S MEETING.

The farmer's meeting held at the Lincoln High school Gymnasium on Wednesday was well attended, in spite of the fact that is was held simultaneously with the Robbecke funeral.

Mr. Tomhave gave a fine speech on beef cattle and on hog raising.

Chas. Gustafson read a paper upon his experiences, and upon Prof. Hay's suggestion that it be published in the Press that it might reach a mighty audience we secured the same and here it follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen

Professor Hay got me into a pinch now I can't get up and give a speech and I can't sing for you. But will try to read some thing to you about my own experience in farming, dairying and with dairy cows.

Twenty three years ago, I started farming five miles from this city the land cost me $800.00 and besides I had to spend my homestead right All the money I had then was $600. and one cow so I started farming $200 in debt. (Excuse me for saying I—I meant we because I had a good wife and four small children to help us, and I tell you this is the best help I ever had). We at that time like all our neighbors were raising wheat and kept up for 15 or 20 years till we could not raise it with profit any longer. At the same time our cows had been run down to scrubs, no good for beef or milk but we received advice from some smart fellows from below, who told us to buy milkstrain shorthorn bulls, breed up the stock to both beef and milk. How did we succeed? You may ask Mr. Engelstad, Backen, Mussey and several others, who are right here. They all quit and started in with dairy breeds. I'll tell how I quit the short-horn breed. I had a young horse who killed my last shorthorn bull. Maybe the horse knew more about dairying than I? Nevertheless, I am quite sure had I kept on in that line much longer I would not have had very large cream checks. Some of those cows owe us for board yet. Here is a comparison. Ten years ago the first summer the St. Hilaire creamery was running we had 14 cows and the largest cream check for any month was $18.00. Last year which is ten years later, we had $106.00 in one month from 8 cows. This is the result from picking out the best cows and breeding to nothing but a full blooded dairy Sire—and when I quit I found I had only begun. I dare say, half the cows in this section are not worth keeping as dairy cows. Where will we find a farmer who is so foolish as to keep a hired man who is not able to work enough to earn his own board. But it is still worse to keep a cow that does not pay her board.

Weigh the milk of each cow twice a month and test the milk once a month and keep a record of your cows. This is the best way and the only sure way to know what they are good for. You don't know even how to feed the cows, unless you weigh and test the milk. Some cows get too much feed and some don't get enough. All you need is a pencil, a book and a spring scale. Weigh the milk from each cow morning and evening the first and the 15th of each month; also take samples of the milk after each cow from two milkings or better still from four milkings. Bring your samples of milk to the creamery or to the school here. I am sure Prof. Hay will have it tested for you; than you can figure out what each cow is good for. I know some of you farmers are getting old, tired and a little carless like myself—(I did not do this figuring myself one of my boys did it)—But let us try to do one more good thing before we quit. Which is to get the boys interested in farming, dairying and in keeping records of the cows. If you have no boys let the girls do it.—(If you have no girls you are awful poor—I pity you) we should be very anxious to get our boys and girls interested in these matters. If we succeed in getting them interested they will surely prove to be better farmers than we were.

Ten years ago we received no profit from our 14 cows, they paid for their food and very little for the care. Ten years later our cream check from 8 cows averaged $76.00 per month thru the year—net profit thru the year $34.00. Don't it pay to keep records and breed up the herd? When I bought my first full-blooded dairy bull some of the farmers said that Chas. Gustafson bought a gold calf, they did not say I got him from Aron or that I worshiped him as God, but I tell you it was a gold calf just the same, I got seven good heifers after him. Sold bul calves after him for $140. Received for services $70. and having kept him 3 years I sold him for what I paid for him, so it was a gold calf to me.

We need to be careful and not let some of these cattle men who are trying to make a fortune on inferior fullblooded stock, get the best of us, ther are as we know, even among the full-blooded dairy breeds, sires that are no better than a common scrub When buying a bull for your dairy herd be sure that you not only get a thorough bred, but one that is strong healthy and has a good record behind him—Twenty three years ago, I bought my farm for $8.000 and sold it last fall for $8.000. Does it not pay to farm? Young ladies and young men, do not be afraid to go and get a good piece of land—It means hard work but you are young and strong, and the bread never tasted better then when you worked hard for it, and hard work means good sleep. Many hardships thru life makes one contented in old age, and is also a great help for us to die happy.

Last I would ask someone to take up the question of feeding dairy cattle. The best practical and cheapest feeding methods, for this part of the country.

WHITE EARTH LAND HEARING HALTED.

Defects in Proceedings Pointed Out by Court—Second-Class.

Duluth, Feb. 15.—The hearing of the White Earth Indian reservation land cases was halted this forenoon when, after Judge Morris had pointed out defects in the manner in which the proceedings were brought, R. J. Powell, attorney for the defendants, withdrew his demurres and announced that he would withdraw all demurres already filed.

Mr. Powell will file his answers to the case and reserve the right to demur.

The arguments on the second class of the cases, those involving conveyances by heirs or allottees without having obtained the approval of the secretary of the interior, are still on before Judge Morris. Both sides expressed their desire to advance the cases on as many legal points as possible before bringing the cases to trial on their merits. The arguments are all on technical points and will probably last several days yet.

The contention of the government is that, nothwithstanding the Indians have the right to occupy reservation lands, the government still holds the absolute title, and that the Indians mistook their rights to the lands allotted to them and sought to occupy by deeds and mortgages land which really belonged to the United States, and that such deeds and incumbrances are nullities.

H. Matson's bill classifying rural schools according to grade of the certificate of the teachers employed, passed the house Monday. It provides for three classes and fixes the amount of state aid respectively at $50, $100 and $150..—Ex.

The Laziest People.

There is no doubt that the Malays are among the laziest people in the world. Except in rare cases they will not take the trouble to learn when they are young, and afterward, if they have learned, they will not exert themselves to apply their knowledge to any object which require a sustained effort. That they possess effort is known to any one who has seen Malays engaged in any enterprise which savors of sport. They do not mind the trouble if there is only some risk and excitement in the work.—Times of Malaya.

A Marked Judge.

The descriptive reporter of a certain daily paper in describing the turning of a dog out of court by order of the bench recently detailed the occurrence as follows: "The ejected canine as he was ignominiously dragged from the room cast a glance at the judge for the purpose of being able to identify him at some future time."

Steenerson's Reply.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9, 1911.
Thief River Falls, Press,
Thief River Falls, Minn.
Gentlemen:-

As a result of a conference I had in the Interior Department recently relative to Commutation Proof on homestead entries made subsequent to the first sale of the Eleven Towns land, the Secretary of the Interior has rendered a decision reversing the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in rejecting commutation proof on these lands, a copy of which I enclose for your information with a view to enlightening those settlers who were burned out, or for any other reason are unable to make a living on the land at the present time.

Yours very truly,
H. Steenerson.

FROSHAUG TO STAY.

Senate Subcommittee Decides Against Ray Farrington.

The subcommittee of the senate elections committee decided today to recommend that Sen. S. J. Froshaug retain his seat in the state senate contested by Ray G. Farrington.

The report will be submitted to the full committee Tuesday and probably be brought in the senate Wednesday. It will then be made a special order.

The committee found that Farrington did not prove that ballot boxes were tampered with during the time intervening between the official count when Froshaug was declared elected and the recount on Dec. 21 when Farington had 22 pluarlity.—Mpls Journal, Feb 13.

ICE AT THE FARMSTEAD

A good supply of ice, for use during hot weather, is not merely a luxury; its is in many cases of vast importance in the economics of the kitchen and dairy; while in the sick room it is often indispensible. And yet, while city-dwellers are willing to pay for it at the rate of forty cents a hundred pounds, there is hardly one farm in a hundred where any provision whatever is made for a summer supply.

There yet remain probably six weeks of weather such as is favorable, in this latitude, for the formation and gathering of an ice-crop. Five or ten tons would suffice for an ordinary family. An excavation six by ten, four to six feet deep in the ground, with a board covering piled high with sawdust or hay, will hold and preserve such a supply; although, of course, a more elaborate ice-house would be better and more convenient. If no running stream or lake is available—and fortunately few localities in Minnesota are destitute of such—an artificial reservoir filled by a pump can be made to furnish ice enough.

A great deal more can be accomplished, and in shorter order, where a number of neighbors co-operate in gathering ice from a river or lake, and perhaps in the building of an ice-house.

A South Dakota paper well says: "In advocating ice, we are speaking not only in behalf of the farm wife, who will appreciate the luxury most keenly in the warm days of summer, but for the farmer himself, for he can put it to so many practical uses. If he specializes in milk, he will find the that his product at the creamery, or cheese factory, will add to his popularity immensely, if his milk is chilled before delivery. If he is making butter, and hopes to make butter of the best class, deserving of the top-nitch price, he will find an ice-house almost indispensable. The harvest is gathered at a time of year when labor is not otherwise busily employed, and we can think of nothing that will bring more real satisfaction, for the time and money spent in securing it than a few tons of ice on the farm."

He Made Them Listen.

"X" Beidler, the old vigilante leader of Montana, was elected sheriff of Lewis and Clark county, in which Helena is situated. During Beidler's incumbency the jail was rebuilt and one of the new fashioned steel cages for the prisoners installed. Beidler invited all the notables down to see the cage when it was completed. The governor and the state and city officials and many prominent citizens accepted the invitation. "X" took them into a cage and excused himself for a minute. He went out and locked the door. Then he took a chair and sat down outside.

"Now, dern ye," he said to the imprisoned notables, "ye've bin edgin' off lately when I was tellin' my stories of the old days an' not listenin' to 'em. Now I reckon ye'll listen."

He kept them there three hours—until he had told his whole budget of tales.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Fosston Automatic Fanningmills

The Holidays are a thing ot the past, and it is time to turn more seriously toward the work of the oncoming season. The first step, perhaps is to clean your seed grain. Screen out foul weed seed, blow away chaff, whitecaps, and light kernels, and plant only the best each succeeding year and you will improve your strain and increaes your yeilds. Nothing pays better than planting only the best. We've got the machine that satisfies -The Fosston Automatic.

Schoolboy Blunders.

The University Correspondent recently offered a prize for schoolboy mistakes. Here are a few examples: "Mute, inglorious Milton"—these epitaphs are used by a writer who was envious of Milton's being poet orient. He finds "sermons in stones" expresses the same idea as Wordsworth's "the restless stone chat all day long is heard." Calvin was a noted scientist and peer, who died lately. Naples is an independent state in the north of India. Shakespeare made a mistake in mentioning Galen, who did not live until a hundred years after his time. The feminine of fox is foxhen. John Burns was the name of one of the claimants to the throne of Scotland in the reign of Edward I. The pyramids are a range of mountains between France and Spain. The three highest mountains in Scotland are Ben Nevis, Ben Lomond and Ben Jonson. Wolsey saved his life by dying on the way from York to London. When the English first landed in Australia the only four footed animal in the country was a rat. Monsoons are fertile gorges between the Himalayas.

When Bjornson Died.

Bjornson's son, in describing the last hours of his father, writes: "Now and then the bright flame of his humor flickered up. The doctor felt his pulse and said it was good. With his face beaming with humor he turned toward us and said. 'I am the first man to die with a good pulse.' He said one evening—and it seemed as if an old wise man was speaking with the weight of experience, 'Now I could write—yes, now I could write, for I have been in the realms of death and have felt the pain that attends death.' And when all of us thought that the indifference of death was upon him—my mother, who always gave him his food, which he would receive only from her, stood at the bedside with a brooch on her breast which she had worn at her confirmation—then he opened his eyes and looked at her. He smiled, lifted his hand and touched the brooch. This was the last sign to the outer world he was able to give."

A Cold Ride.

All through his life Senator Dolliver of Iowa had a horror of fast trains and possible railroad wrecks. Once he was on a train with Vice President Fairbanks.

Dolliver awoke in the middle of the night, and it seemed to him that the train was going at terrific speed. He climbed out of his berth and, arrayed only in his pajamas, started down the length of the train to find the conductor and ask him to order the train run at less speed. It was a cold night, but the senator did not mind that until the door of his car snapped shut and locked behind him and he found that the door of the next coach was also locked. He rode sixty-five miles locked out in the cold of the vestibule before he could wake up anybody to let him in. Mr. Fairbanks finally heard his cries for help and rescued him.—New York Tribune.

Necks and Legs of Animals.

With few exceptions there is a marked equality between the length of the necks and of the legs of both birds and quadrupeds, and whether they be long or short is determined chiefly by the place where the animal must go for its food. This is especially noticeable in beasts that feed constantly upon grass, in which case the neck has just a slight advantage in that it cannot hang perpendicularly down. Crocodiles, lizards and fish have practically no necks. Fowls that feed in the water also offer an example of this correspondence between the members, with the exception of swans and geese and some Indian birds, which gather their food from the bottom of pools and must have long necks for that purpose, while the short legs make it more convenient for them to swim.—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

A Very Great Impediment.

Ladies' Seminary Examiner—Miss Jones, state the chief impediment to marriage. Candidate—When no one presents himself.—Fliegende Blatter.

Max O'Rell's Reply.

Max O'Rell at a dinner in Montreal at which were present English, Scotch, Irish and French was asked to give his opinion of the different races. Here is the answer he gave on the instant.

"The Scotchman," he said, and he clinched his right hand tightly and pretended to try to force it open with his left. "The Englishman"— And he went through the same performance, opening the hand at the end after an apparent struggle. "The Irishman"— And he held out his hand wide open, with the palm upward. "The Frenchman"— And he made a motion with both hands as if he were emptying them on the table.

There was not a word of explanation, but all understood thoroughly and had a hearty laugh.

Too Precious.

"Makers to his majesty" and "imported" are words that carry much weight to many minds. It is strange what a glory a foreign label can cast upon a commonplace article. The fact of a commodity having crossed the water, however, is not taken quite so seriously today as it was some fifty or sixty years ago. [illegible] C. D. Silsbee gives an instance in "A Half Century in Salem." A Famous English Clock.

Wells cathedral contains one of the most interesting clocks in the whole world. It was constructed by Peter Lightfoot, a monk, in 1320 and embraces many devices which testify to the ancient horologist's ingenuity. Several celestial and terrestrial bodies are incorporated in the interesting movement and relationship. They indicate the hours of the day, the age of the moon and the position of the planets and the tides. When the clock strikes the hour two companies of horsemen fully armed dash out of gateways in opposite directions and charge vigorously. They strike with their lances as they pass as many times as correspond with the number of the hour. A little distance away, seated on a high perch, is a quaint figure, which kicks the quarters on two bells placed beneath his feet and strikes the hours on a bell. The dial of the clock is divided into twenty-four hours and shows the phases of the moon and a map of the universe.—Harper's

Jefferson Davis and His Nerves.

Jefferson Davis shrank from the sight of every form of suffering, even in imagination. When the "Babes In the Wood" was first read to him, a grown man, in time of illness, he would not endure the horror of it. His sympathy with the oppressed was almost abnormal, "so that," says Mrs. Davis, "it was a difficult matter to keep order with children and servants." All this shows that he was nervous, sensitive, which is a terrible handicap to a leader of men. He suffered always from nervous dyspepsia and neuralgia and "came home from his office fasting, a mere mass of throbbing nerves and perfectly exhausted." He was keenly susceptible to the atmosphere about him, especially to the moods of people, "abnormally sensitive to disapproval. Even a child's disapproval discomposed him." And Mrs. Davis admits that this sensitiveness and acute feeling of being misjudged made him reserved and unapproachable. It made him touchy as to his dignity also, and there are stories of his cherishing a grudge for some insignificant or imagined slight and punishing the author of it.—Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., in Atlantic.

Irving and His Money.

John Hare, the English actor, said that one of the failings charged to Irving's account was that of extravagance—that he did not know the value of money. It is quite true he did not know the value of money for himself, but he knew its value to others. He knew its value to the poor and helpless, and to these he gave with a lavish hand.

Once, not long before his death, playing a three nights' engagement in an unpretentious midland town, his habit was to drive nightly to the theater (a very short distance from his hotel) in the same dilapidated fly. The fare was a shilling. The conveyance was shabby, the driver old, poor and worn out. At the conclusion of the engagement, on entering his hotel, Irving said to the landlord, "Have you paid the cabman?" "Yes, Sir Henry." "What did you give him for himself?" "I gave him half a crown, Sir Henry." "Give him a sovereign," was the rejoinder; "he drives very well, and he doesn't drive often."

Brougham used to tell an anecdote about the flight from Waterloo. Napoleon was greatly depressed. His aid riding beside him thought he might be sorrowing over the loss of so many old comrades at arms and tried to comfort him by saying that Wellington also must have lost many friends. "He has not lost the battle," was the reply.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future referance is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

SCHOOL NOTES

The dedication of the Lincoln high school building will take place according to program as announced in other columns of this paper. The date was changed at the suggestion of the Governor and to suit the convenience of other state officials who wish to attend the ceremonies.

The band concert last Monday evening was of a high standard and the various selections were executed with a precision which marks a confident knowledge of the subject. This splendid exhibition shows what a little effort intelligently directed may accomplish, for nearly all the performers have received their musical instruction in this city since joining the band. This is mentioned in School Notes, because the members of the two bands, with hardly an exception, are school boys and their development educationally is of interest to the teachers. Why do not two dozen more boys in the schools join the band and receive this musical instruction free? Possibly, later in life, it may open doors of employment to them which would otherwise be closed.

The Knox and Central students are preparing to play basket-ball on their own grounds. Several hundred children cannot be given sufficient opportunity for playing the game in the Lincoln gymnasium.

The Lincoln floors have received a coat of oil and the dust will now be a nuisance no longer.

The Crookston high school basketball team will try conclusions with the local boys in the gymnasium next Saturday evening. A good crowd should be present and see this first contest with an outside team this season.

The normal students are teaching nature study this week in the Washington building. They will soon be given charge of a whole room to care for it as the ordinary teacher and at the same time teach the class.

A Babcock tester has been added to the agricultural equipment and arrangements are being made to test the milk of several cows and determine the percentage of butter fat contained therein. The process is simple and the cost of the tester is so low that the machine is within the reach of every farmer. Farmers who desire to have their cows' milk tested regularly can have it done free by notifying the superintendent and sending a sample of the milk once a week.

Out of an enrollment of about 200 high school students, there are not over half a dozen who are failing to make pass marks in their studies. This is a low percentage of failure, and even this might be materially lowered if parents of the delinquent children would take the matter in hand and see that the home studies

STEINER SCHOOL NOTES

The school had a holiday yesterday as we celebrated Lincoln's birthday on Monday in place of Sunday.

Francis Reidle was on the sick list the last week.

Egbert Malberg was absent from school today.

Miss Johnson spent Saturday at at the Saugen home.

The Valentine's made by the girls last week were distributed today and no one left the school house without getting a generous share of them. We wish the birthday of St. Valentine would come every day so we could have a chance to cultivate a charitable spirit.

We wish some one would inform us as to who are the members of President Taft's cabinet or where we could find out.

There will be no school next Monday but we will have school on the 22nd of Feb. instead.

Irene Malberg and Hilda Swanson were visitors at the school house Wednesday afternoon. Come again we always like to see visitors come in and would like to see some of the patrons of the school call in once in a while.

Edwin Koglin was absent from school last week on account of being sick.

Be sure to remember the 24th. Our program begins at 7:30 sharp.

The perfect attendants of this month are: Lizzie and Ruth Furstnau and Egbert Malberg. Those missing but one or two days are: Augusta and Sarah Swanson, Louise Meyer, Emil Koglin and Ed. Swanson.

Tax list

The following is a list of personal property taxes as they will be paid this month by people of Pennington county for State, School, City, Village or town and road tax as levied by Red Lake County. A county tax of 8 mills will no doubt be levied by the commissioners of Pennington county and thus the figures below will only represent a part of your taxes for this year. The entire tax in both counties will, however, not be quite as great as it would have been on the same property had the county not been divided:

WHAT'S WHAT IN WASHINGTON

Progressive Republican League And League of Republican Clubs.

Washington, D. C. Feb. 15, 1911.—As was expected the caucus reapportionment bill went down to defeat. For once the caucus gag system failed to work, and the funny part of it was that some of the Old Guard were themselves to blame. For the time being they parted company with their associates and joined the insurgents As passed in the House, the reapportionment bill provides for a House of 433 members, practically the same number as that provided for in the original Crumpacker bill. This makes the raito of population for a district about 210,000.

• • •

Room number 201 in the Senate Office Building is a busy place of late This is Senator Bournes room but at present is used as the headquarters for the National Progressive Republican League, of which the Oregon Senator is the president. Mr. Howe a well known magazine writer and publicist is in charge of the headquarters, and has a force at work sending out literature. The move on the part of the league was to address a communication to the country, for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear to secure the adoption by the Senate of the resolution providing for the popular election of United States senators. The Senate regulars sat up and took notice when telegrams began pouring in from all parts of the country in support of the proposition. The league is certainly an active influence.

• • •

Another scheme the league has on foot is the organization throughout the country of young men's progressive republican clubs. The progressive movement is essentially a young men's movement. The league officers realizing this will make the most of it and will appeal to young men to join their ranks. From this material they expect to develop the interests and enthusiasm so essential to an active organization.

• • •

There was a banquet of the League of Republicans Clubs the other evening at which there was considerable speech-making and fluent discourse. Mr. John Hays Hammond, always a consistant admirer of President Taft, is the president of the League, not to be confounded with the National Progressive Republican League. At the banquet many of the speakers bewailed the fact that qualifying adjectives should be employed to describe a persons Republicanism. One speaker took a swat at the progressives in quite a decided fashion. On the whole is was evident that the League of Republican Clubs which is of several years growth and has always been closely indentified with the organization Republicans, is not altogether friendly to the National Progressive Republican League.

• • •

This recalls to mind the activity of the League of Republican Clubs about a year ago in Minnesota and other Middle West States. At that time the Hammond organization was quietly working to head off Insurgency: Some of the insurgent Congressmen were especially distasteful. Jesse M. Turner, one of the Club organizers, was sent to Minnesota, but when his mission became known such an uproar was made that he was quietly withdrawn.

• • •

It will not be possible for the regular Republicans to upbraid their insurgent brethern hereafter for failure to abide by the action of a party caucus. Sixteen Republicans fifteen of whom are regulars ignored the action of the party caucus in voting for the Crumpacker reapportionment bill, fixing the House membership at 433. This the regulars themselves are bringing the caucus system into disrepute.

• • •

Unless there is an extra session work on the remodeling of the hall of the House of Representatives will be commenced immediately upon the adjournment of Congress. Under the plans adopted the hall will be made smaller and bench seats substituted for the present swivel seats. Of interest to Minnesota readers is the news that Superintendent of the Capitol Woods is contemplating using the fine yellow Kasota stone for the interior finish of the remodeled hall. The cost of the improvements is fixed by statute at $350,000.

• • •

The Democrats are worrying somewhat lest they center almost all of the important committee chairmanship in the South. This is a very natural thing to do, and at the same time hard to avoid, owing to the fact that the ranking Democratic members of the House are practically all from the South. However, it is recognized that if the Democrats are to win in the next Presidential fight, they must make big gains in the North. They must give Northern men a chance on the big committees, a voice in making measures.

• • •

The President has called in the assistance of Secretary of Agriculture Wilson to convince the farmers that the proposed treaty with Canada will not hurt the farmer. The present fight is making some peculiar alligniments. The insurgents from States effected by the proposed trade agreement are for the most part opposed. So are the regulars. Down in Indiana Beveridge, a staunch insurgent is lined up for the treaty. For the first time in many months he is out in the open in a proposition opposed by Senators like Clapp, La Follette and Cummins.

• • •

There is a man living in Washington at the present time who owns the saddle used by Bob Younger in the famous Northfield raid. E. R. Ruggles, formerly of Fairbault, Minnesota is the owner of the saddle in question. He is at present employed on the Capitol police force, but his home is in Todd county, Minn. After the raid the horses belonging to the party were found in a woods In the vicinity of Waterville, Le Sueur county. They were brought back to Fairbault and finally disposed of at public auction. J. H. Passon, of Fairbault, the father-in-law of Mr. Ruggles bought the horse belonging to Bob Younger, and with it the saddle which is prized very highly.

• • •

Congressman Steenerson has succeeded in securing favorable action on the special pension bill in behalf of William Chapman, a prominent veteran of the Civil War, who resides at Fergus Falls, the amount carried being $24 per month. Mr. Chapman served in Co. F, Second Minnesota Volunteer Infantry.

President Taft and Champ Clark Advocate Trade Pacts.

SPEAK FROM SAME PLATFORM

Chief Exec[illegible] of the Next [illegible] Session [illegible]. Urge C[illegible] Trade [illegible] Between Canada, North and South America and, in Fact, All Nations.

Washington, Feb. 14.—Reciprocity with Canada, reciprocity with all countries of North and South America, reciprocity, in fact, with all nations was advocated by both President Taft and Speaker to Be Champ Clark in stirring addresses at the opening session of the Pan-American conference.

Speeches favoring a closer commercial union of North and South America, with frequent reference to the future influence of the Panama canal, were made by Secretary of State Knox, James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel corporation; Senor Calvo, the Costa Rican minister to the United States; Senor Calderon, the Bolivian minister to the United Staes, and Senator Casasus, formerly the Mexican ambassador to this country. Nearly six hundred delegates and almost the entire diplomatic corps were present.

Champ Clark announced in his address amid loud applause that the test vote for immediate consideration of the Canadian reciprocity bill had been won by the administration. Turning to President Taft, he said laughingly:

"That's a document the president and myself own in partnership. But speaking for myself—not for President Taft or any one else—I am for reciprocity, not only with Canada, but with all South and Central American republics. In fact, I am in favor of reciprocity with all nations of the earth."

"The last speaker and the next speaker and I," said President Taft, who followed Mr. Clark, "have gotten together on one plank of a platform; we're both rather heavy men and I hope it'll support us. It's a great pleasure to be with him in the promotion of trade in one part of the world—Canada. He's in favor of reciprocity in all parts of the world and so am I. In anticipation of his coming to be head of the great popular branch of the legislature we have already gotten together on the most important matter and I hope we can carry it through."

In Charge of Reciprocity Measure in the House.

COPYRIGHT BY CLINEDINST, WASH., D.C.

COURT BALL IS CANCELLED

Illness of Emperor William Said to Be Serious.

Berlin, Feb. 14.—The indisposition of Emperor William apparently is more serious than has been indicated in the official announcements, though it is insisted that no anxiety concerning the outcome is felt.

The first bulletins described his majesty as suffering from a cold, but with the absence of any fever. Subsequently it was admitted an attack of feverish influenza had been experienced.

It is said the emperor is up, after two days in bed, but that he will be confined to his chamber until the end of the present week. The court ball set for Wednesday night has been cancelled.

REAPPORTIONMENT PASSES THE HOUSE

Measure Provides for a Body of 433 Members.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Minnesota's representation in the house will be increased from nine to ten members under the terms of the apportionment bill passed by the house. This measure, which provides for a house of 433 members, will be concurred in by the senate and approved by the president.

The action of the house will enable state legislatures now in session to redistrict the congressional subdivisions on the basis of a population of 213,025 for each member, an additional member being allowed in a number of instances for major fractions. The representation of North and South Dakota is increased, respectively, from two to three members, Montana from one to two, while Iowa and Wisconsin each maintains its present representation, eleven members.

Under the new reapportionment plan no state loses a member. The following states gain the number indicated: Alabama, 1; California, 3; Colorado, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 1; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 2; Louisiana, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Michigan, 1; Minnesota, 1; Montana, 1; New Jersey, 2; New York, 6; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 1; Oklahoma, 3; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 4; Rhode Island, 1; South Dakota, 1; Texas, 2; Utah, 1; Washington, 2; West Virginia, 1.

CINCINNATI HAS A SCANDAL

Deputy Tax Collector Is Indicted on Bribery Charges.

Cincinnati, Feb. 9.—Six indictments charging bribery were returned by the Hamilton county grand jury against Jacob Bascharg, deputy tax collector and prominent in local political circles.

The bills follow an inquiry into alleged fraudulent practices by which certain large breweries are said to have obtained refunds of liquor taxes.

EXPLOSION KILLS FIVE MEN

Powder in Tunnel at Kitselas, B. C., Overheated in Thawing.

Hazelton, B. C., Feb. 14.—Five men were killed and two severely injured as the result of a premature explosion in a tunnel at Kitselas, B. C. A box of powder, left to thaw out, became overheated. The dead are: M. F. Burgess, stationman; Charles Quarnstrom, W. E. Kova, Eli and John Hazavitch.

Transport Lost or Captured.

Constantinople, Feb. 12.—The transport Mamora, carrying troops and war munitions to the Yemen, where the natives are in revolt, is reported as having been lost with all on board in the Red sea. Another version is that the transport was captured by pirates, but this is denied by the war office.

FIRE IN BUSINESS DISTRICT

Postoffice and Other Buildings Burn at Collins, Ia.

Nevada, Ia., Feb. 14.—Fire of unknown origin which broke out in the Fuller restaurant destroyed a portion of the business district of Collins, this county, and for a time endangered the entire town. The loss will be about $30,000. The Fuller restaurant, a vacant building, the postoffice, its contents and records, the offices and fixtures of Doctors Robertson and Sopher, and the Flower hotel were destroyed.

TEST INDICATES BILL WILL PASS

House Votes to Take Up McCall Reciprocity Measure.

MARGIN WILL BE SUBSTANTIAL

On Motion to Set Aside a Rule and Take Up the Bill the Vote Stood 197 to 120.

Washington, Feb. 14.—A test vote taken in the house of representatives on the McCall bill embodying the terms of the Canadian agreement demonstrated conclusively the measure will be passed by that body by a substantial majority. The plan of the leaders is to pass it before adjournment and hurry it over to the senate.

Things are now looking up for Canadian reciprocity in the senate. While it is by no means certain the pact will be concurred in by that body the outlook for favorable action there is more promising now than it has been any time since President Taft transmitted his special message to congress on the subject.

The McCall bill was taken up in the house in the face of a rule setting aside the day for the consideration of business affecting the affairs of the District of Columbia. It therefore became necessary for the friends of Canadian reciprocity to set aside the rule and they did so by a majority of 197 to 120, thus making it plain that whatever the fate of the agreement in the senate, the house intended to follow the lead of President Taft. Here again it would demonstrate that, without the aid of the Democrats, the president's proposal would have gone down to defeat in the house.

Committee Reports Bill.

The house committee reported the McCall bill by a vote of 12 to 7, six Democrats joining with six Republicans in making the report, while six Republicans voted adversely on the proposition.

In open house 101 Republican members voted against the motion providing for the immediate consideration of the McCall bill. Nineteen Democrats sided against the bill on this test vote. The motion was adopted by the votes of 134 Democrats, 63 Republicans.

The Republicans who voted in opposition came from the agricultural states of the Northwest and New England, a few from New York and the border states and a number from the Middle West.

Among the prominent Republicans who took advantage of the occasion to express their approval of reciprocity as laid down by the president were Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Fordney of Michigan, Hull of Iowa and Kiefer of Ohio.

A further analysis of the vote shows the Republicans who lined up against Canadian reciprocity were men who have been closely allied with the Cannon organization and the progressives from the West. The progressives, almost without exception, voted against the motion to take up the McCall bill.

TAFT TALKS RECIPROCITY

Says Pact With Canada Will Benefit Entire United States.

Columbus, O., Feb. 11.—Reciprocity with Canada will benefit the entire United States, farmer, manufacturer, railroad company, middleman, warehouseman. This was the declaration made by President Taft in an address made here at the National Corn exposition. "All will be the gainer," he said.

While his speech was devoted especially to showing that the farmer had nothing to fear, but much to gain, he attempted to prove also that all the other interests of the country would be benefited by the proposed reciprocity.

"We have with pioneer energy pushed on to the Pacific," the president said, "and taken up all the good land. We are now spending millions to reclaim the arid and semi-arid lands of the great Western desert. Should we not by taking down a useless and unnecessary tariff wall bring within our agricultural resources the great plains of the Northwest when they can bring us what we need and that without hurting any of our own people?"

STUDENTS RIOT IN RUSSIA

Fifteen Hundred Taken in by Police for Strike Demonstration.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 14.—Fifteen hundred students were arrested here for attempting to prevent the scheduled lectures at the University of St. Petersburg. The demonstration was engineered by the students who have been on strike against the government's interference in the courses of studies.

General Webb Is Dead.

New York, Feb. 14.—General Alexander Stewart Webb, who as chief of staff of General Meade repulsed the Confederate charge under Pickett at Cemetery hill and held "Bloody Angle" at Spottsylvania, is dead here. He was born in New York in 1835.

Mr. Neller was the founder of the Northwestern National bank and the Union National bank of Minneapolis. He came to Minneapolis from Pennsylvania in 1869.

AGED PRELATE PASSES AWAY

Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia Is Dead.

HAD NATIONAL REPUTATION

Was Noted as a Pulpit Orator and Was Popular With Men of All Denominations.

Philadelphia, Feb. 11.—Rev. Patrick John Ryan, archbishop of Philadelphia and metropolitan of Pennsylvania, died at 4:08 p. m. at the archepiscopal residence in this city.

Archbishop Ryan was considered the greatest of the line of bishops and archbishops that have occupied the episcopal see of Philadelphia since its erection in 1808. His reputation was national and in his home city he was accorded a popular recognition that far surpassed that of any of his predecessors, he having been on the friendliest terms with men of all religious denominations. He was one of the foremost pulpit orators in the Catholic church in this country.

The archbishop was born in Thurles, County of Tipperary, Ireland, on Feb 20, 1831. His ancestors on the paternal side were originally the O'Ryans who figure in Irish history. His parents died when he was very young and his youthful education was received from the Christian Brothers at Arles.

Young Ryan studied at the Carlow seminary and later came to this country, going to St. Louis, where he was appointed a professor in Carondelet seminary. On Sept. 8, 1853, he was ordained a priest by Archbishop Kenrick. In 1856 he was made rector of the St. Louis cathedral and four years later was placed in charge of the Church of the Annunciation. In 1872 Father Ryan was consecrated coadjutor bishop of St. Louis, with the right of succession, and in 1884 he was appointed archbishop of Philadelphia.

SHIP SUBSIDY PROBE ENDS

Report of Special Committee Will Deny Charge of Lobbying.

Washington, Feb. 14.—After many months of investigation the hearings of a special house committee to probe into charges of lobbying in the interest of ship subsidy legislation in congress have closed.

The final witness was Edward J. Berwind of New York, president of a coal company and interested in the International Merchant Marine company and the Consolidated Steamship company. Mr. Berwind said he knew nothing directly or indirectly regarding any lobby and had no information which would throw light on the matter.

The committee will draft its report soon, which it is said will show the investigation has developed no substantiation of the allegations of lobbying.

TO FORCE LORDS' VETO BILL

Asquith's Aids Are Preparing List of Possible New Peers.

London, Feb. 14.—Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons that he would introduce the government's veto bill next monday.

As evidence of the government's intention to force this measure through John W. Gulland, the Scottish Liberal whip, stated in a speech at Edinburgh that he was busy just now compiling a list of men who would accept peerages with the object of passing the veto bill in the upper chamber, in the event that the Conservative peers proved recalcitrant.

MOTHER OF JAMES BOYS DEAD

Expires Suddenly on Railway Train in Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Feb. 11.—Mrs. Zerelda Samuel, eighty-six years old, mother of Frank and Jesse James, the former bandits, died on a St. Louis and San Francisco railway train fifteen miles north of here. She was on the way to Kansas City from the home of her son Frank, who lives on a farm near Fletcher, Okla. Mrs. Samuel had been visiting her son there for two months.

BODIES TORN TO FRAGMENTS

Ten Men Killed When Locomotive Explodes.

Smithville, Tex., Feb. 10.—Ten shop employes of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad were torn to fragments and seven others were injured when an engine under repair exploded in the Smithville yards. Besides the loss of life railroad property valued at $20,000 was destroyed.

The locomotive had just been run from the repair shop to be tested when the explosion occurred. The engine was blown to atoms, two other locomotives standing near were wrecked and the roundhouse was partially demolished.

CORONER SUSPECTS MURDER

Investigation of Burned Cabin Brings Gruesome Facts to Light.

Duluth, Feb. 14.—While Deputy Coroner H. G. Seeley does not say so directly his conduct in the investigation of the death of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Newman, the Minneapolis couple whose charred bodies were found in the burned ruins of their cabin two miles from Allen Junction, establishes the belief that he thinks the couple were murdered and robbed.

Mr. Newman had his clothes on when he died in the cabin. The clothing was all burned, but the buckles of his vest were under the remains, and other facts establish the fact that he was not in bed when the cabin burned.

Some of the kitchen utensils of the Newman house were found hidden near the cabin. Articles of jewelry which bore marks of identification are the only ones that have not been recovered.

AN ACCOUNT CLOSED

By JOSEPHINE SHELTON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

The Countess Paula Kronevna stepped from her gondola and went into her palazzio. Not that she lived at Venice; she lived nowhere very long at one time, but she was rich enough to hire a palace now at Rome, now at Florence, and when she was in Paris, Berlin or Vienna, there being no palaces for rent in those capitals, she would usually take some notable dwelling. The countess had no more fixed position in society than in the matter of residence.

Entering her drawing room, she found a man waiting for her. There was nothing in his apparel to indicate that he had called upon the countess as a visitor. He was ten years her senior, but looked twenty years older than she. His hair was perfectly white. His face was furrowed and bore traces of having endured suffering. His eye gave evidence of the same strain.

"You wish to see me?" asked the countess, scrutinizing the man as one who fears every stranger lest he come on an errand of revenge or justice.

"I have waited an hour for you. But, the afternoon being fine and your ladyship doubtless having enjoyed your trip on the Grand canal, I would not have hurried you for the world. I have been looking forward to this meeting for years. Surely minutes, even an hour or two, could not make much difference."

"I do not know you."

"That is not surprising. One doesn't retain a smooth cheek at Kara. Besides, I have been through a number of hunger strikes. Then traveling through an ice wilderness for months would not bring the same ruddy complexion as being rowed by a gondolier on the Grand canal at Venice."

The bloom in the countess' face was whitened like a rose touched by a frost. She knew now who the man was and stood listening to him without reply.

"You remember a little maid, the daughter of a peasant living on the estate of a nobleman in Russia? No flower in his conservatory possessed the exuberant beauty of this child just about to bud into womanhood. And she had a mind to use it, too, to what she considered the best advantage. During her early teens she captured with it the son of the nobleman on whose estate she lived. She married him.

"But, his people not relishing their blood being mixed with the peasantry and being convinced, that her motives were not of the purest, would have nothing to do with her. But they paid her well to stay away from them and, her young husband discovering that her heart was as cold as the bloom in her cheek was warm, let her go. Indeed, she did not ask him to go with her.

"The next he heard of his little wife was at St. Petersburg. She had more money than she had received from her husband's family, but it was not known from whence it came. A certain grand duke was attentive to her, so much so that, since grand dukes marry only with royalty, her reputation suffered. But she was playing a bold game. She willed that her imperial lover should marry her. But, having a husband already, this was impossible. It might not be impossible if she could get rid of her husband.

"One day when out shooting he was attacked by a party of men. Having captured him, they took him to the superintendent of police, and he joined the next caravan setting out for Siberia.

"His wife had made a failure. He was to have been executed, but the czar would not consent.

"But if she might not be a grand duchess she might at least possess enormous wealth. Her imperial lover lavished millions upon her—millions that her husband, among others, was taking from the Kara mines, impelled to work, whether able to do so or not, by the knout. For twenty years he helped to add to these riches that were lavished upon his wife. Then one day an opportunity occurred; he escaped from the prison and started for a land of freedom.

"And now he is here to quit once more his peasant life."

He ceased to speak, and the countess stood waiting for him to continue. Since he did not she asked:

"And what are your intentions concerning me?"

"I have no intentions concerning you. But there is a transaction that has not appeared in the story I have told, and the Russian government has intentions which will be made manifest through the king of Italy."

The countess caught at a piece of furniture near which she stood and swayed like a reed shaken by the wind.

"A generation has passed," the visitor continued. "The grand duke is dead, and there is a new czar of Russia."

The woman summoned voice to ask:

"When will they be here?"

"Not soon enough to occasion undue haste on your part, but too soon to enable you to leave Italy."

The countess walked to a cabinet, opened a drawer, took out an ivory handled revolver and, putting it to her temple, pulled the trigger.

Half an hour later the government police of Italy entered the countess' palazzio and found her lying on the floor dead. There was no one else present.

Where He Drew the Line.

Thomas was an old gamekeeper on Sir Greville's Scotch estate, says Sir William Kennedy in "Sport In the Navy." When he was sixty years old he contracted measles and was very ill for a time. Sir Greville, with characteristic kindness, sent the old man some hothouse grapes and a pineapple. The next time the two met Sir Greville asked Thomas how he liked the fruit.

"Weel, Sir Greville," answered the gamekeeper, "the plums was good, but I dinna think much of the turnip."

An Unfortunate Encomium

By EDWARD IGLEHART

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

I married an unconscious beauty.

Now, everybody knows that beauty if it is unconscious is a very nice thing, but as soon as it becomes conscious it breeds vanity, and vanity is the mother of a large brood of troubles. My wife and myself—we are both Vans—belong to the older aristocracy of New York. None of our ancestors would have thought of associating with the ancestors of persons who are now in the swim and to whose circle we were not admitted. They care nothing about our ancestors, though many of them have heard of my father, who was a distinguished commodore in the navy, and my wife's grandmother, who was a celebrated New York belle. The places once occupied by these worthy people are now filled with the descendants of those who sold them oysters and fish and whose wealth runs away up into the millions.

But my wife and I were happy until a certain remark was repeated to her. One of our old family connections who owns a box in the "diamond horseshoe"—so called from being that gallery of the Metropolitan Opera House occupied by the multimillionaires—gave us the use of it for one night. The favor nearly caused our ruin. Soon after that night at the opera Gertrude's cousin, who gave us the box, said to my wife:

"The Earl of Chapperton, recently from London, asked me who was the lady in my box on Thursday night, saying at the same time: 'She's the most beautiful woman I ever saw. London could not furnish anything equal to her?'"

The remark was not only repeated to my wife, but was talked about at every function held by the golden set. It finally came to Gertrude added to in this wise: "What a pity that Mrs. Van Valkenburg doesn't take the position in society that half a century ago was occupied by her grandmother, the beautiful Betty Van Wyke."

From that moment my dear wife got the society bee in her bonnet. "Our family has always kept up in the world till the present generation," she said. "We have $10,000 a year, and on that we could get on in society. Connections of ours in the swim would introduce us, and our especial associates would be of the older aristocratic set who are not so rich as these new commercial people."

"My dear," I protested, "our $10,000 income would not keep us in the swim a month."

"Not with your management," she retorted, "but a woman can always make money go further than a man. Let me try. I will show you what I can do."

Like a fool I was persuaded. My wife had no trouble in penetrating the society skirmish line because of the remark of the Earl of Chapperton, which was on every one's lips. She received a number of invitations, but found that she must make considerable outlay for costumes before she could accept any of them. And since the costumes she must rival cost all the way from several hundred to several thousand dollars, and she must have a different costume for each function, the amount soon ran up to a third of our total income. Since our ordinary necessary expenditures required the other two-thirds, it was evident we would soon run upon the rocks. But what is the one matter of a woman's costumes, expensive though they be, compared with the thousand and one other luxuries that must be provided by people of fashion. One dinner alone we felt obliged to give cost us $500, and it was considered plain at that.

We permeated the outer social line and were making some headway into the inner circle. We were both disappointed in discovering that we must be civil to a number of the wives of young multimillionaires who had married actresses, and my wife had discovered that society was not composed of such persons as her grandmother had shone among. Then something happened that called a halt to our advance.

A certain Mrs. Van Valkenburg, whose income was some $2,000,000 a year and who was as homely as a hedge fence, caused it to be given out —for a consideration, the price being invitations to certain social climbers to her soirees—that a mistake had been made in reporting Earl Chapperton's remark as to the most beautiful woman in New York. The Mrs. Van Valkenburg referred to was the lady with the $2,000,000 income.

Everybody sneered, but as all understood that to gainsay this edict would cost them the enmity of one of the most powerful women in New York society no one dared to lisp a word to the contrary. The earl had returned to England and was not to be even questioned on the subject. The moment his lordship's compliment was appropriated by another my wife ceased to be an object of curiosity and, as she had no other claim to be admitted to society, was dropped. Besides, any further attention to her was sure to be resented by the other Mrs. Van Valkenburg.

When the battle was over I discovered that we had eaten upon our capital sufficiently to reduce our income one-half. I was thankful that we were beaten off before all was exhausted.

When my wife grumbles at the halving of our income I never mention the cause. I have a regard for the tuft of hair on the top of my head.

Phil May's Habits.

The all night and next day habits of Phil May, the artist, have furnished material for many a story. Joe Tapley, the singer, said that he came across May one night and heard that the latter had not been to bed for four nights and days. He remonstrated, and May said: "Never mind, Joe; we'll make a bargain. Don't you lose any sleep on my account, and I'll promise that as soon as I feel tired I'll go to bed."

A New Settlement

And How It Came to Be Made

By CAROLINE A. TRIPP

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

There were portions of the wild and woolly west—or what was formerly the wild and woolly west—for the silken mantle of civilization is fast spreading over the whole land—where the dividing line between honesty and dishonesty was not distinctly marked. The privations were great, and many of the people found it difficult to make a living. There was no law to keep the honest separated from the dishonest, and this alone tended to obliterate the dividing line.

One day two plainsmen went to a land office to enter some land. While there one of them told the following story:

"Last week," he said, "me and Josh was movin' toward the mountings on a prospecting trip. We had two good ridin' hosses and a pack hoss. One day we found a fine campin' ground beside a stream whar the trout was jist jumpin' outen the water to be ketched, and we concluded to rest thar a couple o' days. So we pitched our tent and got out our cookin' kit and calc'lated to spend the time like nabobs.

"The next afternoon, when we was layin' off smokin' our pipes, we saw a couple o' men comin' outen the timber on the crick. Ketchin' sight of us, they turned at fust, but we hollered to 'em to come on, and they jined us. They was youngish chaps, neither ov 'em havin' yit growed a beard. We offered 'em the demijohn, but they didn't seem to relish liquor much; mebby they wasn't old enough to have learned. We offered 'em pipes, but they didn't seem inclined to smoke neither.

"They told us they was in camp in a patch of timber a ways down the crick, and after stayin' awhile with us they went away.

"'What d'ye s'pose them kids is a-doin' over yere?' says Josh when they was gone.

"'They're hoss thieves,' I says.

"'Hoss thieves. They don't look nuthin' like hoss thieves.'

"'Like enough they belong to some family as is mighty hard up, and the only way for sich in this yere country to make a haul is to run off hosses, sell 'em and stock up. We'll picket the stock strong tonight, fur it's my opinion these young fellers 'll try to stampede 'em.'

"We made everything as fast as we could. The moon was full, and the country was lit up like day. Me and Josh smoked till near 9 o'clock, it must 'a' been, then turned in. We was awakened by hearin' the stock rushin' this way and that way tryin' to break the ropes, and we heard whoops like Indians, only they was more like squaws and papooses than bucks. Then come shots. The hosses was nigh crazy with fright, but we had tied 'em so strong they couldn't get away.

"'Josh,' I says, says I, 'them young fellers is doin' what I said they'd do. Get your gun and let's go for 'em.'

"'I don't want to kill a boy fur a hoss,' said Josh, 'especially if he's starvin'.'

"'Well, we can't let 'em do what they like with our property. Come on.'

"We lit out to whar the sounds come from, and the first thing the kids knowed we was right on 'em. They run, and we chased 'em. One of 'em tripped and fell. I sat on him while Josh chased the other and after a hard run brought him in. We took 'em to camp and in order to frighten 'em told 'em we was goin' to hang 'em to the limb of a tree.

"They knowed well enough that's what's done to hoss thieves, and they believed we was in earnest. What d'ye s'pose they did. They begun to cry. This give us such contempt fur 'em that I says to Josh, says I:

"'Sich snivelin' younkers oughtn't to be 'lowed to live. They'll never make men, and the women wouldn't have 'em around. Let's string 'em up shore.'

"Then one of 'em said, wringin' his hands: 'We hain't men: we're gals. Our folks is starvin' over thar, and we tried to git yer stock to sell 'em and git somepin fur the children.'

"Me and Josh looked at each other. 'I be doggoned,' says I, 'if ever I saw sich hoss thieves before. What luck we didn't shoot at 'em!'

"'I told you,' says Josh, 'I wouldn't like to kill one of 'em.'

"We give up the tent to 'em and the blankets and made 'em as comfortable as could, and Josh and I built a fire and lay down by it for the rest o' the night. Next mornin' we give 'em a fine breakfast ov hard tack and bacon washed down with coffee. Then we told 'em we'd go and see what we could do fur their folks. We found jist what the gals said we'd find. There wor three families in a mighty bad way not only fur food, but other things.

"When the gals got on their own clothes they was good lookin', and I offered to marry one if Josh'd marry t'other and settle down and take care of the hull crowd, see'n' there warn't no men among 'em, the men havin been killed off either by Indians or fur hoss stealin'. Josh agreed, and we flipped up fur fust choice. Josh won it, but I didn't keer, since they wor both fine gals.

"We axed 'em if they'd agree to our plan, and they said they didn't see how they could help themselves.

"We just been married, and we're goin' to make a settlement on this land we're squatted on."

Playful Monkeys.

Apes and gorillas are usually vicious and resentful and less addicted to playful tricks than the common monkey. Indeed, the monkey, as we all know, is a trickster both in his wild and domestic state. In their native forests monkeys spend hours in swinging from the branches of trees, suspended by their tails and chattering and grimacing with evident signs of delight. Humboldt mentions seeing over a hundred so employed in a South American forest.

HIS TAPESTRIES.

The Gems the Collector Bought and Showed to the Expert.

That the collector falls into a trap occasionally is shown by an episode which we recall. An enthusiastic purchaser of old tapestries was once offered in Paris a masterpiece executed on a large scale and held at a large figure. Consulting an expert, he was urged to buy, but the sum demanded seemed to him at the moment a good deal to invest in a tapestry, and he let the opportunity pass.

A year or so later he met his friend, the expert aforesaid, and asked him to come to his house to look at two tapestries he had just secured. "They are smaller," he said, "than the one you advised me to buy and which, to tell the truth, I have always regretted, and I paid twice as much for them as I was asked to pay for that glorious piece, but, while it seemed a fearful lot of money to spend I simply couldn't resist the chance."

The specialist in tapestries walked into the gallery of the proud collector and gazed upon his prizes. He gazed for a time in silence and then had to be very guarded in his speech of congratulation. He was looking at the original tapestry, which his friend could have had for half the money, now neatly cut in two and supplied with borders. He never revealed to the victim of this ingenious little game what precisely had happened.—New York Tribune.

Antiquity of Shorthand.

Shorthand is apt to be looked upon as an essentially modern art. The predecessors of Pitman—Byrom in the eighteenth century, Mason in the seventeenth—are dim and distant figures beyond which it seems useless to venture. Cicero dictated his orations to his freedman, T. Tullius Tiro, and was inconsolable when temporarily deprived of his services. He complained in a letter to a friend that, while "Tiro takes down whole phrases in a few signs, Spintharus (his provisional substitute) only writes in syllables." We need not, however, suppose that the "notae Tironianae" were actually invented by the freedman in question. As M. Guenin points out, the Romans created very few of the arts of peace, contenting themselves, as a rule, by copying from the Greeks. M. Guenin, however, indicates the banks of the Nile as the cradle of the art.—T. P.'s London Weekly.

A Benevolent Censor.

A trio of young ladies spent some weeks last year at an out of the way village in the mountain region. They found the village postmaster a quaint old character, whose ways were as original as they were startling, so that the daily trip to the postoffice became a real event.

"Is there any mail for us, major?" asked one of the young ladies as she appeared at the window one morning.

"No; they ain't a thing for you all this mawnin', Miss Mary," was the reply. "They wasn't nothin' come for you but a letter that looked like advertisin', an' so I opened it, and sure enough it was jest some advertisement about somethin' or other, and I says to myself, says I, 'Now, Miss Mary don't want to tote such stuff as that home with her,' and so I throwed it in the waste box."—Youth's Companion.

Lights His Pipe In a Gale.

I write as one who has smoked in his time more matches than most people, and it will be understood how I regard the bus driver's ability in lighting a pipe. A gale may be blowing, the horses requiring special attention, his left eye engaged on the reflection of the omnibus in shop windows, a passenger inquiring who won the Derby in 1884, constables issuing directions with the right arm, a fare hailing him from the pavement, and amid all these distractions he can strike one wooden match, hold it in the curve of his hand and the tobacco is well alight. Also while hats are blowing about the streets in the manner of leaves in autumn his headgear never goes from its place, rarely moves from the angle decided on the first journey. I have always assumed that he takes it off at night before retiring to rest, but to part with it must mean a terrible wrench.—London Express.

Steel Pen Helps Forgers.

The crime of forgery has been facilitated and increased by the modern introduction of metallic pens, gold and steel, says a writer in the Indianapolis News. The old fashioned quill pen was smooth and pleasant to write with though it sometimes balked and sputtered, but it did not lend itself to skillful imitations as easily as the metallic pen does. The crime of forgery doubtless has been promoted by the almost universal education of modern times. In an age when everybody writes and when many are skillful penmen forgeries are much more frequent than they were centuries ago, when the person who could handle a pen was an exception. Many modern criminals make a living by committing forgeries, victimizing hotels, banks, capitalists and business men generally.

The Admirable Korean.

With all his languor, the Korean is a particularly agreeable person. He is the polished gentleman in the setting of the savage. He is one of nature's cheerful spirits—a Mark Tapley who goes whistling through life despite the multiplication of his misfortunes. He is the victim of his own good nature and is content to sit unconcernedly on his boundary fence and witness the robbery of his estates. It is a pleasure to visit Korea if only to meet the Korean himself, says the Japan Weekly Chronicle, for he is the happy-go-lucky, good tempered simpleton who unconsciously contributes to the pleasure of others.

HOT DRINKS.

If Taken Above 130 Degrees They Injure the Stomach.

Many people without realizing it are in the habit of drinking tea at much too high a temperature, Sir Henry Thompson points out in his book on "Diet In Relation to Age and Activity."

"Few persons are aware that they habitually swallow hot liquids, tea especially, at a temperature which if applied to the hands or feet would inflict painful scalds. Most tea drinkers take it about 140 to 145 degrees F., which the mouth bears very well if slowly sipped, while the cup itself is too hot to be held by any hand.

"But the habit of swallowing such tea is injurious to the stomach, and it ought not to be taken above 130 degrees or so. Again, water at 120 degrees, which feels a little more than lukewarm in the mouth, causes severe pain if the hand is dipped in it and cannot be endured."

He has, however, some good words to say for the early morning tea.

"This morning tea in any case should be taken at least an hour and a half before the first meal of the day. For many years I have been accustomed to write for an hour every morning in bed after tea, as I am doing at this moment, and at no time do I find the brain clearer for work, while the appetite for solid food is excellent when the hour for breakfast arrives."

Always Feminine.

A young chap was walking along a business street with a very pretty girl when he happened to glance into a couple of windows where the latest styles of men's overcoats and suits were displayed. The girl noticed it. She stopped and exclaimed: "What a dandy overcoat! Why don't you get one of those, Bob? You'll look fine inside of that."

She looked at everything in that window, and the young chap was delighted at her interest in men's clothes.

"You're all right, Grace," said he. "That's what I like about you. Most girls would rather look at lingerie waists than at a man's overcoat and suits."

The girl laughed. "Well, Bob," said she, "to be perfectly honest, the mirrors in that window are something to cry for. I was trying to see if my hat was on straight!"

Odd Signs.

A tinman in the south of England has a sign which reads, "Quart Measures of All Shapes and Sizes Sold Here."

At a market town in the midlands the following placard was affixed to the shutters of a watchmaker who had decamped, leaving his confiding creditors mourning: "Wound Up and the Mainspring Broke."

In one of the principal streets of another small town the same shop was occupied by a doctor and a shoemaker, the man of medicine having the front and he of the leather working in the rear. Over the door hung the sign, "We Repair Both Body and Sole."

On the window of a coffee room there one day appeared the notice, "This Coffee Room Removed Upstairs Till Repaired."

Throat Trouble.

"You look bad, old man. What's the matter?"

"Throat trouble."

"I didn't know you were subject to it."

"Yes, I am. This throat belongs to the newcomer in the next house, who practices singing at all hours of the night."

A Willing Witness.

"Did his actions have an air of verisimilitude?" the lawyer asked the witness.

"What was that, sir?"

"I say, did his conduct wear an air of verisimilitude?"

"Oh," replied the witness. "Sure. He was versimilitudin' all round the place."—Saturday Evening Post.

Women and Their Idols.

"Women adore idols."

"Do they?"

"Don't they? Why, when a woman's idol proves human she's stronger for it than ever."—Toledo Blade.

An unjust acquisition is like a barbed arrow, which must be drawn backward with horrible anguish or else will be your destruction.—Jeremy Taylor.

Plaid and Tartan.

Will the southron ever learn that "plaid" is not a synonym for "tartan?" Not long ago an Englishman came into a hosier's establishment in Glasgow and asked a man behind the counter to show him some "plaid ties." The attendant, perhaps wondering what this new and weird article of wearing apparel could be, was completely baffled until explanation elicited the fact that a necktie with a tartan design was required. Dickens, too, is a sinner in this respect, for he makes Bob Sawyer say with regard to whether his political proclivities are "buff" or "blue"—"I'm a kind of plaid at present, a compound of all sorts of colors." Moreover, an English dictionary gives an adjectival meaning of "plaid" as "colored in squares." I've never heard such use in Scotland. Has any one else?—Scottish Field.

The Spit Snake.

There is a snake belonging to the small family causidae, inhabiting Africa, that is said to have the power of ejecting its venom to a short distance. This snake is called by the Dutch Boers "spuw slang," or spit snake. When this snake erects its teeth the pressure of the maxillary bone on the gland causes the venom to flow in drops, and it may be quite possible that by discharging air from its mouth the poison may be blown some distance.

FROSHAUG WINS IN THE CONTEST

Lynn Haines Gives Views on Senatorial Contest. Minor Items.

Deliberately, designedly, defiantly did the friends of Farrington tamper with ballot boxes and reverse the verdict of the voters in the senatorial election in the 56th legislative district. This is my opinion. But no statement of mine could in candor or conclusiveness approach the emphatic charges of fraud made by members of the Senate in discussing this contest last Friday.

!!!!!!*

First consider how the Senate voted and then I shall suggest some of the significant phases of the case:

FOR FROSHAUG- Bedford. Benson Boyle, Clauge, Dale, Duca, Duxbury, Dwinnell, Elwell, Fossen, Gunderson, Hanson, Haycraft, V. L. Johnson, Klein, Lende, Harden, Nelson, Odell, Peterson Putnam, Rockne, Rustad, Sageng, Saugstad, Swanson, Sundberg, Swanson Thoe, Wallace and Wilson-31

FOR FARRINGTON- Ahmann, Anderson, Carpenter, Sheadle, Coller C. F. Cook, L. O. Cooke, Denegre, Donaldson, Dunn, Glotzbach, Gunn, Handlan, C. D. Johnson, Johnston, L'Herault, McGrath, Moonan, Muray Olson. Pauly, Poehler, Pugh, Schaller, Stebbins, G. H. Sullivan J. D. Sullivan, Van Hoven, Weis and Works.- 30.

It will be remembered that there was a three- cornered contest for state senators in the district comprising Swift and Big Stone Counties. The candidates were T. J. McElligott, republican; Ray Farrington democrat; and S. J. Froshaug, prohibitionist. The canvassing board declared the latter elected by a plurality of twenty-one votes over Farrington, who in turn led McElligott by a few votes. Farrington instituted a contest and the recount gave him a plurality of twenty-two votes. The changes occurred in five precincts as follows:

GRACEVILLE—The original count gave Farrington 149, Froshaug 9 and McElligott 44. The recount gave Farrington 150, Froshaug 6 and McElligott 44, a net gain of four for Farrington.

Clinton—The original count gave Farrington 39, Froshaug 29, and McElligott 11. The recount gave Farrington 44, Froshaug 21, and McElligott 10, a net gain of 12 for Farrington.

Odessa—The original count gave Farrington 61, Froshaug 42 and McElligott 18. The recount gave Farrington 68, Froshaug 36 and McElligott 16, a net gain of 13 for Farrington.

Ortonville—The original count gave Farrington 238, Froshaug 81, and McElligott 31. The recount gave Farrington 236, Froshaug 73 and McElligott 31, a net gain of 6 for Farrington.

EDISON—The original count gave Farrington 4, Froshaugh 13 and McElligott 27. The recount gave Farrington 4, Froshaug 8 and McElligott 25, a net gain of 5 for Farrington.

!!!!!!*

The Senate Elections Committee, consisting of J. E. Haycraft, J. M. Hackney, Jas. P. Boyle, Carl L. Wallace C. J. Gunderson, F. E. Peterson, O. G. Dale, Thos. E. Cashman and C. F. Cook, con sidered the contest for weeks. The majority report recommending that Froshaug be seated signed by the seven first named. C. F. Cook signed a minority report favoring Farrington. Senator Cashman was busy with his distance tariff bill and did not hear much of the testimony. He did not sign either report for that reason.

I wish that every man, woman and child in the state could know how thoroughly this committee investigated and how conscientious were their conclusions. I wish that every citizen might read and analyze the full majority report. Their findings and an adequate discussion of the case would justify a book, rather than one or two columns in a newspaper. I say this because I consider suffrage a sacred thing.

This committee found what it considered conclusive proof that the Edison ballot box had been opened and in its report submitted facts which appeared plainly to prove that the returns in each of the other four precincts in question had been tampered with.

Froshaug in the five precincts lost 32 votes because on that many ballots the recount showed a cross marked for him and also for one other candidate for senator. The majority report stated:

"An examination of each double crossed ballot convinces your Committee that with the exception of one, there was a cross placed thereon for Senator by some person other than the voter who voted the ballot. It is somewhat significant that the judges testified that there was one ballot double-crossed for Senator on the original count, and your Committee's examination of all the crossed ballots confirm that state ment."

There is space for only one conclusion of the majority report. After a recital in detail of the history and conditions of the ballots and boxes in the five precincts, the committee reported:

"Out of the remaining thirty-seven precincts in this district re-counted by the inspectors, no irregularities such as stated above were found to exist at all, and this fact is conceded by both parties to this contest. That one of these conditions might exist alone and yet admit of explanation may be conceded; but that all of these conditions should exist together and concur cannot be explained or reconciled. The chain of circumstances proven by the existence and concurrence of these unusual, abnormal conditions constitutes almost absolute proof that these ballots and ballot boxes have not only been unproperly kept, but in fact have been tampered with; and such testimony and chain of circumstances prohibit a finding which could affect the correctness of the original returns."

I have already given the final vote which followed five hours of acrimonious controversy over the case. The result gave Dr. S. J. Froshaug his seat in the Senate by the narrow margin of one vote. But that does not in itself suggest the danger he was in.

There were four distinct stages in the fight for Farrington. First the early indications were that the figures of the recount would stand.

Next the elections committee probed deeper into the case and discovered additional and seemingly conclusive evidence that ballot boxes had been entered and votes changed, which turned the tide in Froshaug's favor. This condition continued up to the day before the contest was decided and it was the general opinion that Farrington would not receive more than twenty votes.

Then came the all-night effort for Farrington. It would surprise the public to know who participated in that nocturnal hunt for votes. But the influences used were quite successful. They cracked the party whip over the democrats. Farrington's

REAPPORTIONMENT PASSES

House Gives 85 for, 31 Against Senate Bids Fair to Pass it.

The final vote on reapportionment in the House was taken Tuesday and resulted in 85 votes for the measure and 31 against. As passed, it gives to our senatorial district, which includes Norman, Mahnomen, Clearwater, Red Lake and Pennington counties, one senator and three representatives, the counties being given representatives as follows: Normanl; Mahnomen and Clearwater 1; Red Lake and Pennington 1. Beltrami county has been taken out of this senatorial district and still we have been given one more representative than we had before. This will greatly increase our power in the councils of the state. The same is true of the entire northern part of Minnesota, while the southern part of the state has lost just that much, yet this is only justice as guaranteed us by the state constitution.

This bill is now up to the Senate what will they do? The latest reports would indicate that reapportionment has already a small majority in that body, and the heavy vote in favor of that measure in the House will help to win over many doubtful senators to the support of the measure.

The main objection comes from those senators who would virtually legislate themselves out of office by voting for the bill.

A movement has been started by these to so amend the measure that it shall not go into effect until 1914 instead of 1912 as the bill now reads. But this movement is strenuously opposed by members from Northern Minnesota.

STEENERSON'S BILL PASSED

Remainders of Reservation now Open For Settlement.

A telegram from our Washington correspondent received Wednesday noon appraises us of the fact that the opening of the remainder of the Red Lake Indian reservation has passed both House and received the President's signature.

The bill follows:

An act authorizing homestead entries on certain lands formerly a part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that hereafter all lands ceded under the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the sale of what is known as the Red Lake Indian reservation, in Minnesota," approved Bebruary twentieth, nineteen dundred and four, and undisposed of, shall be subject to homestead entry at the price of not less than four dollars per acre, payable as provided in section three of said act, for all lands not heretofore entered; and for all lands embraced in canceled entries, the price shall be the same as that at which they were originally entered: provided, that where such entries have been or shall hereafter be canceled pursuant to contests, the contestant shall have a preference right to enter the land embraced in such canceled entry, as prescribed in the Act of July twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and nine-two: Provided further, that all lands entered under this Act shall, in addition to the payments herein provided for, be sub ject to drainage charges, if any, authorized under the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota" approved May twentieth, nineteen hundred and eight. (Twenty-seventh Statutes, page two hundred and seventy.)

Passed the House of Representatives February 7, 1911.

Mr. E. L. Quist;
Thief River Falls, Minn.

Dear Sir;

Having read the advertisement of the Commercial Club in the Minneapolis Tribune, my curiosity was aroused concerning the town. It is a well known fact that a town is best judged by the appearance of its local newspapers, especially the advertising columns of those papers, consequently I sent for sample copies of both your local papers. I must say that I am somewhat disappointed in the town, judged from the advertising patronage you are getting. Of course, this is a slow time of the year for advertising, but it seems to me if your Commercial Club, the members of which must be the business men, would wake up and put in twenty-five or thirty columns of regular advertising in the Press and News, it would be a paying supplement to the Twin City advertising they are doing. Wishing you success, I beg to remain,

F. S. Goddard.

MRS. GRAVES DEAD.

She has been making her home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. August Nordlund, South St. Paul St. Paul Avenue on the East side, for some time. Mrs. Graves leaves, besides her parents, three children, and a sister, Vanja Nordlund of Superior, Wisconsin who is expected here today. Arrangements for the funeral have not been completed as yet.

HOME TEAM LOSES GAME

Crookston High School Wins From Local Team 42 to 21

"The youth of the land is the inspiration thereof" was the expresion of the one of those who witnessed the basket ball game betwen the Crookston High school team and that of local high. Sure it was an inspiration to see those stalwart young men all nerved to play to the limit.

They all did play to the limit but that same limit is not always the same quantity as it proved by the result of the game which stood about 20 to 40 in favor of Crookston.

During the first half of the game a rough and tumble rule seemed to be in vogue. Thmis was, however, criticized so severely that during the 2nd half a fairly clean game was played.

The Crookston team won, not so much by the superiority of the individual men on their team, as by the adaptability of the team work. It was very evident that the boys had had a large amount of training in team work and they very naturally won the game by reasons of this practice.

The local boys all played as good a game as should be expected of them considering the meagerness of their practice. This conclusion will, however, have to be drawn from the results of this game. If the local boys are to play with outside teams they must get down and do some practising or they might just as well stay at home.

GORDON WINS WRESTLING MATCH

What is reported to have been one of the best wrestling matches ever held in the city was pulled off in the Auditorium last Friday evening. In the preliminary match Bill Kline secured a victory over Pat Mahon. In the later contest John Gordon succeeded in throwing George W. Turner from South Dakota.

Turner secured the first fall, but after that Gordon woke up and managed to throw Turner twice.

TAILOR SHOP DESTROYED

Fire Entirely Destroys Shop of Lewis Heydok on Second St.

About 1 o'clock Sunday morning fire was discovered by T. P. Hornseth in the building occupied by Louis Heyduk, the tailor, on 2nd, street East, near the Zion church. Alarm was immediately rung, but owing to the headway the fire had gotten before is was discovered there was little left for the firemen to save when they arrived. They quickly subdued the fire. Others had been busy, meanwhile, saving some of the contents of the building. The loss is estimated at $700.00, covered by a $500.00 insurance.

Mr. Heyduk expects to start up again with a new equipment as soon as he can find suitable quarters.

LINCOLN DEDICATION

The hour of dedication of the Lincoln and Mechanical school buildings is changed from 7:30 in the evening as announced last week, to 3 in the afternoon. It is discovered that such large numbers of people propose attending the ceremonies, that unavoidable crush and confusion would result by having all the exercises after seven o'clock. So the program will be carried out exactly as planned, except the change noted above.

No children under the seventh grade can be permitted to attend the afternoon ceremonies, as the seventh and eighth grades, the high school students, and parents and visitors will more than tax the capacity of the Lincoln. All the grade children, however, and adults who cannot be present during the afternoon, are urged to examine the new buildings some time during the evening. They will be lighted and high school students will be present to direct visitors about. All persons, the grade children included, are also invited to the auditorium at eight o'clock to hear the dedicatory address by Governor Eberhart.

School will be in session in all the buildings during the whole day, with the exception of the grammer grades and the high school, which will suspend work at 2:30 to permit these students to attend the exercises in the Lincoln assembly at 3.

MARRIED

On Thursday, February 16th at 6:30 a wedding occurred at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Crandell, of Thief River Falls, when Anna L. Redding was united in marriage to T. J. Fulleuwide of Minneapolis, Rev. J. B. Smith officiating. The bride was dressed in a simple white lingerie gown and carried a large bonquet of bridal roses. She was attended by her two little cousins, Lorrayne and Ellen Crandall aged five and three, each carrying a ring in a tulip, the double ring ceremony being used. The parlor was prettily decorated with ferns, tulips, narcissus and daffodils, the dining room in carnations. After the ceremony a dainty wedding supper was served.

The only out of town guest was Mrs. J. G. Redding of Windom, Minn. mother of the bride. The bride and groom left on the ten o'clock train for Minneapolis, their future home.

ZAVORAL—VOTAVA.

Yesterday morning at 9:30 at St. Bernard's Catholic church, Rev. Father Adolph officiating, occurred the marriage of Miss Zavoral, of the Votava of Beltrami county. After a few weeks visit with friends at various points the happy couple will go to housekeeping on the groom's farm in Beltrami county. The Press extends congratulations.

CARD OF THANKS.

To our many friends and neighbors who assisted us in many ways during the long illness of our departed husband and father, Charles A. Robbecke.

We tender our sincere and heartfelt thanks and especially to the Rev. J. M. Smith the brother of the orders of the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen, other fraternal societies, and friends who tendered us so beautiful a tribute of sympathy and who so kindly assisted us in laying away our beloved to rest.

Mrs. Robbecke and family.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Farmers Institute To Be Held In Rural District March 1st.

The fourth meeting of the farmers under the auspices of the department of agriculture of the high school will not take place at the school. In lieu thereof, an afternoon meeting will be held on March 1st, at 2:30 at the school house in district number 73, known as the Sunnyside school. In the evening at 7:30, another meeting will take place at Valhall in the Englestad community.

Prof. H. Kirkpatrick of the college of agriculture at St. Anthony Park will have charge of both meetings and will be assisted by local speakers The purpose of changing the meetings to the rural sections is to secure the attendance of more farmers and to prepare for the big two days' institute to be held in this city in March at which there will be seed contests and prizes awarded. Within a few days announcements will be made of two more rural meetings northwest and northeast of the city, both of which will occur prior to this seed contest. This seed competition will be under the direction of the recently organized Upper Minnesota Corn Growers' Association and will be open to all the counties in the northwestern part of the state.

The farmers in the sections where the meetings are to be held next week are requested to make them as public as possible and to secure the attendance of every person in the district.

There was a good attendance of farmers at the meeting of last week in the high school gymnasium and the speakers delivered very valuable and interesting addresses. Local events have interfered with all the three meetings held so far, and it is expected that by having the next one in the country more farmers may be enabled to attend.

ANOTHER ROAD POSSIBLE

Milwankee to Build from Hutchinson to Winnipeg. May touch this City.

The following item from the Duluth Herald is full of interest to our readers:

"Sauk Center, Minn., Feb. 19.—The business men of Sauk Center are greatly excited over the report from Glencoe that the St. Paul road has purchased forty acres of land at Hutchinson for a "Y" and on which to store and assemble material for the extension of the railway from Hutchinson to Winnipeg via Sauk Center.

Surveyers were in the vicinity for over two weeks last year, and the belief is prevalent this will be the division point. It was given out the company would not build this year, but the assembling of material at Hutchinson and the purchase of land and the assumption of reciprocity with Canada make the railway a possibility this spring.

There are ample facilities and land in a good position which can be purchased for a moderate price, and the business men of Sauk Center are willing to meet the company and make some concessions to get the division point at this place.—Duluth Herald.

Here Thief River Falls has promise of another railroad, for this is evidently the company that surveyed thru here about two years ago under the name of "The Great American" railway. They start out from Hutchinson in McLeon county, and pass thru Sauk Center on their course to Wennipeg. If they make a "bee line" they wil be bound to loom up large in this vicinity. Then, too, the fact that they seem bent upon making a "short line" between Chicago and Wennipeg lends strength to the assumption that their aim will be to tap as many good railroad centers as possible thereby increasing their passenger traffic.

This will influence them to come in to Thief River Falls rather than to pass by us in the open country east of here. Hold a string over the map with one end at Winnipeg and the other at Hutchinson or Sauk Center and the line will fall very close to this city. It will also pass near Wadena, Long Prairie, and Detroit all of them good strong railroad centers like Thief River Falls. Our natural outlet for freight is Duluth, not Chicago; but passenger traffic and mail service is another matter. Roads that seek the wilderness to develop it must have a good freight outlet, while good passenger facilities to them is of lesser moment. We believe therefore that this Chicago, Milwaukee and St, Paul railway will find it advantageous to touch as many large places near its course as possible, and predict that if this road is built it will pass through the City of Thief River Falls.

CLERK EXAMINATION, POST-OFFICE SERVICE.

Place of Examination, Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Date of Examination, March 11, 1911

The United States Civil Service Commission announces that on the date and at the place named above an examination will be held for the position of clerk in the post office at that place.

By an executive order of September 30, 1910 effective December 1, 1910, positions of clerk in post offices of the first and second classes not therefore classified were included in the classified competitive service. The positions of clerk referred to are, with few exceptions, in first and second class post offices which do not have free city delivery, and at which, therefore, city carriers are not employed.

Examinations are announced as vacancies occur or are contemplated in post offices, and from the resulting registers of eligibles selections for appointment are made, unless it is decided in the interest of the service to fill the vacancies by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion. The examination hereby announced is only for the post office in the city named at the head of this announcement, and will be held only at that place.

Clerks in offices of the first and second classes are divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $800; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,200. Clerks at first-class offices will be promoted successively to the fifth grade, and clerks at second-class offices will be promoted successively to the fourth grade.

All promotions will be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade. No promotion will be made except upon evidence satisfactory to the Post-Office De-

BENEFITS OF THE TREATY

President Refers to Pact at Masonic Banquet.

Washington, Feb. 21.—"I really believe that with the consummation of the Canadian reciprocity agreement there will be a drawing together of two great nations; but a drawing together by closer business and social relations and not by political union," declared President Taft at the centennial celebration banquet of the grand lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia.

The president followed Henry S. Bridges, grand master of New Brunswick, N. S., who spoke of the good will of Canadians towards the United States in the Canadian reciprocity negotiations.

"I am delighted to know," said the president, "that Brother Bridges comes to us not panoplied for war, but for peace He does not look forward to annexation nor the drying up of the St. Lawrence river, nor has he any people with lively imaginations, some of whom are only innocent and others of whom have a little different motive than that from territorial aggrandizement."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Address: F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Sold by Druggists, 75 cents.

ORANGES BRING BOTH SURPRISE

Because a well known business man of this city has been greeted the past few mornings at the breakfast table by more delicious and juicy oranges than he had been accustomed to, and because some very attractive new orange knives and spoons caught his attention, prompted him to ask his wife the cause of the breakfast's added charm.

Her answer resulted in his buying theatre tickets that night! The thrifty wife had been reading the newspaper "ads" which tell of a particular brand of extra fine California oranges whose wrappers bring the spoons and knives free.

Now all her neighbors are following her example and as a result most of the local fruit stands are doing an enormous orange business.

A Hint.

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

"No. My mother thinks there is a place for me in Sulphur City."

"Your case interests me deeply. I wish I could advise you to stay, but this is a rough town for a girl like you. Why don't you talk the problem over with the supervisor?" His voice became firmer. "Mrs. Redfield is the very one to help you."

"Where does she live?"

"Their ranch lies just above Sulphur, at the mouth of the canyon. May I tell him what you've told me? He's a good sort, is Redfield—much better able to advise than I am."

Cavanagh found himself enjoying the confidence of this girl so strangely thrown into his care, and the curious comment of the people in the street did not disturb him except as it bore upon his companion's position in the town.

At the door of the hotel some half a dozen men were clustered. As the young couple approached they gave way, but a short, powerful man, whom Lee Virginia recognized as Gregg, the sheepman, called to the ranger:

"I want to see you before you leave town, Mr. Ranger."

"Very well; I shall be here all the forenoon," answered Cavanagh in the tone of a man accepting a challenge. Then, turning to the girl, he said earnestly: "I want to help you. I shall be here for lunch, and meanwhile I wish you would take Redfield into your confidence. He's a wise old boy, and everybody knows him. No one doubts his motives. Besides, he has a family and is rich and unhurried. Would you like me to talk with him?"

"If you will. I want to do right. Indeed, I do."

"I'm sure of that," he said, with eyes upon her flushed and quivering face. "There's a way out, believe me."

CHAPTER III.

LIZE AND HER DAUGHTER.

THEY parted on the little porch of the hotel, and her eyes followed his upright figure till he entered one of the shops. He had precisely the look and bearing of a young lieutenant in the regular army. She returned to her own room strangely heartened by her talk with the ranger.

She was still pondering when her mother came in.

"How'd you sleep last night?"

Lee Virginia could not bring herself to lie. "Not very well," she admitted.

"Neither did I. Fact of the matter is your coming fairly upset me. I've been kind of used up for three months. I don't know what ails me. I'd ought to go up to Sulphur to see a doctor, but there don't seem to be any free time. I 'pear to have lost my grip. Food don't give me any strength. I saw you talking with Ross Cavanagh. There's a man. And Reddy—Reddy is what you call a fancy rancher; goes in for alfalfy and fruit and all that. He isn't in the forest service for the pay or for graft. He's got a regular palace up there above Sulphur—hot and cold water all through the house, a furnace in the cellar and two bathrooms, so they tell me; I never was in the place. You better keep out of the caffy. It ain't a fit place for you. Fact is, I wasn't expecting anything so fine as you are. I laid awake till 3 o'clock last night figuring on what to do. I reckon you'd better go back and give this outfit up as a bad job. I used to tell Ed you didn't belong to neither of us, and you don't. I can't see where you did come from—anyhow, I don't want the responsibility of having you here. Why, you'll have half the men in the county hitching to my corral. You're too good for any of them. You just plan to pack up and pull out tomorrow."

She went out with a dragging step that softened the girl's heart. Lize's daughter came nearer to loving her at this moment than at any time since her fifth year.

In truth, Lize had risen that morning intending "to whirl in and clean up the house," being suddenly conscious to some degree of the dirt and disorder around her, but she found herself physically unequal to the task. Her brain seemed misted, and her food had been a source of keen pain to her.

She gave sharp answers to all the men who came up to ask after her daughter, and to one who remarked on the girl's good looks and demanded an introduction she said: "Get along! You fellers want to understand I'll kill the man that sets out to fool with my girl. I tell you that!"

While yet Lee Virginia was wondering how to begin the day's work some one knocked on her door, and in answer to her invitation a woman stepped in—a thin blond hag with a weak smile and watery blue eyes. "Is this little Lee Virginny?" she asked.

The girl rose. "Yes."

"Well, howdy?" She extended her hand, and Lee took it. "My name's Jackson—Mrs. Orlando Jackson. I knew yore pa and you before 'the war.' Are ye back fer to stay?"

"No. I don't think so. Will you sit down?"

Mrs. Jackson took a seat. "Come back to see how yore ma was, I reckon? Found her pretty porely, didn't ye?" She lowered her voice. "I think she's got cancer of the stummick—now that's my guess."

Virginia started. "What makes you think so?"

"Well, I knew a woman who went just that way. Had that same flabby, funny look—and that same distress after eatin'. I told her this mornin' she'd better go up to Sulphur and see that new doctor."

"What did you mean by 'the war'?" asked Virginia.

"Why, you remember the rustler war? We date everything out here from that year. You was here, for I saw ye."

"Oh!" exclaimed Virginia. "I understand now. Yes, I was here. I saw my father at the head of the cowboys."

"They weren't cowboys. They were hired killers from Texas. That's what let yore pa out o' the state. He were on the wrong side, and if it hadn't 'a' been for the regular soldiers he'd 'a' been wiped out right hyer. As it was he had to skip the range and hain't never been back. I don't s'pose folks will lay it up agin you—bein' a girl—but they couldn't no son of Ed Wetherford come back here and settle, not for a minute. Why, yere ma has had to bluff the whole county a'most—not that I lay anything up agin her. I tell folks she was that bewitched with Ed she couldn't see things any way but his way. He fought to save his ranch and stawk, but she couldn't do nothin'—and then to have him go back on her the way he did—slip out 'twixt two days and never write; that just about shot her to pieces. I never could understand that in Ed; he 'peared so mortally fond of you and of her too. He sure was fond of you!" She shook her head. "No, can't anybody make me believe Ed Wetherford is alive."

Lee Virginia started. "Who says he's alive?"

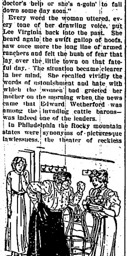
"Now, don't get excited, girl. He ain't alive, but yet folks say we don't know he's dead. He jest dropped out so far as yore ma is concerned and so far as the county is concerned, but some thought you was with him in the east."

The girl was now aware that her visitor was hoping to gain some further information and so curtly answered: "I've never seen my father since that night the soldiers came and took him away to the fort. And my mother told me he died down in Texas."

Mrs. Jackson rose. "Well, I'm glad to 've had a word with ye; but, you hear me, yore ma has got to have doctor's help or she's a-goin' to fall down some day soon."

Every word the woman uttered, every tone of her drawling voice, put Lee Virginia back into the past. She heard again the swift gallop of hoofs, saw once more the long line of armed ranchers and felt the hush of fear that lay over the little town on that fateful day. The situation became clearer in her mind. She recalled vividly the words of astonishment and hate with which the women had greeted her mother on the morning when the news came that Edward Wetherford was among the invading cattle barons—was indeed one of the leaders.

In Philadelphia the Rocky mountain states were synonyms of picturesque lawlessness, the theater of reckless romance, and Virginia Wetherford, loyal daughter of the west, had defended it, but in the coarse phrase of this lean rancheress was pictured a land of border warfare as ruthless as that which marked the Scotland of Rob Roy.



LIZE WAS IN VIOLENT ALTERCATION WITH A WAITRESS.

Commonplace as the little town looked at the moment, it had been the scene of many a desperate encounter, as the girl herself could testify, for she had seen more than one man killed therein.

Then her mind came back to her mother's ailment. Eliza Wetherford had never been one to complain, and her groans meant real suffering.

Her mind resolved upon one thing. "She must see a doctor," she decided. And with this in mind she re-entered the cafe, where Lize was in violent altercation with a waitress.

"Mother," called Lee, "I want to see you."

With a parting volley of vituperation Mrs. Wetherford followed her daughter back into the lodging house.

"Mother," the girl began, facing her and speaking firmly, "you need help, and if the doctor here can't help you, you must go to Sulphur or to Kansas City. I can run the boarding house until you get back."

Eliza eyed her curiously. "Don't you go to counting on this 'chivalry of the west' which story writers put into books. These men out here will eat you up if you don't watch out. I wouldn't dare to leave you here alone. No; what I'll do is sell the place, if I can, and both of us get out."

"But you need a doctor this minute."

"I'll be all right in a little while; I'm always the worst for an hour or two after I eat. This little squirt of a local doctor gave me some dope to ease that pain, but I've got my doubts—I don't want any morphine habit in mine. No, daughter Virginny, it's mighty white of you to offer, but you don't know what you're up against when you contract to step into my shoes."

Visions of reforming methods about the house passed through the girl's mind. "There must be something I can do. Why don't you have the doctor come down here?"

"I might do that if I get any worse, but I hate to have you stay in the house another night. It's only fit for these goats of cowboys and women like Hett Jackson. I don't care till somebody like you or Reddy or Ross comes along."

"No, child; you get ready and pull out on the Sulphur stage tomorrow. I'll pay your way back to Philadelphy."

"I can't leave you now, mother. Now that I know you're ill I'm going to stay and take care of you."

Lize rose. "See here, girl, don't you go to idealizing me neither. I'm what the boys call an old battleax. I've been through the whole war. I'm able to feed myself and pay your board besides. Just you find some decent boarding place in Sulphur, and I'll see that you have $10 a week to live on just because you're a Wetherford."

"But I'm your daughter!"

Again Eliza fixed a musing look upon her. "I reckon if the truth was known your Aunt Sella was nigher to being your mother than I ever was. They always said you was all Wetherford, and I reckon they were right."

CHAPTER IV.

THE NEW WEST AND THE OLD.

THE knowledge that she must spend another night in the inn led Lee Virginia to active measures of reform. She hurried from one needed reform to another. She drew others into the vortex.

She organized the giggling waiters into a warring party and advanced upon the flies. By hissing and shooing and the flutter of newspapers they drove the enemy before them, and a carpenter was called in to mend screen doors and windows, thus preventing their return. New shades were hung to darken the room and new tablecloths purchased to replace the old ones, and the whole place had such a cleaning as it had not known before in five years.

In this work the time passed swiftly, and when Redfield and Cavanagh came again to lunch they exclaimed in astonishment, as, indeed, every one did.

"How's this?" queried Cavanagh humorously. "Has the place changed hands?"

Lize was but grimly responsive. "Seems like it has."

"I hope the price has not gone up."

"Not yet."

Redfield asked, "Who's responsible for this—your new daughter?"

"You've hit it. She's started right in to polish us all up to city standards. She can run the whole blame outfit if she's a mind to—even if I go broke for it. The work she got out of them girls is a wonder."

Lee Virginia came in flushed and self conscious, but far lighter of spirit than at breakfast, and stood beside the table while the waitress laid the dishes before her guests with elaborate assumption of grace and design. Hitherto she had bumped them down with a slash of slangy comment. The change was quite as wonderful as the absence of the flies.

"Do we owe these happy reforms to you?" asked Cavanagh, admiring Virginia's neat dress and glowing cheeks.

"Partly," she answered. "I was desperate. I had to do something, so I took to ordering people around."

"I understand," he said. "Won't you sit at our table again?"

"Please do," said Redfield. "I want to talk with you."

She took a seat a little hesitatingly. "You see, I studied domestic science at school, and I've never had a chance to apply it before."

"Here's your opportunity," Redfield assured her. "My respect for the science of domestics is growing. I marvel to think what another week will bring forth. I think I'll have to come down again just to observe the improvement in the place."

"It can't last," Lize interjected. "She'll catch the western habits. She'll sag, same as we all do."

"No, she won't," declared Ross, with intent to encourage her. "If you give her a free hand I predict she'll make your place the wonder and boast of the county-side."

"When do you go back to the mountains?" Lee Virginia asked a little later.

"Immediately after my luncheon," he replied.

She experienced a pang of regret and could not help showing it a little. "Your talk helped me," she said. "I've decided to stay and be of use to my mother."

Redfield overheard this and turned toward her.

"I want Mrs. Redfield to know you. I'm sure her advice will be helpful. I hope you'll come up and see us if you decide to settle in Sulphur or if you don't."

"I should like to do so," she said, touched by the tone as well as by the words of his invitation.

"Redfield's house is one of the few completely civilized homes in the state," put in Cavanagh. "When I get so weary of cuss words and poaching and graft that I can't live without killing some one I go down to Elk Lodge and smoke and read the supervisor's London and Paris weeklies and recover my tone."

Redfield smiled. "When I get weak-kneed or careless in the service and feel my self respect slipping away I go up to Ross' cabin and talk with a man who represents the impersonal, even handed justice of the federal law."

Cavanagh laughed. "There! Having handed each other reciprocal bouquets, we can now tell Miss Wetherford the truth. Each of us thinks very well of himself, and we're both believers in the new west."

"What do you mean by the new west?" asked the girl.

"Well, the work you've been doing here this morning is part of it," answered Redfield. "It's a kind of house-cleaning. The old west was picturesque and in a way manly and fine—certain phases of it were heroic—and I hate to see it all pass, but some of us began to realize that it was not all poetry. The plain truth is my companions for over twenty years were lawless ruffians, and the cattle business as we practiced it in those days was founded on selfishness and defended at the mouth of the pistol. We were all pensioners on Uncle Sam and fighting to keep the other fellow off from having a share of his bounty. It was all wasteful, half savage. We didn't want settlement; we didn't want law; we didn't want a state. We wanted free range. We were a line of pirates from beginning to end, and we're not wholly reformed yet."

He was quite unmoved by this charge. "The town site boomer at least believes in progress. He does not go so far as to shut out settlement. I don't care to have my children live the life I've lived. Besides, what right have we to stand in the way of a community's growth? Suppose the new life is less picturesque than the old. We don't like to leave behind us the pleasures and sports of boyhood, but we grow up nevertheless. I'm far more loyal to the state as forest supervisor than I was when I was riding with the cattlemen to scare up the nester."

At this moment Sam Gregg entered the room, followed by a young man in an English riding suit. Seeing that "the star boarder table" offered a couple of seats, they pointed that way. Sam was plainly in a warlike frame of mind and slammed his sombrero on its nail with the action of a man beating an adversary.

"That is Sam Gregg and his son Joe. Used to be ranch cattleman, now one of our biggest sheepmen," Cavanagh explained. "He's bucking the cattlemen now."

Lee Virginia studied young Gregg with interest, for his dress was that of a man to whom money came easy, and his face was handsome, though rather fat and sullen. In truth, he had been brought into the room by his father to see "Lize Wetherford's girl," and his eyes at once sought and found her. A look of surprise and pleasure at once lit his face.

Gregg was the greedy west checked and restrained by the law. Every man in the room knew that he was a bitter opponent of the forest service and that he "had it in" for the ranger, and some of them knew that he was throwing more sheep into the forest than his permits allowed and that a clash with Redfield was sure to come. It was just like the burly old Irishman to go straight to the table where his adversary sat.

Virginia's eyes fell before the gaze of these two men, for they had none of the shyness and none of the indirection of the ruder men she had met.

Redfield did not soften his words on Gregg's account. On the contrary, he made them still more cutting and to the line.

"The mere fact that I live near the open range or a national forest does not give me any rights in the range or forest," he was saying as Gregg took his seat. "I enjoy the privilege of these government grazing grounds, and I ought to be perfectly willing to pay the fee. These forests are the property of the whole nation. They are public lands and should yield a revenue to the whole nation. It is silly to expect the government to go on enriching a few of us stockmen at the expense of others. I see this, and I accept the change."

"After you've got rich at it," said Gregg.

"Well, haven't you?" retorted Redfield. "Are you so greedy that nothing will stop you."

Gregg growled out: "I'm not letting any of my rights slip. I'll have your head, Mr. Supervisor. I'll carry my fight to the secretary."

"Very well," returned Redfield, "carry it to the president if you wish. I simply repeat that your sheep must correspond to your permit, and if you don't send up and remove the extra number I will do it myself. I don't make the rules of the department. My job is to carry them out."

By this time every person in the room was tense with interest. They all knew Gregg and his imperious methods. Some of the cattlemen in the room had suffered from his greed, and, while they were not partisans of the supervisor, they were glad to see him face his opponent fearlessly.

Lize delivered a parting blow: "Bullfrog, you and me are old timers. We're on the losing side. We belong to the 'good old days' when the Fork was a 'man's town' and to be 'shot up' once a week kept us in news. But them times are past. You can't run the range that way any more. Why, man, you'll have to buy and fence your own pasture in a few years more or else pay rent same as I do. You stockmen kick like steers over paying a few old cents a head for five months' range; you'll be mighty glad to pay a dollar one of these days. Take your medicine—that's my advice." And she went back to her cash drawer.

Redfield's voice was cuttingly contemptuous as he said quite calmly: "You're all kinds of asses, you sheepmen. You ought to pay the fee for your cattle with secret joy. So long as you can get your stock pastured (and in effect guarded) by the government from June to November for 20 cents or even 50 cents per head you're in luck. Mrs. Wetherford is right. We've all been educated in a bad school. Uncle Sam has been too lazy to keep any supervision over his public lands. He's permitted us grass pirates to fight and lynch and burn one another on the high range (to which neither of us had any right), holding back the real user of the land—the farmer."

Gregg was silenced, but not convinced. "It's a long lane that has no turn," he burst out. "You think you're the whole United States army! Who gives you all the authority?"

"Congress and the president."

"There's nothing in that bill to warrant these petty tyrannies of yours."

"What you call tyrannies I call defending the public domain," replied Redfield. "If I had my way I'd give my rangers the power of the Canadian mounted police. Is there any other state in this nation where the roping of sheep herders and the wholesale butchery of sheep would be permitted? From the very first the public lands of this state have been a refuge for the criminal, a lawless no man's land, but now, thanks to Roosevelt and the chief forester, we at least have a force of men on the spot to see that some semblance of law and order is maintained. You fellows may protest and run to Washington, and you may send your paid representatives there, but you're sure to lose. As free range monopolists you are cumberers of the earth, and all you represent must pass before this state can be anything but the byword it now is."

The whole dining room was still as he finished, and Lee Virginia, with a girl's vague comprehension of the man's world, apprehended in Redfield's speech a large and daring purpose.

Gregg sneered. "Perhaps you intend to run for congress on that line of talk."

Redfield's voice was placid. "At any rate, I intend to represent the policy that will change this state from the sparsely settled battleground of a lot of mounted hoboes to a state with an honorable place among the other commonwealths. If this be treason make the most of it."

Cavanagh was disturbed, for, while he felt the truth of his chief's words, he was in doubt as to the policy of uttering them. He rose. "I must be going," he said, with a smile.

Again the pang of loss touched her heart. "When will you come again?" she asked in a low voice.

"It is hard to say. A ranger's place is in the forest. I am very seldom in town. Just now the danger of fires is great, and I am very uneasy. I may not be down again for a month."

The table was empty now, and they were standing in comparative isolation, looking into each other's eyes in silence. At last she murmured: "You've helped me. I'm going to stay a little while anyway and do what I can."

"I'm sorry I can't be of actual service, but I am a soldier with a work to do. Even if I were here I could not help you as regards the townspeople. They all hate me quite cordially, but Redfield, and especially Mrs. Redfield, can be of greater aid and comfort. He's quite often here, and when you are lonely and discouraged let him take you up to Elk Lodge."

He extended his hand, and as she took it he thrilled to the soft strength of it. "Till next time," he said, "good luck."

CHAPTER V.

VIRGINIA TAKES ANOTHER MOTOR RIDE.

LEE VIRGINIA'S efforts to refine the little hotel produced an amazing change in Eliza Wetherford's affairs. The dining room swarmed with those seeking food, and as the news of the girl's beauty went out upon the range the cowboys sought excuse to ride in and get a square meal and a glimpse of the "queen" whose hand had witched "the old shack" into a marvel of cleanliness. Generally they failed of so much as a glance at her, for she kept away from the dining room at mealtime.

Lee Virginia was fully aware of this male curiosity and vaguely conscious of the light which shone in the eyes of some of them (men like Gregg). She had begun to understand, too, that her mother's reputation was a barrier between the better class of folk and herself. But as they came now and again to take a meal they permitted themselves a word in her praise, which she resented. "I don't want their friendship now," she declared bitterly.

As she gained courage to look about her she began to be interested in some of her boarders.

So far as the younger men were concerned, she saw little to admire and much to hate. They were crude and uninteresting rowdies for the most part. She was put upon her defense by their glances, and she came to dread walking along the street, so open and coarse were their words of praise.

Few of these loafers had the courage to stand on their feet and court her favor, but there was one who speedily became her chief persecutor. This was Neill Ballard, celebrated (and made impudent) by two years' travel with a wild west show. He was tall, lean, angular and freckled, but his horsemanship was marvelous and his skill with the rope magical.

He had lost his engagement by reason of a drunken brawl, and he was now living with his sister, the wife of a small rancher near by. Virginia despised the other men, but she feared this one, and quite justly.

The Greggs, father and son, were in open rivalry for Lee also, but in different ways. The older man, who had already been married several times, was disposed to buy her hand in what he called "honorable wedlock," but the son, at heart a libertine, approached her as one who despised the west and who, being kept in the beastly country by duty to a parent, was ready to amuse himself at any one's expense. He had no purpose in life but to feed his body and escape toil.

The chivalry of the plains, of which Lee had read so much and which she supposed she remembered, was gone. She doubted if it had ever existed among these centaurs. Why should it inhere in ignorant, brutal plainsmen any more than in ignorant, brutal factory hands?

There came to her now and again gentle old ranchers—"grangers," they would be called—and shy boys from the farms, but for the most part the men she saw imbittered her, and she kept out of their sight as much as possible. Her keenest pleasures, almost her only pleasures, lay in the occasional brief visits of Cavanagh as he rode in for his mail.

Lize perceived all these attacks on her daughter and was infuriated by them. Her brows were knotted with care as well as with pain, and she incessantly urged Virginia to go back to Sulphur. "I'll send you money to pay your board till you strike a job." But to this the girl would not agree, and the business by reason of her presence went on increasing from day to day.

To Redfield Lize one day confessed her pain. "I ought to send for that doctor up there, but the plain truth is I'm afraid of him. I don't want to know what's the matter of me. It's his job to tell me I'm sick, and I'm scared of his verdict."

"Nonsense!" he replied. "You can't afford to put off getting him much longer. I'm going back tonight, but I'll be over again tomorrow. Why don't you let me bring him down? It will save you $12. And, by the way, suppose you let me take Lee Virginia home with me. She looks a bit depressed. An outing will do her good. She's taken hold here wonderfully."

"Hasn't she? But I should have sent her away the very first night. I'm getting to depend on her. I'm plumb foolish about her now—can't let her out of my sight, and yet I'm off my feed worrying over her. Gregg is getting dangerous. You can't fool me when it comes to men. Curse 'em! They're all alike, every one of them. I won't have my girl mistreated, I tell you that. I'm not fit to be her mother. Now, that's the truth, Reddy, and this rotten little back country cow town is no place for her. But what can I do? She won't leave me so long as I'm sick, and every day ties her closer to me. I don't know what I'd do without her. If I'm going to die I want her by me when I take my drop, so you see just how I'm placed."

She looked yellow and drawn as she ended, and Redfield was moved by her unwonted tenderness.

"Now, let me advise," he began after a moment's pause. "We mustn't let the girl get homesick. I'll take her home with me this afternoon and bring her back along with a doctor tomorrow."

"All right, but before you go I want to have a private talk. I want to tell you something."

He warned her away from what promised to be a confession. "Now, now, Eliza, don't tell me anything that requires that tone of voice. I'm a bad person to keep a secret, and you might be sorry for it. I don't want to know anything more about your business than I can guess."

"I don't mean the whisky trade," she explained. "I've cut that all out anyway. It's something more important—it's about Ed and me."

"I don't want to hear that either," he declared. "Let bygones be bygones. What you did then is outlawed anyway. Those were fierce times, and I want to forget them." He looked about. "Let me see Miss Virginia and convey to her Mrs. Redfield's invitation."

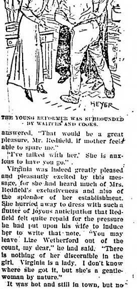
"She's in the kitchen, I reckon. Go right out."

He was rather glad of a chance to see the young reformer in action and smiled as he came upon her surrounded by waiters and cooks, busily superintending the preparations for the noon meal, which amounted to a tumult each day.

She saw Redfield, nodded and a few moments later came toward him, flushed and beaming with welcome. "I'm glad to see you again, Mr. Supervisor."

He bowed profoundly. "Mrs. Redfield sends by me a formal invitation to you to visit Elk Lodge. She is not quite able to take the long ride, else she'd come to you." Here he handed her a note. "I suggest that you go up with me this afternoon, and tomorrow we'll fetch the doctor down to see your mother. What do you say to that?"

Her eyes were dewy with grateful appreciation of his kindness as she answered, "That would be a great pleasure, Mr. Redfield, if mother feels able to spare me."



THE YOUNG REFORMER WAS SURROUNDED BY WAITERS AND COOKS.

"I've talked with her. She is anxious to have you go."

Virginia was indeed greatly pleased and pleasantly excited by this message, for she had heard much of Mrs. Redfield's exclusiveness and also of the splendor of her establishment. She hurried away to dress with such a flutter of joyous anticipation that Redfield felt quite repaid for the pressure he had put upon his wife to induce her to write that note. "You may leave Lize Wetherford out of the count, my dear," he had said. "There is nothing of her discernible in the girl. Virginia is a lady. I don't know where she got it, but she's a gentlewoman by nature."

It was hot and still in town, but no sooner was the car in motion than both heat and dust were forgotten. Redfield's machine was not large, and, as he was content to go at moderate speed, conversation was possible.

He was of that sunny, optimistic, ever youthful nature which finds delight in human companionship under any conditions whatsoever. He accepted this girl for what she seemed—a fresh, unspoiled child. He saw nothing cheap or commonplace in her and was not disposed to impose any of her father's wild doings upon her calendar. He had his misgivings as to her future. That was the main reason why he had said to Mrs. Redfield, "The girl must be helped." Afterward he had said "sustained."

It was inevitable that the girl should soon refer to the ranger, and Redfield was as complimentary of him as she could wish. "Ross hasn't a fault but one, and that's a negative one—he doesn't care a hang about getting on, as they say over in England. He's content just to do the duty of the moment. He made a good cowpuncher and a good soldier, but as for promotion—he laughs when I mention it."

"He told me that he hoped to be chief forester," protested Virginia.

"Oh, yes, he says that, but do you know he'd rather be where he is, riding over the hills, than live in London. You should see his cabin some time. It's most wonderful, really. His walls are covered with bookshelves of his own manufacture and chairs of his own design. Where the boy got the skill I don't see. Heaven knows, his sisters are conventional enough! He's capable of being supervisor, but he won't live in town and work in an office. He's like an Indian in his love of the open."

A Long Credit.

The motto of the highland host that battled for the Stuart cause, which bonny Prince Charlie headed, apparently was that heaven helps those who help themselves liberally. They levied toll on the henroost, stable and, according to the author of "The Land of Romance," even on the pockets of the Covenanters.

At Swarthholm a party of these marauders overhauled the house of a tailor, and when one of them was about to cut up a web of homespun that had taken his fancy the good wife earnestly remonstrated.

"A day'll come when ye'll ha' tae pay for that," she solemnly assured him.

Scissors in hand, Donald paused. "An' when will she pe hafing to do that?" he asked.

"At the last day," said she.

"An' that will pe a fery goot long credit," the robber coolly returned. "She wass going to pe only taking a coat, but now she will pe taking a waistcoat as well."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, FEB. 24, 1911

No man contributes as much to society as society has contributed to him.

The House is with Northern Minnesota. Now let us storm the senate.

One effect of our numerous 'Auto' clubs will no doubt be more hustling for "good roads."

The farmers would like to see some thing besides the products of the soil on the free list in the Reciprocity Treaty.

In a mimic war a yankee boy has outwitted the entire British Army. A war of false and trickish messages may be alright but it is time to forget all war of blood.

Now it is claimed that Duluth is dictating the entire policy of St. Louis county and hence there is a very strong feeling calling for a division of that county. Well division is better than war.

"Instill in the minds of our young the necessity of building a character that will win the respect of all; this is vastly more important than a great fortune"

—Marshall Field.

The big automobile manufacturers claim that they will sell forty percent more autos this year than last. That does not look like hard times at present but look out for the future.

Russia is threatening war with China with one hand while it is stretching out the other to take the "Dove of Universal Peace" into its ark. Possibly the reason it wants the 'Dove of Peace' is that it would it were able to crush out its life.

The county option cause lost in the Senate last Tuesday by a vote of 37 to 24. This is however six more in the senate than it ever could have received at any previous session.

According to government reports there is more pork eaten in this country than the meat of all other animals taken together. No wonder such a large number of our people are becoming hoggish.

Our State senate voted 36 yeas to 26 nays on a resolution opposing the Canadian Reciprocity Treaty. Our legislature has named our U. S. Senators but that does not necessarily indicate that the resolutions passed by our legislature will be considered by the national senators. The son does not always think the same thots as the father.

The following extract from the minority report of the Committe on Ways and Means in regard to the Canadian reciprocity treaty states the matters in a most comprehensive manner:

The undersigned members of the Committe on Ways and Means find themselves unable to agree with the majority who have reported favorably the bill "to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes."

They regret that the bill has been prosecuted by its advocates with such undue and precipitate haste that many of its features remain without explanation.

Up to the time when the President's message informed Congress that he had entered into a trade agreement with Canada, the House of Representatives—where all "bills raising revenue" must originate under the Constitution—knew nothing about it. It is safe to say that no Member of Congress had been consulted as to it or its terms. On January 28, two days after the message, a bill drawn in the State Department—the bill reported, amended by its authors in a material part—was introduced in the House. On January 31, the bill was unanimously adopted a caucus of the Democratic Party of the House. After less than a week of hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means the bill was forced to a vote. Amendments submitted by the administration were adopted, all other amendments were denied consideration, and the bill reported to the House the same day.

* * * * *

By the terms of the bill four general classes of products are affected:

First. Leading food and agricultural products, rough lumber, some raw materials, and printing paper. These are put on the free list.

Second. Secondary food products such as fresh and canned meats, flours, and partly manufactured food preparations, upon which rates are reduced and made identical.

Third. Manufactured commodities, such as motor vehiciles, cutlery sanitary fixtures, and miscellaneous articles, on which rates are mutually reduced.

Fourth. A small list of articles on which special rates are given by each country. Canada reduces the duty on coal and cement, and the United States reduces the duty on iron ore and aluminum products.

The bill revises our tariff law in part, involves millions of the national revenue, involves also our commercial relations with other nations, and comes to us to be voted on after a week's deliberation

First National Bank

Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

We protest its passage for the following, amongst other, reasons:

(1) It renews a trade agreement with Canada similar to one that heretofore existed from 1854 to 1866, and the operation of which proved disastrous to the United States.

As a business proposition it is wholly indefensible. Advantages under it will accrue to Canada without any corresponding advantages to the United States. It is uncalled for by any great body of our people.

(2) It is un-Republican. It proposes reciprocity products, which is absolutely inconsistent with the policy of protection. It is an abandonment of the protective policy. It is in violation of the history, the traditions, and the platforms of the Republican Party.

(3) It is class legislation of the most obnoxious character. It selects from out all the classes of our community the farmer and deprives him of the protection accorded to all other classes. It compels him to produce in a free-trade market and to buy in a protected market. It is in the interest of the foreigner and against the American.

An examination of the provisions of the bill and of the terms of the reciprocity agreement of September 1854, will confirm Mr. Fielding's statement that the two are substantially the same. There is this difference, however, that under the 1854 agreement we obtained something—certain fishery rights—under the present we get nothing.

The balance of trade in our own favor last year was one hundred and thirty-eight million and odd dollars.

On the 24th of February, 1903, Mr. Charlton made a speech in the Canadian Parliment on the subject of reciprocity with the United States, in which he showed how favorable existing trade conditions were to the United States, and how unfavorable to Canada. He gives us credit for our business policy.

He said:

"The American policy has been applied not only to us but to all the world. The object of the United States has been to sell all that it possibly could of the products of its soil and its mills and its workshops, and to buy just as little as it could from other countries, and thus having as much of the balance of trade in its own favor as possible. The result has been that the balance of trade in favor of the United States last year amounted to $600,000,000 against the whole world—$71,000,000 against Canada. That is a good thing for the United States, and will be her policy as long as the rest of the whole world will permit her to do it, but it is not a good thing for us."

He goes on to say:

"Something must be done to change the trade conditions that exist between the United States and Canada. Free trade in natural products would afford a reasonable adjustment. Nothing short of this will do it, and this condition of free trade of natural products must be granted by the United States without a solitary concession from Canada further than it has already. We can not afford any more."

Every word spoken by Mr. Charlton in 1903 is as true now as it was then. By the pursuit of a wise business policy in the interest of all her pepole the United States had at that time established conditions in Canada which were most favorable, and these conditions still continue.

Is it not an astounding proposition that we shall legislate away our advantages in the interest of the Canadian?

personal popularity was employed to bring a few of his old legislative friends into line. Most potent however, was the brewery organization, which brought into 'the combination' a number of the "old guard". As a result, Farrington's friends, jaded but not happy, entered the contest claiming 34 votes.

The final stage was the closing hour of the debate of which the four swung back to Froshaug and gave him the victory. That debate was dramatic and of epochical importance to the state. Senators Putnam Gunderson, Sageng, Haycraft and Boyle bore the brunt of the battles for the integrity of the ballot and the latter closed the debate with a challenge to every friend of Farrington to inspect the changed ballots which were in the building, before voting to unseat the man who was obviously being cheated out of his position.

••••••••

I cannot believe that Mr. Farrington was a party to the ballot box tampering, which was repeatedly characterized as "a wholesale crime" The brewery element of his district and the state resented the presence of a prohibitionist in the seat so long held by one of their ablest and most faithful followers. That was Farrington's misfortune—to have the backing of an influence so unscrupulous in politics.

SOME SHORTER SYMTOMS.

As I predicted, the House temperance committee has begun to do business for the brewers. One of their recent acts was to "indefinitely postpone" the J. N. Johnson bill extending local option to cities of the fourth class. A minority report however, was sustained and the measure will be fought out on general orders.

••••••••

The attempt of the "old guard" to regulate the associations and legislative conduct of Clint Robinson would make interesting reading.

Secretary of State, Schmal was not "whitewashed" when H. F. No. 5 came upon the House from the Public Accounts committee Friday. The majority report, censuring him for not following the law in publishing the constitutional amendments, was adapted 81 to 33. It seems certain that all newspapers who printed the amendments in good faith will be paid. Although it has not yet been decided whether the legislature will do it through a curative act or ask Mr. Schman or his bondsmen to make good the amount contracted for illegally. The House was in a humerous mood when the matter came up and sent H. F. No. 5 back to the appropriations committee.

••••••••

A very important bill has been introduced by Representatives Davis, Nolan and Mattson. They are the joint authors of a measure which reduces the list of employees by more than a third. If it passes the capitol commission will be received of the problem of providing portals enough to harmonize with the present number of doorkeepers. As soon as there is an opportunity I shall discuss that evil and this proposed remedy.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 22, 1911. Were the Democrats playing big politics when they rallied to the support of the McCall bill, embodying the terms of the Canadian reciprocity, and gave it practically the united vote of the Democratic House strength? This is the question that is being asked in some quarters. Certain it is that the passage of the bill in the House, backed up by a Republican administration and Democratic votes carries with it a situation deep with political signifiance. The Republicans were hopelessly split in the proposition, and for the first time in years the Democrats presented a solid front. What is the explanation? Some of the Republicans claim that the Democrats in supporting the bill were playing the shrewdest kind of politics, that in fact they had in mind capturing the Northwestern States for the Democrats in the next Presidential campaign. The Democrats argue that the farmers of the States affected by the treaty will resent the action of the House in voting free trade on their products and in the 1912 campaign will show their disapproval by voting for a Democratic President. Following out this line of argument, it is declared that inasmuch as the President fathered the McCall Bill the Republicans alone will have to stand the fault-finding that may result from it from among the Northwestern farmers, even tho the Democrats voted for it. Realizing the situation and the political advantage to which they turn it, the Democrats took the bits in their teeth and set a trap for the Republicans, which it is claimed may lose for the latter the Presidency. The Democrats will have to make their big gains in the Presidential election in the Middle West and the Northwest. It is figured out that any disaffection in the ranks of the farmers in the border States will help swing these into the Democratic column for the Presidency.

•|•|•|•|•|•|•

In connection with this interesting bit of gossip comes the story that the Senate Republican leaders may turn a trick that will prevent the Democrats from securing advantage out of the situation growing out of the House on the McCall bill. It is stated that the Democratic leaders of the House do not want an extra session at this time. They are not organized and in position to tackle the tariff to good advantage at an extra session. If the Senate refuses to permit the reciprocity bill to come to a vote in that body before March 4th, the President would feel compelled to call an extra session, as he has threatened to do. Therefore, so the wise ones say, it would be to the advantage of the Republicans from a political standpoint to not permit the bill to come to a vote, thereby bringing about a situation [illegible] would demand the President's calling Congress in extra session. The Republicans figure that once Congress meets in special session, they will have the Democrats corralled. Won't they make a muss of the tariff: Won't they muddle the whole thing by reason of their unpreparedness? Therefore, so the wise acres say, let's have a special session, So as to put the Democrats in a hole.

•|•|•|•|•|•|•

Discussed from another point of view the recent developments in connection with the passage of the McCall bill make it apparent to some Washington politicians that when once the trade argeement is ratified a hard blow has been delivered at the protective tariff system. Indeed it is declared, that the passage of the McCall bill through the House sounded the death-knell to high tariff schedules. The middle west has always been the trading ground in the making of tariff schedules. The New England States have been enabled to maintain high tariff schedules by reason of the support this section received from the agricultural States in the making of tariff bills. The Northwestern States having given all, under the terms of the McCall bill, will henceforth be in position to make demands on the manufacturing States for lower reductions on manufactured articles and machinery. Herein, in the opinion of many, lies the good that will come out of the Canadian reciprocity controversy. The only fear is, as some express it, that the entire protective system may be doomed. Stated in other terms, if the treaty is adopted, the agricultural States of the Middle West and Northwest will hold the key to the situation so far as future tariff legislation goes, and will be in position to demand greatly reduced duties. The effect will be to divorce entirely this section from the high protective sections. The manufacturing interests having lost the support of the farmers will not be strong enough to command a sufficient number of votes to hold up the present high tariff schedules.

•|•|•|•|•|•|•

The vote of the Minnesota members who represent rural districts, including Davis, Lindberg, Volstad, Steenerson and Hammond was the logical vote for them to cast. A careful canvass of the districts by wire and letter convinced these members that the sentiment in the country was overwhelmingly against the reciprocity bill. Therefore, their vote in opposition to the McCall bill, reflected the prevailing public opinion in the rural districts. That these members were in favor of a reciprocal trade agreement which would place on the free list some of the things the farmer uses, as well as the food products he grows is shown by their affirmative vote on the Dalzell motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to add the following articles to the free list: fresh meats and all meat products, flour, prepared cereal foods, bran, agricultural implements, cotton ties and bagging, binding twine and lumber.

•|•|•|•|•|•|•

Tawney did not vote on the McCall bill. President Taft gave a dinner to Speaker Cannon the night the vote was taken and Tawney was one of the guests. Although the dinner was delayed an hour, while the House was voting, Mr. Tawney apparently took advantage of the invitation to dodge a vote. It is stated that two or three days before the bill came to a vote, he had changed front and would support the bill.

•|•|•|•|•|•|•

Sidney Anderson, congressman-elect from the first Minnesota district is in Washington and will remain here until Congress adjourns. In case of an extra session, he will take his seat immediately. Whether he does or not, he will draw his salary from March 4th. Mr. Anderson is making an excellent impression here and is spoken of as a young man of good material, who has promise of developing into a legislator of prominence.

MONSTER SUNDAY SCHOOL PARADE.

One of the great features of the Minnesota Sunday School Convention to be held in Mankato, March 8-9-10, will be a men's Bible Class Demonstration in the form of a Monster Parade on the last night of the convention. A committee of Mankato's strongest business men have the arrangements in hand. A Twin City Bible Class Special Train will carry 500 Bible Class men to the convention on Friday, March 10th, leaving Minneapolis at 11 o'clock a. m., and St. Paul at 11:30 A. M., and arriving in Mankato at 1:45 or 2:00 o'clock, P. M.

Each of the organized classes in Minnesota is requested to send a representative at least. Mankato alone is planning to have 500 men in line, and it is expected that at least 2,500 men will march in the Parade, thus exhibiting the virility of Sunday School work and emphasizing the importance of Bible study.

The Mankato band will lead the procession and it is expected that many other bands will lead delegates from other cities. This is only one feature of the great days convention in which four noted specialists from outside the State and many great leaders in Sunday school work in our own State are engaged as speakers and instructors. A great Bazaar and Sunday School Exhibit will be opened for the study of all.

THE FARMER AND HIS BANK ACCOUNT

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need for a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year, he must pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money owed, but the farmer who pays his obligations by check has written evidence of such payments which any court must recognize. In the same way he has a record of monies received by the deposit entries on his bank book.

To the farmer, who desires such a record for his business, we extend an invitation to open an account with this bank.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO CHAS. A. ROBBECKE.

TO OGAHMAH CAMP NO. 3401 MODERN WOODMEN OF AMERICA.

We, the eulogium committee, appointed to prepare a tribute of respect to our departed Neighbor, Charles A. Robbecke, to be presented to his widow and engrossed upon the Records of this Society, have the honor to report the following:

The members of Ogahmah Camp No. 3401 of the Modern Woodmen of America offer these words of consolation to the widow and children of our departed Neighbor, Charles A. Robbecke.

Charles A. Robbecke was a charter member of our Camp and was one of us for more than fifteen years. We knew him as a loving husband, a kind and indulgent father, whose uppermost thought was always for the welfare of his family. He was honorable in his dealings with all

We shall miss him at our Camp mankind; and never turned a deserving fellow man from his door.

Fire; no longer shall we hear the sweet accents of love that flowed from his lips, but we may profit by his words of wisdom; and his cheerful face will be cherished in our memories forever.

He who was dearest of all on earth to you and beloved by us has changed his earthly abode for to which he will one day welcome you and us.

"Like swallows we wander from home to home-
We are birds of passage at best,
In many a spot we have dwelt awhile,
We have built us many a nest.
But the heart of the Father will touch our hearts,
He will speak to us soft and low,
We shall follow the Voice to the better land,
And its bliss and its Beauty know."

"There is no death! the stars go down.
To rise upon some fairer shore:
And bright in Heaven's jewelled crown
They shine forever more."

"There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tin flowers."

"There is no death! The forest leaves
Convert to life the viewless air;
The rocks disorganize to feed
The hungry moss they bear."

"There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved ones away;
And then we call them 'dead'."

"Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them the same-
Except their sin and pain."

"And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life- there are no dead."

School Notes.

Wednesday being a legal holiday, there was no school held on that date.

The Crookston basket ball team defeated the local players last Saturday evening by reason of their superior basket throwing. The Thief River boys could get the ball near the basket often enough, but failed to complete the trick a sufficient number of times to win.

Everything is ready for the dedication of the Lincoln building and the event will prove of more than ordinary interest and importance. Invitations have been issued to all boards of education, teachers and principals and other persons in the northwestern part of the state who are interested in educational work.

Miss Twinam visited the Alexandria schools last Friday. This town is one of the favored ten high school in the state which is presenting special work and which received special aid for same. A bill adding fifteen more high schools to this list was presented in the legislature last week and recommended to pass. This is likely where this city will score again, as Thief River Falls has provided for all this special work and has been carrying it on without any assistance from the state for some time. The last special department was added to the local school this year and the chances of being made one of the fortunate fifteen are more than ordinarily promising.

Next Monday is visiting day in the Thief River schools, particularly at the new Lincoln building. No one in the city should miss examining this splendid building some time during the day.

The Senior class will entertain the Juniors at the Antlers Club rooms next Friday evening. This is an annual event and will be an interesting affair.

A meeting of the mothers and other ladies in the city interested in educational work will be held at the Lincoln assembly room on Thursday afternoon, March 2nd at 3:45. The purpose of the meeting is to perfect some form of organization for the whole city or for the ward schools, whereby the school authorities will the more easily secure the co-operation of the parents in school affairs. Invitations will be sent to all homes by the children.

What "Hamlet" Lacked.

In a mining camp town "Hamlet" was one evening given by a strolling company, and this is the criticism that appeared next day in the local papers, written by the miner dramatic critic:

"There is too much chinning in this piece. The author is behind the times and seems to forget that what we want nowadays is hair raising situations and detectives.

"In the hands of a skillful playwright a detective would have been put upon the track of Hamlet's uncle, and the old man would have been hunted down in a manner that would have lifted the audience out of their cowhides.

"The moral of the piece is not good. The scene where Hamlet sasses his mother is a very bad example to the rising generation.

"Our advice to the author is more action, more lovemaking and plenty of specialties. The crazy girl scene should be cut out altogether and a rattling good song and dance substituted."

Charles V. at Table.

Emperor Charles V. of Austria, by far the most powerful ruler of his day, was thus described as he appeared at table by Roger Ascham, secretary to the English ambassador, in 1550: "I stood hard by the emperor's table. He had four courses; he had sod beef—very good—roast mutton, baked hare; these be no service in England. The emperor hath a good face, a constant look; he fed well of a capon; I have had a better from mine hostess Barnes many times in my chamber. He and Ferdinando, king of the Romans, ate together very handsomely, carving themselves where they list, without any curiosity. The emperor drank the best that ever I saw; he had his head in the glass five times as long as any of us and never drank less than a good quart at once of Rhenish wine." It was notorious that the emperor ate and drank immoderately, and as a natural result he suffered terribly from gout from the time he was thirty years old.

Game to the Last.

Douglas MacDonald and his old crony, Donald MacDougal, were once opposed to each other in a famous curling match, and the last two stones to finish the game were the two cronies'. Donald MacDougal, with enormous deliberation, threw his stone. He threw it well. He made what is called a pat lid and jumped for joy. Then it was Douglas MacDonald's turn. His case seemed hopeless, but such a splendid throw did he make that the pat lid was knocked off, and his stone lay at the side of the tee, winning the game. In his joy the old fellow jumped sky high. He came down so hard that he broke right through the ice. He sank, but, bobbing up again, he shouted from the cold water:

"Hi, lads, we've won, and if I dinna come oot o' here alive be sure ye pit that stone on my grave!"—Exchange.

Dirt and Death.

When a celebrated Paris physician was asked how the city could prevent the coming of a plague then ravaging other European places he answered, "Boil your ice!" That tersely called attention to the necessity of utter cleanliness and that even ice made from impure water carried disease.

"Yellow fever," said Henry Ward Beecher, "is God Almighty's opinion of dirt." The chief contributing cause toward modern efficiency in surgery is that surgeons have learned to keep clean. Nothing is so spotless as a good hospital. Everything is boiled and sterilized—beds, instruments, clothing, washrags, floors, hands and finger nails. That is why they save lives there. Nobody would die if he could keep perfectly clean. Death is the final triumph of dirt.—Chicago Tribune.

He Understood the People.

One of Jay Gould's campaigns as a dealer in railways was with the Wabash system of railroads. He got control and after effecting a reorganization which increased the capital stock and also the bonded debt sold them out. It is related of him at this time that an associate said to him, "Mr. Gould, don't you think you are bonding this much higher than the property will stand?" "That may be," answered he, "but the American people are mighty partial to bonds."

PANIC BUGABOO BROUGHT OUT

Extra Session Bad for Business, Old Guard Says.

DOUBT IT WILL BE CALLED

Prediction Made That President Will Change His Mind When Effect Is Pointed Out to Him.

Washington, Feb. 21.—That an extra session invites a general business calamity is the answer of the old guard opposition to President Taft's plain ultimatum that an extra session will be called unless there is a vote in the senate on Canadian reciprocity before March 4. The president's ultimatum was conveyed to congress and the public by Representative McCall in an interview given out after a conference between the Massachusetts representative and the president.

Soon thereafter senate leaders got busy working up the bugaboo of impending disaster. They discused the matter among themselves and with newspaper men and they sent word to the White House that the president's determination to call an extra session was virtually an invitation to serious trouble in the business world. They argued that the entire tariff question would be opened up by the Democrats at an extra session and that there could be but one result of this, particularly since the business interests of the country had barely had time to compose themselves after the agitation and uncertainty incident to the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich law.

"President Taft doubtless thinks now that he will call an extra session if the Canadian reciprocity agreement is not ratified by the senate, said one of the old guard leaders, "but I believe that when he sees the certain result of this he will change his mind. I can't believe that the president will deliberately invite a general business disaster."

SEVEN PERISH IN FLAMES

Only Father of West Virginia Family Escapes With Life.

Sutton, W. Va., Feb. 21.—Seven persons lost their lives in a fire which destroyed the home of J. D. Hardin in this city. Only Mr. Hardin escaped, the six remaining members of his family and a little girl who made her home with the Hardins perishing in the flames.

The fire was caused by a natural gas grate. When Mrs. Hardin awoke the entire first floor was ablaze. Awakening her husband, he seized two of the children and dashed for a stairway, which immediately collapsed. The two children were lost, while the father was precipitated to a point of safety. Mrs Hardin, seeing the stairway fall, jumped from the second-story window, receiving injuries from which she died later.

The bodies of the five Hardin children and that of Ada Green were cremated.

JOIN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Syracuse (N. Y.) Mail Clerks Take Revolutionary Step.

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 21.—Two hundred and forty-eight railway mail clerks here took a revolutionary step for government employes by affiliating with the American Federation of Labor, receiving a charter therefrom and electing and installing officers.

The new organization, which stands on the same basis as a labor union, is to be known as the Railway Mail Clerks' Protective association and is the first organization of postal employes to join the ranks of organized labor.

The clerks claim they have not the right to appeal and cannot reach the department to better their conditions.

NAVARRO REACHES JUAREZ

Federal Commander Relieves the Beseiged Town.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 16.—The much advertised campaign against Juarez is believed to be at an end as the result of the coming of General Navarro, who has reached that city at the head of 1,000 infantry and 500 cavalry.

Everywhere in Juarez there is rejoicing and the city is rapidly resuming its former activities.

Navarro is the hero of the hour and the federal officials are hailing him as the savior of Northern Mexico.

Builder of New York's Subway Reported Dangerously Ill.

SUBWAY BUILDER VERY ILL

Family of John B. McDonald Alarmed Over His Condition.

New York, Feb. 19.—With an attack of chronic bronchitis and a complication of diseases, John B. McDonald, the subway builder, is gravely ill in his apartment in the Dakota, at Seventy-second street and Central Park West. Mr. McDonald has been ill and under the care of a physician seven weeks. Dr. F. Leroy Satterlee is attending him.

Mr. McDonald's family is alarmed over his condition. In the last few days he has shown little if any improvement.

RUSSIA TO MAKE DEMONSTRATION

Alleges Breach of Treaty by Chinese Empire.

London, Feb. 17.—The relations of Russia and China are strained to the breaking point.

Russia has notified the governments of Great Britain, France and Germany of her intention to make a military demonstration on the Russo-Chinese frontier owing to China's persistent violation of the St. Petersburg treaty of 1881.

Russian troops will be sent forthwith to the district of Ili.

The extent of the demonstration, it is added in the diplomatic note, will depend entirely upon the attitude assumed by China.

The vital questions involved are free trade in Mongolia, the extraterritorial rights of Russia in China and the establishment of a Russian consulate at Koebdo, Mongolia.

There has been rumors recently of an intention by Russia to bring pressure to bear upon China because of alleged violations of the Russo-Chinese treaty. That the situation was acute, however, has been denied both by the Chinese foreign board and the Russian legation at Peking.

HELD TO BE FRAUDULENT

Land Office Cancels Entries to Valuable Coal Lands.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Decisions handed down by the commissioner of the general land office hold for cancellation thirty-two coal cash entries embracing valuable coal lands in the Lander (Wyo.) land district, upon the ground that those entries were made fraudulently in pursuance of a conspiracy and by means of "dummy" entrymen. The lands were transferred to the Northwestern Coal company and the Owl Creek Coal company, alleged to have been organized for the purpose of taking them over.

If the decisions of the land office are sustained by the department of the interior, to which an appeal can be made, about 9,500 acres of coal land, valued at about $1,000,000, will be restored to the public domain.

HOUSE ADOPTS CLOTURE RULE

Action Ends Long Filibuster on Claims Bill.

WILL EXPEDITE ALL BUSINESS

Under Its Provisions Appropriation and Other Measures Can Be Rushed Through.

Washington, Feb. 21.—The great majority of the Democrats in the house voted with the Republicans, 173 to 43, for the adoption of a rule providing that all house rules can be suspended on a two-thirds vote during the remainder of the session, so that appropriation and other measures can be rushed through without amendment after forty minutes' debate.

The adoption of the rule, which was characterized by Mr. Bennet of New York as a "gag," had the effect of ending the three days' filibuster against the omnibus war claims bill, which provides for the payment of $1,160,000 of war claims, but does not include any French spoliation or navy yard overtime claims.

The claims bill was passed by a two-thirds vote. The ayes and nays were not demanded.

The rule adopted by the house practically puts the entire conduct of affairs for the next two weeks in the hands of the speaker.

Quorum Is Present.

As soon as the house convened the point of no quorum was made and a roll call ordered. The clerk reported 201 members present, a quorum. The reading of the omnibus bill for amendments was begun.

Representative Roberts of Massachusetts, one of the new filibusterers, offered as an amendment the entire list of French claims and demanded the reading of the seventy printed pages. Mr. Mann made a point of order that the amendment was not germane.

While this point was pending Representative Dalzell of Pennsylvania brought in from the committee on rules a rule providing for the suspension of the rules on all bills from now until the end of the session.

Whatever suspension is invoked it limits all discussion to forty minutes on each measure. Mr. Dalzell said the state of the public business required the adoption of the rule.

Rule Helps Tariff Board.

The sundry civil bill, which will soon be reported to the house by Representative Tawney, with an appropriation of $400,000 for the purpose of the tariff board, is assured of passage under the terms of the gag rule adopted in the house.

The rule provides that measures may be passed under suspension of the rules, thus barring amendments and points of order. The house must accept the bill in whole if two-thirds of the house vote to take it up.

The opposition to the tariff board provision, in order to defeat it, would have to defeat the bill in whole, thus forcing an extra session of congress regardless of what happens to Canadian reciprocity. The bill providing for a permanent tariff board now pending in the senate stands little or no chance of passing that body. It is therefore imperative if the administration desires to continue its inquiries into the tariff to carry the provision in the sundry civil bill.

CAUSES PANIC IN CONVENT

Bomb Exploded Near Entrance of New York Institution.

New York, Feb. 21.—A hundred girls, inmates of the St. Cecelia convent on East One Hundred and Sixth street, were thrown into panic by the explosion of a dynamite bomb in the street a few feet from the entrance of the convent.

The bomb did practically no damage. The noise of the explosion was terrific and buildings for a block or more in every direction were shaken. The inmates of the convent were asleep, but jumped out of their beds and rushed in terror to stairways and fire escapes. The sisters quieted them with difficulty.

LOSS IS HALF A MILLION

Seven Firemen Injured In Chicago Elevator Fire.

Chicago, Feb. 19.—Fire destroyed the Calumet elevator, a six-story structure containing 500,000 bushels of grain, causing a loss estimated to be $500,000. Seven firemen were injured while escaping from the building following an explosion of grain dust.

Congressman Allen Dead.

Washington, Feb. 21.—Representative Amos L. Allen (Rep., Me.) died of pneumonia at his apartments here following several days illness. His daughter, Miss Laura E. Allen of Alfred Me., and son, Dr. Edward C. Allen of Boston, were with him when he died. Mr. Allen was seventy-four years of age and had been a member of congress since 1899.

A Fresh Egg.

An English food expert, said in a recent lecture:

"The secret of health is two meals a day with an occasional fast. But people won't avail themselves of this superb secret. It is too unpleasant—like the fresh egg. A gentleman, after cutting the top off a soft boiled egg, summoned the waiter and said:

"'Waiter, take this egg back to the kitchen, wring its neck, and grill it for me.'"

Thought It Was a Joke.

The Colonel—And you actually assert that you want to marry my daughter? Fusby—Y-yes. The Colonel (staring at him unpleasantly)—You know I am English. Fusby—Y-yes, sir. The Colonel—Well, it's going to take me several years to see the point of your little joke. Good day to you.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TORTURED FOR 15 YEARS

by a cure-defying stomach trouble that baffled doctors, and resisted all remedies he tried, John W. Modders, of Moddersville, Mich., seemed doomed. He had to sell his farm and give up work. His neighbors said, "he can't live much longer." "Whatever I ate distressed me," he wrote, "till I tried Electric Bitters, which worked such wonders for me that I can now eat things I could not take for years. Its surely agrand remedy for stomach trouble." Just as good for the liver and kidneys. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50 cents at all Druggists.

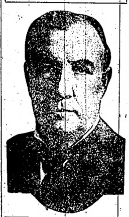
HOKE SMITH.

Bryan Pledges Him Support for Presidential Nomination.



BRYAN FAVORS HOKE SMITH

Aserts Governor Elect of Georgia Is Presidential Timber.

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 17.—Hoke Smith as the Democratic candidate for president in 1912 looks good to W J. Bryan Twice while in Atlanta Bryan pledged his support to Smith.

"If a Southern man is nominated for president," said Bryan, "and I see no reason why he should not be, and if that man were Governor Elect Smith, and I see no reason why he should not be, I will work for him as hard as he did for me on the occasions when I made the race.

"He is presidential timber."

RESOLUTION KILLED BY DECISIVE VOTE

House Committee Squelches Annexation Talk.

Washington, Feb. 18.—To offset the Canadian annexation talk which the administration feared might effect the reciprocity agreement, the house committee on foreign affairs, by a vote of 9 to 1, reported adversely on the resolution introduced by Representative William S Bennett of New York for the opening of negotiations with Great Britain looking to the annexation of Canada.

Mr Bennett was the only member of the committee who voted for the resolution and the committee's action followed conferences of Chairman Foster of the committee and Acting Chairman McCall of the ways and means committee with President Taft.

Miller's Daughter at Bedside.

Oakland, Cal., Feb. 21.—Miss Juanita Miller, daughter of the poet, Joaquin Miller, arrived here from New York and hastened immediately to the hospital where her father is lying dangerously ill. The physicians in attendance hold out no hope of the poet's recovery.

For Breakfast Try "Sunkist" Oranges

Luscious Tree-Ripened Fruit

It is not sufficient to know that oranges are the most healthful of all fruits. It is quite as important to know the kind of oranges that are most healthful and most palatable. The very finest California oranges are now packed under the label "Sunkist." Please serve "Sunkist" oranges at breakfast tomorrow and learn the superiority of tree-ripened, seedless, fiberless oranges over the commonplace kind. Don't fail to save the wrappers.

There is so much "meat" and nourishment in "Sunkist" oranges and so little waste that, in addition to their extra fine flavor and goodness, they are really the most economical oranges to buy.

"Sunkist" Lemons Juiciest

Lemons differ as much as oranges. Pithy, thick-skinned lemons contain very little juice. You waste money when you buy them. Please ask for "Sunkist" Lemons and note how uniformly sound each one is, and what a small percentage is skin and fiber.

Get This Valuable Orange Spoon

Save 12 "Sunkist" orange (or lemon) wrappers and send them to us, with 12 cents to pay charges, packing, etc., and we will present you with a genuine Rogers Orange Spoon, of beautiful design and highest quality. Begin saving wrappers today. If you desire more than one, send 12 "Sunkist" wrappers and 12 cents for each additional spoon. In remitting, please send one-cent stamps when the amount is less than 24 cents; on amounts above 24 cents, we prefer money order, express order or bank draft. Don't send cash. We will be glad to send you complete list of valuable premiums. We honor both "Sunkist" and "Red Ball" wrappers for premiums. (32)

MAY ARRIVE AT VOTE IN SENATE

Opponents of McCall Bill Will Canvass Members.

COURSE DEPENDS ON LINEUP

Should Count of Noses Develop Strength Enough to Defeat Measure Putting in Effect Reciprocity With Canada Regulars Will Allow Vote to Be Taken—Otherwise No Action Will Result at Present Session.

Washington, Feb. 21.—"The Canadian agreement will come to a vote in the senate at this session if its opponents believe they are in a position to defeat it. Otherwise action on it will have to be deferred."

This was the reply made by Senator Gamble of South Dakota to a question as to what, in his opinion, were the prospects for the enactment of the Canadian agreement into law at this session.

"The McCall bill embodying the terms of the agreement stands no show of passage at this time," said Senator Gamble. "I doubt whether we will vote on it at this session. Certainly there will be no vote on the measure if a canvass discloses that a majority favors it. Such a bill should have very careful consideration. I am firmly of the belief that if its terms were properly elucidated in debate the agreement would not pass."

Senator Gamble went on to say that as a protectionist and as an advocate of that policy on the stump and in congress for many years, he could never bring himself to subscribe to the principles of the Canadian agreement.

"So far as the people of South Dakota and the North generally are concerned," said Senator Gamble, "it is nothing more or less than free trade. The president, of course, construes the Canadian arrangement as an example of reciprocity. But so far as the farmer is concerned this measure does not appeal to me as reciprocity and I cannot support it."

Administration leaders admitted chances were all against the McCall bill so far as this session is concerned.

Standpatters Will Not Recede.

The senate standpatters evidently are not to be brought into line by the threat of a special session. Nor have they shown any disposition to recede from their position by the assurance they will be held responsible for any business disturbance which might follow an attempt on the part of the Democrats to revise the tariff in whole at a special session.

Senators Hale of Maine, Heyburn of Idaho and McCumber of North Dakota are determined to fight the administration to a finish. They are willing, it is understood, to filibuster against the McCall bill if need be to prevent it reaching a vote before March 4.

It is really the opposition of the senate standpatters that bars the way to a vote on the McCall bill. The argument that in the event of the failure of the agreement the president was certain to call a special session, with the result that the tariff as a whole might be revised, has had no effect on them. The standpatters are in an ugly frame of mind, determined to fight Canadian reciprocity as laid down in the McCall bill to the utmost.

Senate progressives are spending a lot of time these days studying the terms of the agreement. Most of them are opposed to the pact, but just how they would vote, in case a vote were taken at this session, is problematical. It was said in behalf of the progressives that they would not join in a filibuster against the McCall bill. The progressives, however, insist that time should be given for extended discussion of the terms of the agreement.

ROUGHAGE FOR 1911.

Owing to the 1910 drought, lots of tame grass seeded in the spring failed to get started. This will leave many farms a little short for roghage. Many letters are coming to the Experiment Station regarding the advisability of sowing cow peas, field peas and other crops that will provide protein in place of the clover hay that has been lost. Experience at University Farm does not indicate the advisability of sowing very much of these crops. Soy beans and cow peas make excellent growth here, but our climate coditions are usually unfavorable for curing them. She stems are very heavy and succulent, and it is exceedingly difficult to get them well cured for hay. The same trouble has been experienced in handling field peas, though they are not as troublesome as the soy beans and cow peas, especially if they are sown together with some grain-crop like oats however, oats and peas together make a rather bulky form of hay, which is quite difficult to cure, especially from the fact that it is practically impossible to so cock it in the field that it will shed water.

Another serious disadvantage in growing peas very extensively for roughage is the cost of the seed. It requires from two to three bushels per acre for a fairly good stand, and the seed usually costs about $1.50 per bushel.

We think that millet and fodder corn should be used very largely this coming season. to supply the roughage. Fodder corn can be grown at a cost of about $3.50 per ton, and is worth $6 per ton for feeding when bran is worth $20 per ton. With fodder corn and millet as the roughage portion of a ration, and bran, shorts and oil meal as the grain portion, a very well-balanced ration is secured, and one that is not unreasonably expensive. Of course, if clover hay can be introduced, the ration could be cheapened; but since we haven't clover hay, the problem is to provide feed next winter at the least possible cost; and considering the extra cost and uncertainty of annual legumes for roughage-production in this state it would seem safer to as least provide plenty of fodder corn and millet, and depend on mill-feeds for the necessary protein.—A D. Wilson, Extension Division, University Farm.

AVOID HARSH DRUGS.

Many Cathartics Tend to Cause Injury to the Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation, you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely remedy constipation. This preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt, soothing and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principal ingredient is odorless, tasteless and colorless. Combined with other well known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge nor cause nausea. They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak, delicate persons and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in two size packages, 12 tablets 10 cents, 36 tablets 25 cents. Remember you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store.

VOL. XXII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 1911. NO. 29

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

TWO TEST VOTES IN LEGISLATURE

Fraushag-Farrington and Campbell Initiative and Referendum Bills Considered Indexes.

The legislature has gone on record in two of the most vital votes ever cast in the history of the state. One of them was the record in the Farrington-Froshaugh contest given last week; the other the vote by which the House refused to advance the Campbell initiative and referendum bill. Both of these tests, one in each branch, sprang from the same source. Both point to the same conclusion—that the liquor organization is the most active and powerful political influence in the state. And correlated with that conclusion is the undisputable fact that there are only a very small minority of democrats in either branch who cannot be banquetted or bullied by the brewers.

••••••••

In the Senate eighteen out of the twenty democrats in that body entered into a combination with twelve of the "old guard" republicans to seat Farrington. That contest is history, but its importance pertains to the present and the future. It means that the notorious "Senate combine", which was kept intact for more than a decade, is being reassembled and put in working order by and for the special interests. Nearly all of those thirty Farrington votes can be held in line for the whole reactionary program, and there are five or six other senators who can probably be brought into the combination. Had the Senate not been organized in the best possible way by a progressive, it is probable that both Stephens and Farrington would have been seated and the "combine" doing business long before this. Watch the Senate.

••••••••

In the House, on February 21st, twenty-four out of its twenty-six democratic members, each of whom had appealed to the people of his district that he might be sent to St. Paul for the special and all-important purpose of enacting into law the initiative, referendum and recall, joined with forty-one of the same kind of republicans in an attempt to sound the death knell of an honest, effective direct legislation measure. This test came on a motion of Representative Campbell to make his initiative and referendum bill 'a special order." Let me give the "line-up" and then explain the situation.

drew Anderson, J. J. Anderson, Booth

To advance the Campbell bill—Anroyd, Burnquist, Campbell, Christie, Conley, Crane, Davies, Davis, Ferguson, Frankson, Harding, Holmberg, Holten, Hopkins, C. E. Johnson, J. N. Johnson, J. T. Johnson Kleiner, wards and Converse, and these to-Kneeland, Knutson, I. J. Lee, J. F. Lee, Lindberg, Lundeen, McMartin, Mattson, H. Nelson, Nolan, O'Neill, Orr, Palmer, A. J. Peterson, J. E. Peterson, Putnam, Rines, Rustad, Sampson, Skartum, W. T. Stone, E. Warner, Washburn and Webb, republicans 44; A. V. Anderson, Morton, Sulerud and Voxland, prohibitionists 4; Farley and Robinson, democrats 2; Hillman, socialist 1. Total 51.

For delay and the Pfaender program—Aker, Borgen, G. W. Brown, L. D. Brown, Congdon, Conxerse, Denzer, R. C. Dunn, Edwards, Fuchs, Greene, Hafftan, Hange, Healy, Hoffman, Henion, Jelinek, Knapp, Kunze, S. N. Lee, Lennon, Libera, Lydiard, McKenzie, Alex Nelson, Nye, Papke, Perry, Ole Peterson Rud. Rice, Ribertson, Spooner, C. E. Stone, C. H. Warner, Wescott, White and Speaker H. H Dunn, republicans 41; Clarke, Herzberg, Hurley, Just, Keefe, Kelley, McDonald, Mettling, Minnette, Moriarity, Nygren, O'Brien Peters, Pfaender Ribnenack, Saggen, Schuler, Schwartz Sullivan, Thielan, Untiedt, Utecht, Virtue and Wiesnienski; democrats, 24. Total 65.

Diessner, Fisher, Nash and Whitin were absent and did not vote.

Two voting for and several against the Campbell motion changed their attitude three days later, as will be seen in another paragraph.

Every form of special interest in Minnesota is opposed to the initiative and referendum. They fear the initiative more than the referendum because their program is to obstruct and not construct legislation. The brewery combine does not want the people to have any opportunity to initiate a county option or "daylight lid" law. The steel trust fears a tonnage tax thru the same source. The railroad ring has a distance tariff and possibly state ownerships of transportation utilities to face. Other kinds of corporations are selfishly interested in the defeat of a practical direct legislation bill.

But an overwhelming majority of both branches are pledged to enact such a law. This is particularly true of the democrats. Their platform and campaign speeches emphasized that issue above all else. To meet such a situation, the only way in which that general pre-election pledge can be kept and at the same time do the brewery and other special interests no harm is to pass a bill with percentage so high that the law will be practically worthless. Albert Pfaender of New Ulm, democratic floor leader, has fathered a bill requiring thirty-five percent to initiate. He led the fight against the Campbell motion. More than that he was opposed to advancing his own bill by making it a "special order" and on his own motion it was placed on general orders. Twenty-four democrats and forty-one republicans, as noted above, voted with him.

To make the situation clear, in all seven initiative and referendum bills were introduced early in the session and referred to the elections committee. That committee not only did not do anything to aid the House in the matter, but after holding them away from the parent body for weeks dumped all seven bills back without amendment or recommendation of any kind, with the Pfaender bill at the head of the list. That happened February 21st.

The Pfaender 35 percent bill came first, of course. Instead of attempting to advance the measure by making it a special order Mr. Pfaender had it placed on general orders. Mr. Campbell, whose bill providing for eight percent to initiate is backed by the Progressive Republican League and othre reform organizations moved it be made a special order. By a general understanding three of the other bills on the subject were indefinitely postponed. As has already been recorded, the Campbell motion was defeated 65 to 51.

Had it been carried, and the bill been made a "special order", there would have been no opportunity for delay or dodging. When a measure is being considered as a special order, debate cannot be restricted, an aye and no vote can be demanded on every amendment or action in connection with it, and a final vote on the bill is taken. On general orders it is contrary to the rules to call the roll on amendments and final action can be deferred indefinitely if a majority is not honestly for the measure No direct record of the percentages can be had on general orders. It might even be possible for a majority to so amend the bill, without any public record of their actions, that the progressives would have to vote against it.

••••••••

Now I come to a more pleasing incident of the controversy. On Friday Mr. Pfaender and several who had voted with him were not present. Accordingly friends of hte Campbell bill secured a reconsideration of the 65 to 51 vote. Representative Edwards made the motion to consider, which was seconded by Representative Converse. A number of others who had voted against the Campbell motion on the previous Tuesday withcance of their action supported Edout fully understanding the signifigether with almost all of the original fifty-one, accomplished the reconsideration and made theCampbell a special order for March 9th, at eleven o'clock by a vote of 57 to 50. This second test on the question is different from the roll call published above in these particulars.

Absent and not voting—Congdon, Fisher, Hafften, Hurley, Jelinek, Kelly, Knapp, Knutson, Papke, Pfaender Sampson, Thielan, and Washburn. Of these absentees Mr. Fisher was not present on Tuesday. All of the others excepting Knutson, Sampson, and Washburn voted against the Campbell motion on the 21st.

Changed from Pfaender to Campbell—Andrew Anderson and H. Nelson.

Messrs. Diessner, Whitting, and Nash were absent Tuesday. On Friday the first two voted with Campbell. Nash with Pfaender.

Senator T. E. Cashman's distance tariff bill was defeated Friday, 32 to 29. Two more were absent—Senators Duxbury and Nelson. The

Lincoln H. S. Dedicated Gov. Eberhart & Supt. Schulz Partake

History of Independent School District No. 18 as Given in Brief by Sec. of School Board

Dr. G. A. Penney.

The dedication of the Lincoln High School building took place last Monday. This event will long be remembered as one of the epoch making events of the history of Thief River Falls. Great credit is due to Professor Hay for his untiring efforts and endeavors not only in making this building what it is but also in the preparation of afternoon and evening programs that were inspiring to all.

The principal address of the afternoon was delivered by State Supt. of Public Instruction, C. J. Shultz, and the principal feature of attraction of the evening was the dedicatory address by Governor Eberhart. Several of the local educators also took part in the programs and as we believe that the short historical sketch given by Dr. Penney, of Independent School District No. 18 will be of more interest to our readers than would a brief of either of the speeches given by our State Officials we quote this here in full.

Until 1901, the east and west sides of the Red Lake river in this city were two separate organizations for educational purposes.

The first schools taught in Thief River Falls then known as the west side, in common school district number 107, Polk county, was a three months' term in the summer of 1883, with Miss Helen Wallin officiating as superintendent, principal, faculty, janitor, all in one. The enrollment number only ten children, eight of the Labree family and two of Lyman Clark's little ones. Later, Miss Wallin taught the school in a small building on Third street, which still stands in the rear of the Remmem livery barn. The furniture which adorned this modest temple of learning was a dry goods box for a teacher's desk and a few rough boards laid on some empty powder kegs for the pupil's seats. The school was held in a cottage which stood in the grove of trees at the west end of the bridge on First street.

As the years passed by, the attendance naturally increased, so the board of trustees finally purchased the cottage in the grove and moved it across the street. It served for a school for some years and is now standing in the same spot and in use as a dwelling. The men to whom the few citizens of those days delegated the honor of serving as the first trustees in the little village were John LaBree, director; Ed LaBree, clerk; and Dennis Connelly, treasurer. The last named gentleman is still a resident of this city. In 1893 half a block of land was secured on Fourth street and LaBree avenue for school purposes and a four room frame building erected. This was considered a great advance in educational affairs in the town and at that time set the mark for progress. This handsome school building was named the Central and today it forms the east half of the present eight room Central building.

In the winter the east side of the Red Lake river boasted a small collection of houses and had a village organized known as Red Lake Rapids and their school was organized as number 58, Polk county. Mr. O. T. Tandberg, now deceased and recently county treasurer of Red Lake county, taught the first school in the district in a small house just north of the German Lutheran church in September, 1894. The first board consisted of W. T. McCrum, director; Oscar Anderson, clerk; and August Brown, treasurer. How short is the history of this city is shown by the fact that these pioneers in educational matters are still active members of the community. During the year a two room building was constructed on lots donated by C. J. Knox and the building was named the Knox school in honor of the donor. This two room school was burned to the ground in January, 1895, but was immediately replaced by another two room structure. The latter is today the central portion of the present eight room Knox building on the east end of the original building.

About this date, the two schools in the villages had been advanced to the positions of state graded schools, and as both sides of the river had previously joined hands municipally and organized the city of Thief River Falls, efforts were started to unite the old districts. This met with much opposition, but after a bitter fight extending over three years, they were merged and organized as the "Indipendent School District, Number 18, Red Lake county" This step was preparatory to the establishment of a state high school, and the latter action was accomplished in the year 1902. To house this new organization, bonds were issued and the present high school block was purchased and the brick school building edected. This was in 1903 and even at this late date the construction of this much needed school met with the most serious opposition and the residents proved that they were unable to anticipate the future of the city. A large number of citizens did not fail to express their decided disapproval of the erection of what was designated as an unnecessary and expensive and large structure. The board, however, completed the building, feeling that it would soon be required.

In 1904, following the opening of the Red Lake Indian reservation and the advent of the Soo railway, the little city had completely outgrown its educational clothes and the school children were stored away in churches and vacant houses about the town. The building proposition again had to be faced, so in 1907 a four room brick building was added to the Knoxschool, and the Central was increased to a full eight room school. Several improvements were made in the buildings and about the grounds. Then it was the settled conviction of all that ample accommodations had been provided for the youth of Thief River Falls for many years to come, but again the citizens failed to keep step with the growth of the town. In the years 1907, 1908 and 1909 alternations were made in the high school building and every foot of space was made available for school purposes, but still the increasing family of school children made local conditions resemble the old woman who lived in a shoe. Again in 1909, vacant stores were utilized to relieve the crowded class rooms. The high school enrollment had increased in 1910 to 197 and more room became imperative. So in 1910, the board of education erected the present Lincoln building and the Mechanical building adjoining, and the old high school, though but about eight years old, was named the Washington and became a grade school.

It is the general belief that school building will cease for a time in this city, though there are those who are bold enough to predict that history will repeat itself and that more grade rooms will soon have to be provided. Be that as it may, the city will in the future as it has done in the past make ample provision to give every boy and girl within the limits of the corporation a modern common and high school education absolutely free, that he or she may begin life's serious battles on an equal footing with the youth of other sections.

The district now owns five first class school buildings. The grounds are clean, well drained and well kept and serve as parks for the city. The schools are known as the Knox, Central, Washington, Lincoln and Mechanical. The first three are eight room grade buildings. The Mechanical is well equipped with benches and machinery and electric power and is a comfortable brick structure beneath which is the heating plant for three houses.

The new Lincoln, which we dedicate today, is modern in appearance, is 77 by 142 feet and comprises three full stories, the basement being as high as the other floors. It is constructed exclusively for high school purposes and was planned to meet the latest ideas in heating, lighting, ventilation and sanitation. It contains many features new and possibly novel to the ordinary person, such as fan driven by electric motor, washing and heating of the fresh air, straight, broad, well lighted corridors bubbling fountains, dust shoots, sick room, toilets on every floor, baths, gymnasium, rostrums, program clock and many other characteristics of a modern school. The needs of the special and practical in education are also cared for in the provision made for agriculture, domestic economy, commercial pursuits, normal training and manual training. Danger of fire is practically eliminated by three fire walls and by the broad and easy exits. Educators announce that the Lincoln is well arranged for the purposes for which it was built; mechanics testify that it is honestly and substantially constructed and represents full even more value than it cost; while the high students believe that it is the very finest thing which ever happened in Upper Minnesota.

It is the purpose of the board of education that this building be more than mere school for children. It should become a sort of civic center and an educational factor for adults as well as for minors. The youth of the city, regardless of school connections and attainments, will eventually here find commodious and comfortable quarters, days and evenings, where healthful, mental, moral and physical culture will be attainable.

In closing, it is with pleasure that the Secretary of district number 18, Pennington county, can announce that the rate of taxation for school purposes in this city is less than the rate in any other city or village in the whole northwestern section of the state, with but one single exception. This has been accomplished despite the continued demand for increased school facilities and accomodations. The secretary of the board of education herewith expresses in this presence the appreciation of the board members for the hearty and intelligent co-operation of the public with the board in educational affairs in this city. This co-operation and support have made it possible to secure superior school facilities for our little city and have, in large measure, lightened the official burdens of the school board—public duties which at best are irksome and not always understood nor appreciated.

Harry Bakken, son of O. L. Bakken, was appointed mail carrier on Route 1 this week. He passed his civil service examination last Dec., and has since been patiently awaiting his appointment. The Press congratulates Mr. Bakken on his appointment and wishes him success in his new field of endeavor.

EXTRA SESSION PROBABLE

Lorimer Seated. President will call an Extra session to gain Reciprocity if necessary.

Washington, D. C., March 1, 1911—Unless the situation changes materially within the next few days a special session of Congress seems certain. The progressive Republicans feel that they will be stronger after March 4, and for that reason it is stated they are not unwilling that a special session be called. At this writing it looks as if the Progressives would lose out on at least two propositions at this session. One is the Borah resolution for direct election of United States senators and the other is on the question of permitting Senator Lorimer to retain his seat. The Progressives figure that if they can use the Canadian reciprocity bill as an excuse to delay the game, they can carry these matters over into a special session when their increased strength will enable them to handle the situation to better advantage.

• • •

At this writing it looks as though a vote would be taken on the Lorimer case within the next day or two. While Senator Lorimer undoubtedly stands convicted at the bar of public opinion, and in the opinion of the majority of people should be unseated, he will probably be permitted to retain his seat by a narrow margin. However, there is consolation in this fact, that the failure to unseat him will give added impetus to the movement for popular election of United States Senators. Thereare some who are saying—and they are anti-Lorimer men—that for this very reason it is a fortunate thing that Lorimer is permitted to keep his seat in that it will focus public attention more than ever before to the necessity of electing Senators by the people, and will hasten the day when this is accomplished.

• • • • •

Lorimer spoke to crowded galleries and made a dramatic appeal. It was a cleverly prepared appeal, calculated to arouse the sympathies of his listeners. However, in the opinion of many, it failed to touch upon the crucial points at issue and to successfully answer the charges which have been made against the methods employed in his election.

• • • • •

The Progressive Republicans are anxious to defeat the proposal for an increase in postage rates on magazines. If not in position to accomplish this at the present session, their strength will be so materially added to after March 4th, that they figure they can defeat this proposition at a special session. A prominent publisher in the Northwest in a letter to President Taft opposing the proposed increase as applied to periodicals makes the bold statement that J. Pierpont Morgan and other moneyed interests are reported to have recently undertaken to get their grip upon the periodical press of America. They have purchased, according to report, the Harper Magazine and its other publications, the American Magazine and others. It is further declared that if the moneyed interests of the country can freeze out of the field a large proportion of their competitors, they will have a strong grip upon the publishing business and wield an immense influence on public opinion. This move, it is asserted, is foreign to the spirit of a free and educational press.

• • • • •

Here then are three reasons why the Progressive Republicans want an extra session. They are found in the Lorimer case—(if it does not reach a vote this session), the popular election of United States senators and the fight against the increased rates on magazine postage. In order to delay matters the Insurgents stand ready to do a great deal of talking. They will not filibuster, but they will not permit a proposition to be adopted without thorough discussion. It is very doubtful if the Insurgents want the Canadian reciprocity bill to come to a vote at this session. They would rather have this go over until after March, when there will be more time to go into the subject and discuss it in all its details. There is some talk too that it may be so amended as to prevent the possibility of the Canadian government ratifying it.

The bill introduced by Congressman Steenerson authorizing homestead entries on certain lands formerly a part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation has passed both branches of Congress and is now a law. This bill requires that the purchasers pay not less than $4 per acre, and that in addition they make homestead entries and comply with the homestead laws. Its design is to prevent the land from passing into the hands of speculators. This is a remmant of certain Indian lands from which has been eliminated nearly all of the lands of any value. Until within a year or two they have been considered too wet for settlement, but more recently it has been possible to drain much of this land so as to make it desirable for homes. Under the act authorizing the drainage of lands in the State of Minnesota, approved May 20, 1908, drainage charges may be asked against the land, but the national government has a prior claim for the purchase price.

Later—The vote on the Lorimer case has been cast both Minnesota senators voted to unseat Senator Lorimer but he holds his seat just the same. Vote was 46 to 40.

ATTORNEY GENERAL GIVES DECISION.

Mr. Simpson's opinion embodied in his letter to Mr. Duffy, follows:

"In the matter of your request that the Attorney General make application to the supreme court for a writ of quo warranto to test in effect the organization of Pennington county, I have come to the conclusion after a very careful consideration of the whole matter, that the same should be and is refused.

"Ordinarily an application of this nature is made when requested, if it appears that the public good requires the same, but in this case no fact or argument has been presented to me from which he latter might be reasonably adduced. On the other hand, it does appear, on its face at least, that the new county was lawfully created. To attempt at this time to set aside the action thus taken, would, in my opinion, not only not be conductive to the public good, but would rather prolong an agitation which has existed of common knowledge for years and which cannot be considered otherwise than harmful to the public welfare. In other words, from the standpoint of the state, I see no public good that will be subserved in making the application you request. The interests of the state in my opinion are to the contrary.

"I herewith return your bond. The other papers will be held together with this opinion as part of the files of this department."

Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

CHAPTER VI.

IN THE VIOLENT PAST.

TALKING about Cavanagh was quite too absorbingly interesting to both Lee and Redfield to permit of any study of the landscape, which went by as if dismissed by the chariot wheels of some contemptuous magician. Redfield's eyes were mostly on the road (in the manner of the careful auto driver), but when he did look up it was to admire the color and poise of his seat mate, who made the landscape of small account.

She kept the conversation to the desired point. "Mr. Cavanagh's work interests me very much. It seems very important, and it must be new, for I never heard of a forest ranger when I was a child."

"The forester is new, at least in America," he answered. "My dear young lady, you are returned just in the most momentous period in the history of the west. The old dominion—the cattle range—is passing. The supremacy of the cowboy is ended. The cow boss is raising oats. The cowboy is pitching alfalfa and swearing horribly as he blisters his hands. Some of the rangers at the moment are men of western training, like Ross; but whose allegiance is now to Uncle Sam. With others that transfer of allegiance is not quite complete; hence the insolence of men like Gregg, who think they can bribe or intimidate these forest guards and so obtain favors. The newer men are college trained, real foresters. But you can't know what it all means till you see Ross or some other ranger on his own heath. We'll make up a little party some day and drop down upon him and have him show us about. It's a lonely life, and so the ranger keeps open house. Would you like to go?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. I'm eager to get into the mountains. Every night as I see the sun go down over them I wonder what the world is like up there."

Then he began very delicately to inquire about her eastern experience. There was not much to tell. In a lovely old town not far from Philadelphia, where her aunt lived, she had spent ten years of happy exile. "I was horribly lonely and homesick at first," she said. "Mother wrote only short letters, and my father never wrote at all. I didn't know he was dead then. He was always good to me. He wasn't a bad man, was he?"

"No," responded Redfield without hesitation. "He was very like the rest of us, only a little more reckless and a little more partisan, that's all. He was a dashing horseman and a dead shot, and so naturally a leader of these daredevils. He was popular with both sides of the controversy up to the very moment when he went south to lead the invaders against the rustlers."

"What was it all about? I never understood it. What were they fighting about?"

"In a sense it was all very simple. You see, Uncle Sam in his careless, do nothing way has always left his range to the man who got there first. That was the cattleman. At first there was grass enough for us all, but as we built sheds and corrals about watering places we came to claim rights on the range. We usually secured by fraud homesteads in the sections containing water and so, gun in hand, 'stood off' the man who came after. Gradually, after much shooting and lawing, we parceled out the range and settled down, covering practically the whole state. Our adjustments were not perfect, but our system was working smoothly for us who controlled the range. We had convinced ourselves and pretty nearly everybody else that the state was only fit for cattle grazing and that we were the most competent grazers; furthermore, we were in possession, and no man could come in without our consent.

"However, a very curious law of our own making was our undoing. Of course the 'nester' or 'punkin roller,' as we contemptuously called the small farmer, began sifting in here and there in spite of our guns, but he was only a mosquito bite in comparison with the trouble which our cowpunchers stirred up. Perhaps you remember enough about the business to know that an unbranded yearling calf without its mother is called a maverick?"

"Yes; I remember that. It belongs to the man who finds him and brands him."

"Precisely. Now, that law worked very nicely so long as the poor cowboy was willing to catch and brand him for his employer, but it proved a 'joker' when he woke up and said to his fellows, 'Why brand these mavericks at $5 per head for this or that outfit when the law says they belong to the man who finds them?'"

JAMES WICKERSHAM.

Alaskan Delegate Who Resented Being Called a Liar.

BLOODLESS BATTLE IN HOUSE

Delegate Wickersham Objects to Reflection on His Veracity.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Another bloodless battle was fought on the floor of the house of representatives. It came during a somewhat heated debate on a bill for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. The lie was passed, and as the short and ugly word rang out Delegate James Wickersham of Alaska made a rush for Representative Frank W. Mondell of Wyoming, who was seated at a nearby desk.

The big Alaskan's right arm shot out twice in the direction of the gentleman from Wyoming, but members who surrounded the disputants at the time say that both blows fell short.

When the house was fairly quiet Mr. Wickersham clamored for recognition.

"I want the record to show that I apologize to the house, but," his voice rose to a shout, "I also want it to show that I was called a liar."

Mr. Mondell declared his remark was not directed at Mr. Wickersham.

PROMPT ACTION ON JAPANESE TREATY

Senate Ratifies Agreement in Executive Session.

Washington, Feb. 25.—The new Japanese treaty of trade and navigation was ratified after a two-hour executive session of the senate, held at the conclusion of a day crowded with many other important matters.

While the apprehension of Western senators that the treaty might let down the bars to coolie labor was not entirely removed these senators contented themselves with expressing their solicitude. They interposed no objection to ratification.

The action of this government in promptly confirming the new agreement is expected to do more to prove the feeling of cordiality that this country has for Japan than anything that has been done for many years. It is regarded as a manifestation of highest confidence in the advanced civilization of that nation.

President Taft sent to congress the proposed constitutions of the new state of Mexico, with a special message recommending its ratification by congress.

POSSE SLAYS EIGHT INDIANS

Nevada State Police and Stockmen Attack Reds.

Reno, Nev., Feb. 28.—In a three-hour fight near Tuscarora, Nev., between state police and posses of stockmen on the one side and a band of twelve Shoshone Indians on the other eight of the Indians were slain and the remaining four captured. Ed Hogle of Eagleville, a member of Captain Donnelly's company of state police, was killed by the Indians.

The Indians were charged with the murder of four wealthey stockmen in northern Washoe county on Jan. 19 and had been trailed by posses since the finding of the bodies of the stockmen on Feb. 8.

Of the eight Indians killed two were squaws and two mere children.

FIFTEEN BODIES RECOVERED

Victims of Disaster in Belmont Mine at Tonopah, Nev.

Tonopah, Nev., Feb. 26.—The task of identifying the bodies of the fifteen dead miners recovered from the Belmont mine is completed.

Identification in most cases was easy, as all but four of the men died of suffocation.

Four of the corpses were terribly mutilated. State Mine Inspector Ryan was unable to estimate how many more, if any, remain in the mine, but he declared he believed there are no Americans in the depths. Bodies of six Americans have been recovered. The rest are Slavs.

FRENCH CABINET RESIGNS

Premier Briand Believes the Country Desires a Change.

Paris, Feb. 28.—The French cabinet, headed by Premier Briand, has resigned.

The resignation follows the small majority given to the ministry in the chamber of deputies Friday when the question of a "vote of confidence" was put to that body.

Briand declared after this vote that the people evidently wanted a change.

DENIES RAISE IN FREIGHT RATES

Sweeping Decision by Interstate Commerce Commission.

SOME INCREASES IN TEXAS

Advances in Class Freight Tariffs in Official Classification Territory Disapproved.

Washington, Feb. 24.—The interstate commerce commission decides against the railroads in both the "Eastern" and the "Western" cases. The decision was eagerly awaited by roads and shippeers alike.

Proposed advances in class freight rates in official classification territory, aggregating among all the railways in the territory approximately $27,000,000 a year, were disapproved by the commission.

In the case involving the increases by the railroads in Western trunk line territory the commission also declined to approve the proposed advances in commodity rates. The carriers in both cases are required to cancel on or before March 10 their advanced tariffs and restore their former rates, which are the rates now in effect. If this requirement be not complied with the commission will issue a formal order suspending the proposed advances and putting into effect the existing rates for at least two years.

In the case of the railroad commission of Texas against the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railway and other carriers, known popularly as the Southwestern rate case, the commission declined to disturb the commodity rates or the first class rates complained of. The defendants are ordered, however, to reduce the second class rates, which were increased from $1.21 to $1.29 to $1.25. On the remaining classes the defendants are required to restore the rates in effect before the increased rates were published.

In brief this is the disposition by the interstate commerce commission of the most important cases ever brought to its attention. In a sense the decisions were a surprise to railroad officials and other experts who had followed closely the proceedings, a majority of whom believed the commission would grant some increase to the Western lines if not to the Eastern.

Lines Pay Good Dividends.

After considering exhaustively the whole subject, however, from every view point the commission could not see its way clear to grant any advance in rates, although it concedes that, in the case of some of the roads, an increased revenue is needed. In what is known as the Eastern case the commission was embarrassed by the admitted fact that several of the lines in the territory were paying good dividends under existing rates, while other carriers in the same territory were barely able to make both ends meet, a few of them scarcely that.

In the Western case the carriers entered a powerful plea for increased revenue in order that they might have additional money to put into improvements and betterments which would enable them to handle with greater facility the constantly increasing traffic of the country. The same argument was advanced in support of the proposed advances in official classification territory; but Commissioner Prouty, who wrote the opinion in the Eastern case, says:

"This argument does not appeal to us. We doubt that practical difficulty suggested (that of obtaining by loans sufficient money to finance the roads), and, were it true, it is not apparent that the general public should stand responsibility for the mistakes which have been made in financing these railroad systems."

Both the Eastern and Western cases were brought to public attention in the spring of 1910. Just prior to the enactment of the existing interstate commerce law, which, in part, became effective on June 18, 1910, the railways of official classification territory—forty-one in all—and those of Western Trunk Line association territory filed with the interstate commerce commission tariffs making general increases in their freight rates.

LAYS OFF SHOP EMPLOYE

Milwaukee Road Inaugurates Plan of Retrenchment.

Milwaukee, Feb. 28.—In accordance with a plan of retrenchment the St. Paul road laid off men in the shops in Milwaukee, Dubuque, Minneapolis and Green Bay. At the offices the exact number of men to be laid off in Milwaukee could not be given, but it is expected that about 700 quit work.

The only reason given by the officials for the action was the plan to reduce running shop expenses an average of about 25 per cent. The officials also refuse to make any statement as to the possibility of the men being taken back to work in the future, saying only that any such action is absolutely indefinite.

Eat Luscious "Sunkist" Oranges

Seedless—Fibreless—Juicy and Sweet—A Perfect Fruit

Five thousand California orange farmers, raising 60 per cent of the state's entire crop, select, each season, their perfect oranges and pack them under the name "Sunkist." This enables you to recognize and buy California's choicest, tree-ripened oranges.

Until you have tasted a luscious "Sunkist" orange, you cannot begin to appreciate the excellence of oranges that are properly grown, rigidly inspected, carefully packed and swiftly transported. Serve "Sunkists" on your table tomorrow morning and learn the superiority of tree-ripened, fibreless, seedless, solid and sound oranges over the commonplace kind. "Sunkist" oranges are so nearly all food that they are much the cheapest kind to buy.

"Sunkist" oranges are thin-skinned and are hand-picked. The "Sunkist" orange is a firm, solid fruit. Ask your dealer for the "Sunkist" kind and make sure that each orange you get is packed in a tissue paper wrapper labeled "Sunkist." For these wrappers are valuable.

SUNKIST LEMONS
"Sunkist" Lemons
If you want the finest lemons grown ask for "Sunkist" brand and note how much juicier they are and how much farther they go in preparing sauces, cakes, pies, salads and drinks

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

FRIDAY MORNING, MAR. 4, 1911

An acre of performance is worth a whole world of promises.—Anon.

Eggs are now down to 15 cents a dozen. Would it injure any Minnesota farmer if eggs could be shipped to Winnipeg, where they are 25 cents a dozen?—Long Prairie Argus.

Not at all necessary to ship as far as Winnipeg when they are 25 cents a dozen right here.

William Lorimer was this week acquitted completely exonerated, reinstated in public opinion and finally installed in the Senatorship which is rightfully his. Now this is what one should conclude from the decision rendered by a "jury of his peers" who on March 1st in senate chamber tssembled welcomed We—no we mean Senator Lorimer into their midst by a vote of 46 to 40.—P. S. However, we do not offer this as our opinion.

WHAT IS GREATNESS?

Mencius—The great man is he who does not lose his child's heart.

Matthew Arnold—Genius is mainly an affair of energy.

Job—Great men are not always wise.

Emerson—Nothing is more simple than greatness; indeed, to be simple is to be great.

Carlyle—Genius means the transcenent capacity of taking trouble.

Emerson—Great men are they who see that the spiritual is stronger than any material force, that thoughts rule the world.

Lowell—No man can produce great things who is not thoroughly sincere in dealing with himself.

Thomas A Kempis—He is truly great that is little in himself and that maketh no account of any height of honors.

Ruskin—Greatness of mind is not shown by admitting small things. but by making small things great under its influence. He who can take no interest in what is small will take false interest in what is great.

Milton—He alone is worthy of the appellation who either does great things, or teaches how they may be done, or describes them with a suitable majesty when they have been done; but those only are great things which tend to render life more happy, which increase the innocent enjoyments and comforts of existence, or which pave the way to a state of future bliss more permanent and more pure.

George Eliot—No great deed is done By falterers who ask for certainty.

THE BOY SCOUTS.

Some Facts About the Great Movement That is Spreading So fast In the United States.

The whole object of our scheme is to seize the boy's character in its redhot stage of enthusiasm and to weld it into the right shape and encourage and develop its individuality so that the boy may become a good man and a valuable citizen.

This is the object of the Boy Scout movement as expressed by Sir Robert Baden-Powell. "father" of the Boy Scout idea and Chief Scout in England.

But it is the way this object is accomplished that appeals to boys. There is a certain amount of energy in a boy that he's got to get rid of. If he dosen't do something good he'll do some thing bad. Scouting gives him something good to do—something that appeals to his imagination, fires his spirit of chivalry and strengthens his sense of honor. It takes him out into the open and teaches him the love of the woods, the handicraft of the pioneer, and absolute self-reliance at the same time that it builds him up physically. It is a practical, common sense education presented in such a form that no healthy red-blooded boy can resist its allurements.

Six or eight boys form a patrol named after some animal, and headed by a patrol leader who is himself a boy. Two or more patrols form a troop which is in charge of a scoutmaster, who must be a man, and should be one who remembers how life appeared to him when he was a boy—a clean, energetic man, with imagination enough to enter into the scout work with the same enthusiasm as the boys themselves. It is not hard to persuade such men to take up the work for it is just such men that the work appeals to—the opportunity for doing good attracts them.

Weekly meetings are held at which the boys practise such features of the work as knot-tying first aid and bandaging, signaling, memory work, compass reading, and a score of other things while they make plans for their scouting excursions into the country. On these excursions they track, judge distances and direction, observe animals and trees, cook meals build shelter camps, and do other things that may be suggested by a resourceful scoutmaster.

There are three degrees of scouts, and the scout advances from one degree to another only on passing a set examination on the most practical subjects.

To attempt to go into the details of the work is futile, for they would fill volumes. But there are two things that stand out very clearly. One is the Boy Scout motto. "Be Prepared." The other is a part of the Boy Scout—oh, yes, they have laws, not so stringent as to scare a boy out, just enough to hold him in check with out infringing on his liberty. In this law, which a scout pledges, on his honor, he will obey, the scout promises to do "a good turn" every day It's the old golden rule again, practically applied.

Such is the movement which has spread over the United States in less than a year, which has enlisted boys by the hundreds of thousands, and which has been taken up by clubs, societies, individuals and churches.

The men behind the movement are proof enough of its character. President Taft is the honorary president. Therefore Roosevelt is vice president of the national committee, Ernest Thompson Seton is Chief Scout, and Admiral George Dewey, Gifford Pinchot, David Starr Jordan, Dan Beard adn Jacob Rills are among the fifty prominent men who are members of the national council.

In dozen of towns in the northwest Boy Scouts parols and troops have been organized, and scores of other towns are preparing to introduce the movement. Most of these will be assisted by L. S. Dale, the northwest organizer, whose work is indorsed by Mamey Council No. 1, Boy Scouts of America, at St. Paul, and by the officials of the National Council in New York. Mr. Dale will come here and explain the movement and assist in organizing patrols, without charge, if his services are desired. It would would be well for citizens who are interested in the movement to communicate with Mr. Dale, whose address is Room 316 Dispatch building St. Paul.

HOLT

* * * * * * * * * * *

There is so much news at present that I can not let it go.

Our new County Superintendent of Schools, Mr. Johnson, was around, he was so pleased of the Majority of votes he received in Marshall County that he would not even take a livery rig from his own county, but got a livery rig from Pennington county. He must have learned from our sheriff.

There was an apron party at the Sollum school house last Saturday night and five of the Holt boys were there they didn't take any girls along they said as there were enough of nice looking girls there before. and so it must have been because the boys came home at six o'clock the next morning.

Emma Olson and Ruth Thomas were at Thief River Falls on Friday.

Pete Anderson and Doctor Rux went out to Steinhour's last Sunday. I don't know if he was going to pull a tooth or not, but he took Pete along

Miss Jennie Johnson had a big farewell party last Sunday and a big crowd both young and old was gathered to see her may be for the last time she is going to leave for California.

There are from 25 to 30 teams now hauling coal for the N. W. Drainage Company every day and the coal will be out and the hay will be in. The hay will be shipped, the coal will be burned. The dredges will be built, and the ditches be dug. The water will run, and the swamps will be dry. Yes, Mr. Arpin is surely the man to force the work.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Risberg were out to Jennie Johnson's farewell party last Sunday and they reported a good time, but the weather was cold.

There is quite a time at the Ringbo school this year, some women folks who think that their children ain't used right, and they went there and almost chased out both the teacher and the school board. The board will resign and a special meeting will be held.

Mr. Erick Johnson is on the sick list. We hope to see him well again

Mrs. Rier Rierson arrived from T. R. Falls last Friday where she has been under Doctor's treatment. She reports to be recovering nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Nelson came up from Thief River Falls last Saturday to visit their parents and relations at Holt

Mr. Thorval Kelden is taking the chances away from the big boys, but too bad he has sold the team

Miss Alberg has been visiting at S. S. Kolden's for a couple of weeks. She left for Grand Forks.

DEER PARK NUBBINS

* * * * * * * * * * *

M. E. Hyland and sons were down to Oklee last Saturday with three loads of baled hay.

Mike Kalsmi transacted business at Plummer last week.

Chas W. Johnson was over to Mc Intosh last week for to look up some good work oxen.

O. N. Skomedahl of Oklee was up this way for a laod of baled hay for Gunder Stromme last Friday.

The newly appointed town board of Deer Park called at the town clerk's office last Saturday and qualified.

At the annual town meeting to be held in Deer Park there will have to be a complete set of new town officers elected. If you have any kick coming meet up and help boost out the old set.

The board of Directors for the Deer Park Telephone line, of Rhoda held a meeting at Knut Lindstad's place last Monday for the purpose of arranging for the necessary material, and get out the poles before the roads break up. We will ring up in the near future.

Yes, you bet our Hon. Halvor Steenerson is opposed to that tariff compact with Canada. You will always find Mr. Steenerson on the side of the people that are called upon to carry the burden, which are the farmers in this case, and no one knows that better then President Taft, but what are the toilers of the land to him or their burdens, that is only a subject or side issue, and the less he can say about that in his utterances, why the broader his smiles, and surely he is right in glory whereover he can put on that old "stand pat" smile of his which broadens as he praises that Cannon Aldrich tariff schedule, (or in other words, the poor mans burden), and not satisfied with that, he seems to think that old John Bull aught to have the privilege besides of straddling the back of the American farmer and producer, with his cheaply produced products, which means from ten to fifteen cents off, right from the start n every dollar made from the products of our farms, below our otherwise existing prices, and such is actually already the case merely from the effects of the near reciprocity, and what the difference would really be if it should become a fact. No one at this time can safely say—Nevertheless, Mr. Steenerson knows how the reciprocity treaty with Canada will effect the toilers and tillers of the land and he has taken a manly stand in the matter and his protest will be approved by the public in general. The protest from all over the states is so strong, that any Republican that was elected by the people and for the people as a whole, can plainly see his duty without hesitating, and any representative that fails to see it, is not a fit representative and does not represent but misrepresents ignors and betraps his constituents in an unlooked for movement if he casts his vote for the reciprocity treaty with Canada at this time.

STATE CONVENTION NEXT WEEK.

All things are now ready for the greatest Sunday School Convention in the history of Minnesota's Sunday School work. It will be held in Mankato, March 8-9-10-1911. Among the speakers and instructors are W. C. Pearce, Herbert Moninger Cincinnati, Ohio, Judge McKenzie Cleland, Chicago, Dr. M. S. Rice Duluth, Dr. A. C. Stevens, St, Paul, Dr. Stanly B. Roberts Minneapolis, Dr. Harold Pattison St. Paul, and a host of others.

The features of the Convention will be its institute character, an extension bazaar and exhibit of Sunday School equipment, and a Men's Bible Class Demonstration in the form of a great Parade on the last evening of the convention. Special trains will carry hundreds of people to the convention for the Bible Class Parade March 10th, at 6:30 P. M. A Chorus of 100 trained voices will render inspiring music. Harry Iverson of Mankato is training the Chorus.

Mankato business men have contributed $600 to take care of the convention and expect to take care of 1000 delegates. No less number will satisfy them. More than 3,0000 programs have already been distributed over the entire State. Every county and every Sunday school of every denominatoin is expected to send delegates. For programs apply to The Minnesota Sunday School Association, 871, Snelling Ave, St, Paul.

Miss Dora Rasmussen, a sister of Mrs. Knute Nelson, and the Misses Newton all of Thief River Falls were visitors at the Nelson home over Sunday. Middle River Pioneer

Badger Methodist to Build.

Badger, Minn., March 1.—The trustees of the M. E. Church have decided to erect a church building this spring, the work to commence soon. The building will be 26 by 30, with full basement, and will be located on lots purchased last year. A considerable sum has been subscribed towards the building and a subscription list is being circulated.

GERMANTOWN.

* * * * * * * * * * *

We failed to put in any news the last two weeks, as we were busy like the most of us hauling coal and supplies for the drainage company.

The roads are rather tuff and it is nothing new to see a few tip over loads in the snow.

Mr. Feyne is busy with a crew of men to install new boilers in their dredges, as the new ones are bigger and stronger than the old ones. You will see some dirt fly next summer.

A little boy arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Haggy's last week.

The Germantown Co-operative Creamery will hold its annual meteing March 8th.

A petition is out for the establishment of a town ditch. As this is the first one. They all wonder how it will turn out.

Charley Habedank returned last week from the woods.

We received word the other day that Frank Ruzeck, one of our former settlers has died in St. Paul.

The swamp north of us is pretty well dotted with claimholders already and it seems as tho the ditch will draw more.

EXCEL.

* * * * * * * * * * *

P. B. Malberg called at Sangen's on Saturday.

Maland and Asland are busy hauling sand for the new bridge that is t be built across the river this coming spring.

March certainly made herself known when she came this week by the wind that was dished out for us.

Quite a number of the young people from around here including your reporter, attended a party given by Ole Johnson on the east side last Saturday evening. All attending had a good time.

A party was held at Martin Kirsh's Sunday.

A general program and spelling match was held at the Excel school Friday evening.

ATTACKS SCHOOL PRINCIPAL.

A severe attack on school Principal Chas. B. Allen, of Sylvania, Ga., is thus told by him. "For more than three years," he writes "I suffered indescribable torture from rheumatism, liver and stomach trouble and diseased kidneys. All remedies failed till I used Electric Bitters, but four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me completely." Such results are common. Thousands bless them for curing stomach trouble, female complaints, kidney disorders, billousness, and for new health and vigor. Try them. Only 50c at all Druggists.

NOTICE TO STOCK HOLDERS OF FARMER'S ELEVATOR.

Thief River Falls, Minn.
March 1, 1911.

A stock-holders meeting of the Farmers' Elevator company will be held at the Armory Hall in the city of Thief River Falls, Minn. on Monday the 13th, day of March, 1911, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of ratifying the proposed by laws, or ammending them, and also to elect two directors, to fill the places of the two who have failed to qualify.

Every person who is interested in the success of the enterprise must be sure to attend this meeting for some more shares must be sold before we can build, or go into business.

Shareholders should attend this meeting so as to help decide on what bases profits shall be distributed, as a strong sentiment exists for distribution on the basis of grain sold to this company, and also a strong sentiment favoring distribution on the basis of number of shares held.

Yours for the success of Farmers' Elevator.

The Committee.

Permanency CITIZENS STATE BANK Honesty SOLIDITY

$6, 672.90

This amount in silver dollars, piled one on the other, would reach more than fifty feet in the air.

"Quite a bit of money," you say. Yes, indeed loads of it.

"What about all this money?"

LISTEN.

During the year 1910 this stack of silver dollars was paid by the Citizens State Bank to the people of Thief River Falls and vicinity as interest on their idle money.

Now this is the point we want to make: This money was not working, was not producing a cent. But when the owners loaned it to this bank, it began to work for them.

Then we loaned it to others who had use for it. Straightway it worked for us. In their turn, the borrowers set it to work in their business, and it netted them a profit.

Thus money that was doing nothing for anybody created prosperity for the entire community simply being deposited in this bank

Our time certificates, drawing interest at 5 per cent, are an ideal form of investment.

COUNTY LINE SCHOOL.

Last month was a record breaker! Sixty per cent of the school were perfect in attendance and twenty per cent missed only one day. This too, in spite of the blizzards and cold weather, which we had during the month.

Our teacher, Miss Backe, and also Miss Dahl of the North Star school attended the Teachers' Institute at Newfolden.

The Young Citizens Club had a rare treat last Wednesday p. m. We had with us, Mr. Copp and Mr. Solem. We had a program consisting of a debate, some essays and a few songs.

Mr. Copp brought a Babcock tester with him. Some of the pupils brot samples of milk and cream to be tested. We spent an hour and a half testin.

The tests on the milk ranged from three and three-tenths per cent and up. We found this work a great deal more interesting than the usual grammar lessons. We hope other Institute (?) workers will give us another agricultural lesson some-time in the future.

ANNUAL MEETING Of The THIEF RIVER CO-OPERATIVE STORE COMPANY.

The annual Stockholder's meeting of the Thief River Co-operative Store Co., will take place in Thief River Falls at the Antler's Hall on Wednesday March 8th, at 10 o'clock a. m. Coffee and refreshments will be served at noon. At 2 p. m., Dr. John H. Gray, Dean of the political science and Economic Department of the University of Minnesota will address the meeting on Co-operation. Everybody cordially invited to attend the lecture by Dr. Gray, as he is recognized as one of the best authorities on Co-operation in the United States. He has personally visited the retail and co-operative wholesale stores of England and Scotland and knows whereof he speaks.

PRICHARD PAYS US A VISIT.

Mr. W. W. Prichard of Tacoma, Washington and formerly Cashier of the First National Bank of this city arrived here last Saturday for a few days visit with his son, William and his many friends in this locality. Mr. Prichard is now the head of one of the largest lumbering concerns of the West and to hear him tell o fthe novel ways of lumbering in that section was more interest ing than Teddy Roosevelt's "Roughing it."

Mr. Prichard left yesterday for Minneapolis for a visit with friends before returning to his home.

OPEN LETTER.

March 2nd, 1911.

As it is now time for the Bonds to be sold again (for they have been sold every three weeks for the last six months) and, as I have a few days to spare and the three weeks again are up for selling them, I will make the trip to St. Paul and return for the sum of Fifty Dollars, being the usual fee allowed here before, and I also promise to report them sold at par.

MARRIED.

At the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rondorf, on Thursday, Feb. 23rd, at 2 p. m., was solemized the marriage of Mr. Gustaf Wilkin and Miss Ida Rondarf, Rev. Seltz of Thief River Falls officiating.

A large number of friends and relatives were present, and a number of valuable presents received. After the ceremony all were invited to a wedding supper. In the evening a reception was given, followed by a midnight lunch.

The bride and grom are well known and highly respected residents of Rocksbury township.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

HERRON—JANSEN.

A very quiet wedding was solemnized by Rev. Fr. Adolph, in the St. Bernard's Catholic church in this city Tuesday morning at seven o'clock, when Miss Mae Herron and Mr. J. S. Jansen were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Miss Etta Flynn acted as bride's maid and Orville Herron, a brother of the bride as best man. Only a few of the intimate friends of the family were present at the ceremony and the very dainty wedding breakfast at the bride's home which followed.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Jansen departed for their new home at Viking where the groom is station agent and where they will reside.

The bride and grom are both very well and favorably known in our city and the best wishes of their host of friends go with them to their new home.

Rich Land for Grain Growing & Dairying Open to Entry at Nominal Cost

THIEF RIVER BOTTOMS TO BECOME A GARDEN

Territory as Large as Rhode Island Changed From Swamp to Fertile Farms.

Land not only Thoroughly Drained but Supplied With System of Roads.

Thief River Falls, Minn.—To open 650,000 acres of new, fertile Minnesota land for settlement, 5,500,000 cubic yards of earth will be removed in the Thief River valley and that river enlarged from its source to the point of entry into the Red Lake river. Contractors are on the ground and one of the greatest reclamation projects ever undertaken in Minnesota is about to start.

To drain this land it will be necessary to take away as much earth as would provide loads that, in wagons each containing a cubic yard, would reach twenty-two times from Minneapolis to New York, or one and a quarter times around the world. It is one of the biggest drainage plans ever put into operation in the central northwest.

Under the supervision of W. R. Hoag, engineer, preliminary work began last fall, and now that spring is here and the opportunity is presented for an early start, no time will be lost in getting under way and the work will go forward through the summer.

Big Contract Let.

The contract for this system was let March 1 to the Northwestern Drainage company of Grand Rapids, Wis., and is under the engineering supervision of W. R. Hoag of Minneapolis.

The system provides for 497 miles of [illegible], the same number of miles of highways to be so located that each of the [illegible] quarter sections of land has a ditch and a road along at least one of its half-mile sides. No such complete system of drainage has been attempted in this state to cover any considerable area.

Considering the rate at which the contractor must dig to complete the work in two years, ending six months a working year and eight hours a day, he will be required to move twenty-one cubic yards a minute or about ten cubic feet a second. To haul away this dirt as rapidly as dug would require seven lines of teams abreast carrying a cube yard each.

Extent of Work.

Thief river is to be enlarged from its source, in Thief lake, to a point a few miles above Thief River Falls, where it enters the Red Lake river. This will cost about $125,000 and will be divided among three sub-drainage districts in the ratio of their use of the river as an outlet for each subsystem. These sub-systems are known as state system No. 83, comprising about one-tenth of the area, and situated mostly on the west side of the river near its head waters.

The second subsystem of this area is known as county ditch No. 20. It comprises about two-tenths of the watershed and is located on the east side of the river, along the southern boundary of the Thief river area, and is in charge of Engineer Hamre of Crookston. Work was begun on this system last fall, and about two years will be required for its completion.

The remaining seven-tenths, or about 700 square miles, comprises the central, northern and eastern portions of the Thief river area and is known as judicial ditch No. 11.

Alive to Importance.

This section of the state is fully alive to the importance of the work and what the reclamation of this land will mean for the development of the northwestern part of Minnesota. An active campaign has begun to interest farmers and draw them to the fertile soil that will be ready for occupancy with the completion of the drainage canals.

An attempt will be made to arrest the tide of emigration to Canada and also to interest many who are seeking homesteads and patented land in Montana and Idaho. It is advanced as an argument for the land to be reclaimed that it will be better than any other and that with the climatic advantages for which this section is noted, the land should be rapidly settled up.

Statement of Prime Mover.

William J. Brown of Warren is freely credited by the men who have carried forward the Thief river project as being the man to whom the undertaking is primarily due. Not only did the idea originate with Mr. Brown, but he has been active in the preliminary work necessary to get the project under way, representing the petitioners who applied for state and county aid in the work.

His account of the work it was necessary for them to do follows:

"The great wealth of natural resources and the feasibility of the drainage of the area now comprising judicial ditch system No. 11, was first suggested to me in 1900 by a trip through that territory, in company with W. R. Hoag, drainage engineer, who passed favorably upon the engineering problems involved at that time. The project, however, was impracticable for other reasons, chief among which was the fact that within the district there were large areas of unpatented government land, which under existing laws could not be assessed for its share of the benefits.

Hard Matter to Finance.

"It was thus found impossible to finance the proposition and to that end federal legislation was necessary. This was secured in 1906, when congress passed an act authorizing the secretary of the interior to cause a survey to be made of the territory in question with with a view of determining the possibilities of their reclamation. Such survey was made by the United States Geological Survey and a report was transmitted to congress Jan. 28, 1907, and printed as house document No. 607, and further report was made to congress by Richard A. Ballinger, secretary of the interior, May 13, 1909, and printed as house document No. 27. The reports were enthusiastically in favor of the drainage, but when the attempt was made to appropriate funds for the actual drainage, the western house members discovered a great difference in the constitutionality of appropriating money for irrigation ditches to conduct water upon land and drainage ditches to take the water off, and killed the measure in committee.

"On May 20, 1908, the Volstead bill, so-called, was passed by congress. This bill is entitled 'An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the state of Minnesota,' and permits unentered and unpatented government land to be assessed for benefits in drainage proceedings. This bill removed the principal difficulty and we again prepared to proceed, only to find that the legislature of [illegible] of this state had so amended the judicial ditch law as to render its operation impracticable where large and vacant tracts of land were affected. Thereupon the legislature of 1909 was applied to and the necessary legislation enacted and immediately upon adjournment the petition and bond for the establishment of the ditch was prepared and on May 22, 1909, the same was signed and presented to Andrew Grindeland, district judge, who at once made an order for a preliminary hearing.

"The hearing was held before Judge Grindeland on July 10, 1909, and it is a remarkable fact, that although the lands of more than 2,000 land-owners were liable to assessment for benefits, neither at that hearing nor at any other stage of the proceedings has objection been made to the establishment of the ditch. On July 12, 1909, Judge Grindeland appointed W. R. Hoag of Minneapolis as engineer in charge of the drainage project, and a comprehensive ditch system to be made and ordered a complete survey of the territory by him.

Viewers Begin Work.

"Mr. Hoag completed his preliminary survey and made his report on Oct. 20, 1909, and the viewers entered upon their work. Judge Grindeland had appointed G. O. Cross of Warren, John Simonson of Excel, and Mr. Hagen of Bemidji, as viewers. Their duties were to examine the lands affected and estimate and determine the amount and the value of the ditch. On Jan. 21, 1910, the viewers completed their work and filed their report of assessments. Final hearing to consider and act upon the engineer's and viewers' report was ordered by the judge and on Feb. 26, 1910, after such hearing, Judge Grindeland, by his written order, confirmed and adopted each report and established the system as designed by Mr. Hoag.

"The contract for the construction of the ditch system, including the leveling of the dump to form roads was let March 1, 1910, the contract calling for completion of the whole system in 1912.

Cost to the Land.

"The actual assessment for benefits will amount to about $2.50 an acre. Interest at 5 per cent is payable annually. During the first five years the interest only is payable, but during the sixth year one-fifteenth of the principal must be paid and one-fifteenth each year thereafter until all is paid. The year before any installment is due, the county auditor enters the installment upon the tax books and it is paid with the real taxes. The funds with which to pay cost of construction are secured by the sale of the drainage bonds of the counties affected, and the bonds mature in the same manner as do the liens for profits, the bond being payable out of the collections of the respective installments of assessments for benefits.

"Considering the magnitude of the project and the engineering difficulties to be overcome, the completion of preliminary work and the letting of the contract of construction within one year is remarkable. To Mr. Hoag is due the credit for this achievement.

The Soil and Facilities.

"The soil in the whole territory is of unusual fertility, not stony and of ample depth for all crops. There is no poor land. The slope to the west is ample completely to drain and render tillable all land affected. The land is not cut-over land, which is sometimes expensive to reclaim, but is open prairie interspersed here and there with small poplar groves. The village of Grygla is the most central point in the whole system and there is today, within one-half day's drive from Grygla, many free quarter section homesteads of choice agricultural land only waiting the advent of the ditch to become as fine farming land as exists in the far-famed Red River valley, or elsewhere in the state. To those who prefer to purchase lands already patented, the price ranges from $10 to $18 an acre according to improvements. A letter addressed to the secretary of the Commercial club of Grygla will secure full information to prospective settlers. Even in the face of the adverse conditions caused by the imperfect natural drainage, the farmers in the territory have prospered and in the few years since the county was first settled many of them have achieved independence. The creamery at Grygla alone paid to the farmer in 1909 more than $28,000 for butter fat.

Many Improvements.

"Rural telephone lines are in operation over the district, and with the advent of improved transportation facilities afforded by the graded roads along the ditches, the farm conditions will most favorably compare with those in the hitherto more favored parts of the state. The free homesteads are being rapidly taken up, but many are left, and the lands patented are already advancing in price because of the impending benefit.

"It is true that the territory is somewhat distant from railroad transportation points. The lands of the system nearest the railroads being about five miles therefrom, and the most distant being forty miles farther. Railroads, however, will of necessity follow the rapid settlement of the country, and knowing the favorable climate and soil conditions, it is certain that within a comparatively few years the whole territory will be reasonably accessible to railroad transportation.

The Opportunity for Homes.

"The free homesteads and the low-priced patented lands should prove attractive to the wage earners of the cities who are dissatisfied with their present lack of independence and should likewise deflect the stream of immigration passing our doors to Canada and to the arid lands of our western states. No soil that can be found in either locality can compare in fertility and in the variety and quality of its products with that in this drainage area. Why should an intending settler experiment with untried and unproved conditions in Canada, or take up a 320-acre arid homestead in the west and dry farm it, or burden himself with the cost of an irrigated tract there with the water supply question involved as it is, when right here in the grand old North Star state we have ideal climatic conditions, soils of proved fertility, rainfall in abundance to insure crops, unusually favorable dairying and stock raising conditions, and other unsurpassed natural resources with which the foreign localities cannot compete.

"To the actual settler who is willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and assume only one-half the burden necessary to success in the Canadas or in the west, this section of the country affords unlimited possibilities of prosperity and success."

Minneapolis Engineer Who Planned Drainage

GIVES LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Judge Grindeland Outlines Methods and Throws In Sound Advice.

District Judge A. Grindeland, who has been largely instrumental in working out the legislation necessary to the project, has prepared the following resume of the method of providing for the township and county drainage systems:

"Prior to 1883," writes Judge Grindeland, "we had only the township system of drainage. This was inadequate for draining large areas. The legislature of 1883 enacted the law known as the county system of drainage.

"There being much government land in the northern part of this state, and that section being sparsely settled, it took some time before the drainage question became a matter of public interest. Public attention was especially called to it by an open letter written by Judge Frank Ives of Crookston in the spring of 1886. A drainage convention was then called to meet at that city in July, 1886. There was a good representation of farmers, business and professional men. The necessity, practicability and advantages of drainage was discussed. James J. Hill proposed that a survey of the valley be made, and that if the counties interested would pay half the expense, his company would pay the other half. This proposition was accepted and the survey was made. This survey showed that there was sufficient fall to drain all the wet lands. It accomplished a great deal of good in more than one way, but it took years before practical results were realized under the county system.

State Drainage.

"In 1893 the legislature passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for drainage work in the Red River valley, and creating a drainage commission known as the Red River valley drainage commission. Under the direction of this commission $182,500 was expended in drainage and reclaiming the swamp lands of the Red River valley. In 1901 an act was passed by the legislature appropriating $50,000 for the drainage and reclamation of state lands in Minnesota and creating a drainage commission consisting of the governor, state auditor and secretary of state, and known as the drainage commission of the state of Minnesota. An additional appropriation of $50,000 was made in 1903 to be expended under the direction of this commission.

"In 1907 a law was enacted giving this commission power to drain state lands, and such private lands as may be benefited thereby, and to assess private lands therefor. A large amount of ditching has been successfully accomplished under this law.

"Under the laws prior to 1907 the state drainage commission had no power to assess lands, hence could only construct ditches from appropriations expressly made for that purpose. On account of limited appropriations, they could not begin to keep pace with the demands and besides were restricted to localities where the state had lands that needed to be drained. The county system was inadequate as it applied to ditches wholly within the county and in case such a ditch benefited land beyond the boundary of the county such lands could not be assessed. Besides, it is often the case that ditches must extend beyond the boundary of the county in which the proceedings are instituted, and it therefore became apparent that a more comprehensive drainage law was required.

Judicial Ditch System

At a special session of the legislature in 1902 the judicial drainage law was passed. The law has since been amended, but it has been a success since its enactment. The fact that ditches costing several million dollars are now and have been constructed under this law should claim for it attention and consideration rather than criticism and condemnation.

"The Volstead act, which was passed May 20, 1908, was a great relief to settlers who had acquired titles to their land but were surrounded by vacant or homesteaded government lands. This law provides: 'That all lands in the state of Minnesota, when subject to entry, and all entered lands for which no final certificates have issued, are hereby made and declared to be subject to all of the provisions of the laws of said state relating to the drainage of swamp or overflowed lands for agricultural purposes to the same extent and in the same manner in which lands of a like character held in private ownership are or may be subject to said laws.' Thus, we have drainage jurisdiction over the government lands, and we are now preparing many a tract of this land for the home of the government homestead settler.

"Now, having briefly called attention to drainage legislation, let us for a moment comment upon proceedings thereunder. Experience has taught us how to avoid trouble and expense in ditch proceedings.

Petition.

"A tract of land that needs drainage should not be drained in piecemeal. It should be all done in one proceeding. With several proceedings and several sets of viewers you have more trouble and expense. Make the petition broad enough so as to give the engineer power to take in the whole watershed, or so much thereof as requires drainage.

Engineer.

"Don't experiment with inexperienced engineers. An incompetent engineer will make the ditch a failure. In a level country ditches are often made too shallow. Branches and laterals should be established at the same time, and not rely upon townships or landowners to put them in afterward. Ditches and laterals should, when possible, follow section lines.

Roads and Bridges.

"Whenever possible, make use of the excavated dirt for road purposes. Have it specified in the contract how the roads and bridges shall be built and completed. You can often kill two birds with one stone. Get good ditches and good roads in one proceeding. The viewers should be careful about providing for bridges wherever required.

Viewers.

"Too much care cannot be taken in appointing viewers. They should be practical men, with experience and good judgment. Viewers have an inclination to rely too much on the engineer and his report. Viewers should be equipped with pencil and plats and should view the land by forty-acre tracts—always by forty-acre tracts. To classify a farm of 160 acres as all swamp land when it contains only forty acres of such land, is wrong, and litigation generally follows. When the viewers have viewed all the lands, then they should call a meeting of the settlers at the nearest schoolhouse. There inform the land owners of their assessments, invite discussion and in many cases better information can be obtained of conditions during wet seasons, by this method, than can be gotten by viewing or from the engineer's report. Every resident settler should be consulted by the viewers before completing the report. Don't blame the farmer for wanting to be consulted before his assessment is fixed and report filed. If you don't give him a chance to discuss these matters before the hearing on the viewers' report, then you will have to meet him in court, where it is harder to adjust matters after counsel fees and expenses have been incurred. If you have to break in new viewers, give them full instructions before sending them out. Poor work on the part of the viewers means delay, expense and litigation.

Hearing.

"The following method of procedure at the first and final hearing has proved to be satisfactory and expedient. This applies to hearing before the county commissioners as well as before the district judge. Have the engineer and viewers present. Then proceed as nearly as possible in the same manner as the trial of a court case. Hear the parties and witnesses on one side, then on the other, each taking the usual oath before testifying. When this is not done, the hearing is likely to take on the form of a stormy political convention, rather than a judicial proceeding.

"When the hearing is concluded, the county commissioners, or the judge, as the case may be, should make findings and render decision.

"Add drainage laws are necessarily somewhat complicated, and give rise to conflict between honest opinions, yet there would be much less friction in operating under it if those who preside would give these proceedings and the persons interested more time and consideration. In the Red river valley we are not hampered with appeals. Drainage has become practicable."

ENGINEER TELLS OF WORK

W. R. Hoag Explains Peculiarities of Drainage Area.

W. R. Hoag, civil engineer of Minneapolis, who is supervising the work, throws much light upon the magnitude of the undertaking and tells about the difficulties which confronted him when he began the task of making the plans for the reclamation.

"Thief river, with its tributaries, Mud and Moose rivers, provides the only natural drainage for about 1,000 square miles situated in the eastern part of Marshall and the western part of Beltrami county," said Mr. Hoag. "It is a tract about twenty-five miles wide and forty miles long. Grygla is situated near the center and Thief River Falls in its southeast corner.

"This area of about 650,000 acres, which is smaller by only two townships than the state of Rhode Island, has an average slope from northeast to southwest of nearly two feet a mile. A fall entirely sufficient to provide ample drainage for it, had nature been but reasonably judicious in its distribution.

"River channels are made and maintained wholly by the erosive action of running water. The slope necessary to create the velocity which measures its securing effect and ability to maintain an open channel differs widely, depending somewhat upon the subsoil conditions but largely upon the volume of water at flood stage.

Question of Fall.

"The Thief river, for about twenty miles, has about six inches fall to the mile. The Red river for a hundred miles along the state's western boundary maintains its channel and has a fall of about two inches to the mile, while stretches of the lower Mississippi river have but a half inch to the mile.

"Small streams must have from three to eight feet fall a mile to overcome the obstructive effects of sedimentation and vegetation. The Thief river watershed has ample fall in the general direction of slope to maintain good-sized rivers, capable of removing all excess storm water in the usual time—that insuring safe cultivation on adjacent lands—but it has no cross valley lines of sufficient slope to collect the storm water into small streams and conduct it quickly to a central channel or river. Accumulated water from these many small valleys coming in at the same time would maintain a river channel capable of carrying efficiently such waters even though its fall per mile is but a fraction of that needed to bring the water to it along the lines of the small streams.

An Inner District.

"But this area has no such cross drainage lines, and hence cannot have the larger streams, even though there is present the necessary fall for maintaining the latter. As proof of this, there is a tract within that covered by the drainage system known as judicial ditch No. 11, which contains 300 square miles, yet within this area there are less than ten miles of continuous open river channel, and this single stretch of river is where the storm water from about 200 square miles has been compelled by reason of some small cross ridges to get together and make a river, resulting in a river channel of a size increasing from twenty feet wide and four feet deep at the upper end, to forty feet wide and eight feet deep at the lower end.

"Here, however, it meets a broad marsh about three miles across with practically no fall. Coming to this level area the waters part and spread out over whole townships, but are collected again ten miles to the west in Mud lake. The general route between these points is scattered over with pieces of rivers, sometimes connected, although crooked and poorly put together, while at other places they are wholly disconnected.

Ample Outlet.

"To remove the excess storm water from this area in time to insure the ordinary planting season and properly to guard against harmful overflow of bordering lands at harvest time, this outlet should be about sixty feet wide and eight feet deep, capable of carrying 1,800 cubic feet of water a second. But nature has here provided only a small stream about thirty feet wide and five feet deep, and given such a small slope and it can deliver only about four hundred cubic feet a second. Thus, the usual time for the safe delivery of storm water, commonly placed at from two to three weeks, is here lengthened into two to three months, while at the same time the ordinary season furnishes enough during even the drier summer months to keep fully replenished this small amount of run-off.

"A large part of the Thief river watershed is thus kept wet by reason of its peculiar topography; that is, having its slope all in one direction, rendering impossible the usual and natural processes of river-making. Considerable relief from too much surface water is frequently furnished by a pervious subsoil, consisting of sand or gravel, which permits much of the ground water to get away to remote localities, later appearing as springs and entering river channels and lake beds.

Usual Relief Denied.

"But all such relief is denied this area, as the whole tract is underlaid with a stratum of impervious clay, extending from two to four feet below the surface to an unknown depth. Test pits made during the last season to the depth of and along the line of all the ditches show this clay sub-soil to be always present.

"So in order to correct this twofold unfavorable condition imposed by nature, the drainage engineer is called in counsel. He must provide a complete system for the whole area, since the Thief river, which is to receive the water from the several main ditches, is as inadequate in its present size and capacity as are any of the present small streams, to provide adequate drainage to the bordering lands.

Up to State.

"No way has yet been pointed out by which either state or federal aid can be secured for the proper improvement of Thief river. It would seem, however, that the state, which has spent about $250,000 in the Red River valley alone, for drainage, and is continuing to assist other localities in their efforts to secure drainage, might be moved, should northern Minnesota at least lend a helping hand in this Thief river improvement. The federal government has opened these lands to the settler and has accepted his money in payment for them, thereby declaring that they are suited for agricultural purposes, but these lands in their present condition, except in a succession of dry seasons, are not suitable to agricultural use and so federal aid would be logical if on no other theory, than to smooth the edge a little of a sharp bargain.

"Representative Halvor Steenerson of Crookston, whose district includes this watershed, has worked on this line, but thus far without success. He reports that he was told such aid is unconstitutional. It appears to be constitutional to take the money obtained from the settler on these lands ($1.25 an acre even though he lives on it four years) and take it off to Idaho or Oregon to finance irrigation schemes, but it is unconstitutional to allow it to remain here in Minnesota, even as a loan to the settler, with which to construct ditches to drain the land he bought from the government.

Counties Do Share.

"Meanwhile, this tract is to be drained through the efforts of Marshall and Beltrami counties, and Mr. Steenerson has been instrumental in providing a way, by which all government land within the area is to be assessed the same as the settlers' land, without which the whole plan would have failed.

"Perhaps the most helpful thing done to make it possible to treat so large an area, and bring it into one comprehensive system, is the topographical survey by the United States geological survey made in 1907-8. This was a splendid piece of work, in obtaining which Mr. Steenerson and the Thief River Valley Improvement association, A. W. Clark, president, are deserving of great credit.

"The working out of the most economic system properly to drain each quarter section has resulted in making the map of this area look more like a cross between a checkerboard and a crazy-quilt than a drainage system. But an efficient drainage system of this extent must have each mile of each main and branch of a carrying capacity to met the demands made upon it by the territory whose storm water must pass through it. This carrying capacity in every ditch is the result of the combined effect of five distinct factors, some of which the engineer has under complete control, while others he can safely control only within small limits. The side slopes of the ditch he will design to suit the soil conditions to be met in the ditch and the agency to be employed in making the excavations. Greatest economy will be secured with the steeper side-slopes. These can be employed where clay or gravelly-clay predominate, but with sand or gravel the steeper side-slope will result in caving banks and a speedy and serious filling up of the ditch will follow.

Matter of Slope.

"If the ditch is to be dug with teams, that is with horses and small scrapers, the flatter side-slopes will be employed. [illegible] dredge machines can work only on the steeper side-slopes, while [illegible] side- [illegible] slightly affected by the [illegible] the ditch.

"The [illegible] flood stage and the [illegible] per mile of the bottom of the ditch.

Makes a Saving.

"An example of what may sometimes be saved by a diligent search for the most efficient design, occurs in the case of the final design of the lower five miles of the main ditch of system No. 11. Here a saving over a previous design of $1,600 was made without diminishing the discharge capacity of the ditch.

"Drainage once consisted of means provided by each man injured by it to conduct water away from where he did not want it to some place where some one else did not want it," concluded Mr. Hoag. "The early laws on drainage were built on the theory that water in excess was a common enemy against which every man was justified in protecting himself by all possible means. Under these conditions no progress could be made in drainage as a science. Until comparatively recent years it remained a more or less crude art, the laws governing the flow of water in open channels being but little known."

SOIL IS OF THE BEST

Expert Explains How Valley Was Developed Geologically.

W. H. Frazier, connected with the soils department of the state experimental station, has given much time to an examination of the soils in the Thief River valley. He gives his conclusions in the following statement:

"Most everyone knows in a general way the story of the formation of the soils of Minnesota. Thousands of years ago, geologists tell us, the northern part of North America, north of a line drawn from the Rocky mountains through Montana down through the western part of North Dakota, western Nebraska, and Kansas, east through middle Missouri, southern Illinois, along the southern part of Indiana and Ohio, through Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and traversing Long Island sound into the Atlantic ocean, was covered with a sheet of ice, from a few hundred feet to two or three miles in thickness and extending from the boundary given above to the polar regions.

"Some people may ask how to account for such a tract of ice forming and remaining on what is now such a valuable part of the globe. A slight study of different portions of the earth's crust shows that a great per cent is either lowering or raising from an increase or decrease in pressure elsewhere, and the supposition is that the state of Minnesota was at this time (ice age) some 6,000 to 7,000 feet above sea level.

Region Was Cold.

"From this it is easy to understand that instead of an average yearly temperature of about 42 degrees, it would be much below freezing, and in place of rain the precipitation would be in the form of snow, and from years of accumulation an immense sheet of ice would be the result. This large body of ice moved southward, crushing, grinding and pulverizing the rocks on its way and thus the soils of Minnesota, except Houston county, were primarily formed. If one can imagine the immense amount of pressure brought to bear upon the earth's crust by 10,000 feet of ice, earth material becoming incorporated in the glacier grinding and whetting away other material, all being carried and pushed for many miles, he can get some conception of the well churned, disintegrated, complicated mass of rock particles which comprise the regolith of this section of the country. Throughout the state many long ridges or moraines are to be found which were piled up by this body of ice. In these are found boulders of varying sizes which are the strongest proofs that they are of glacial formation.

"While the ridges were being formed, earth or rock material was being scooped up, leaving basins giving rise to many of the thousands of lakes of Minnesota.

"One large lake formed, which is not now shown on the map, of only a few remnants of it, was Lake Agassiz. This lake was bounded by a line starting near the source of the Red River of the North, paralleling it about

Land not only Thoroughly Drained but Supplied With System of Roads.

Thief River Falls, Minn.—To open 650,000 acres of new, fertile Minnesota land for settlement, 5,500,000 cubic yards of earth will be removed in the Thief River valley and that river enlarged from its source to the point of entry into the Red Lake river. Contractors are on the ground and one of the greatest reclamation projects ever undertaken in Minnesota is about to start.

To drain this land it will be necessary to take away as much earth as would provide loads that, in wagons each containing a cubic yard, would reach twenty-two times from Minneapolis to New York, or one and a quarter times around the world. It is one of the biggest drainage plans ever put into operation in the central northwest.

Under the supervision of W. R. Hoag, engineer, preliminary work began last fall, and now that spring is here and the opportunity is presented for an early start, no time will be lost in getting under way and the work will go forward through the summer.

Big Contract Let.

The contract for this system was let March 2 to the Northwestern Drainage company of Grand Rapids, Wis., and is under the engineering supervision of W. R. Hoag of Minneapolis.

The system provides for 497 miles of ditches and the same number of miles of highways to be so located that each of the 2,000 quarter sections of land has a ditch and a road along at least one of its half-mile sides. No such complete system of drainage has been attempted in this state to cover any considerable area.

Considering the rate at which the contractor must dig to complete the work in two years, calling six months a working year and eight hours a day, he will be required to move twenty-one cubic yards a minute or about ten cubic feet a second. To haul away this dirt as rapidly as dug would require seven lines of teams abreast carrying a cube yard each.

Extent of Work.

Thief river is to be enlarged from its source, in Thief lake, to a point a few miles above Thief River Falls, where it enters the Red Lake river. This will cost about $125,000 and will be divided among three sub-drainage districts in the ratio of their use of the river as an outlet for each subsystem. These sub-systems are known as state system No. 83, comprising about one-tenth of the area, and situated mostly on the west side of the river near its head waters.

The second subsystem of this area is known as county ditch No. 20. It comprises about two-tenths of the watershed and is located on the east side of the river, along the southern boundary of the Thief river area, and is in charge of Engineer Hamre of Crookston. Work was begun on this system last fall, and about two years will be required for its completion.

The remaining seven-tenths, or about 700 square miles, comprises the central, northern and eastern portions of the Thief river area and is known as judicial ditch No. 11.

Alive to Importance.

This section of the state is fully alive to the importance of the work and what the reclamation of this land will mean for the development of the northwestern part of Minnesota. An active campaign has begun to interest farmers and draw them to the fertile soil that will be ready for occupancy with the completion of the drainage canals.

An attempt will be made to arrest the tide of emigration to Canada and also to interest many who are seeking homesteads and patented land in Montana and Idaho. It is advanced as an argument for the land to be reclaimed that it will be better than any other and that with the climatic advantages for which this section is noted, the land should be rapidly settled up.

Statement of Prime Mover.

William J. Brown of Warren is freely credited by the men who have carried forward the Thief river project as being the man to whom the undertaking is primarily due. Not only did the idea originate with Mr. Brown, but he has been active in the preliminary work necessary to get the project under way, representing the petitioners who applied for state and county aid in the work.

His account of the work it was necessary for them to do follows:

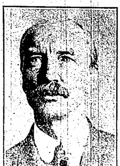
"The great wealth of natural resources and the feasibility of the drainage of the area now comprising judicial ditch system No. 11, was first suggested to me in 1900 by a trip through that territory, in company with W. R. Hoag, drainage engineer, who passed favorably upon the engineering problems involved at that time. The project, however, was impracticable for other reasons, chief among which was the fact that within the district there were large areas of unpatented government land, which under existing laws could not be assessed for its share of the benefits.

Hard Matter to Finance.

"It was thus found impossible to finance the proposition and to that end federal legislation was necessary. This was secured in 1906, when congress passed an act authorizing the secretary of the interior to cause a survey to be made of the territory in question with with a view of determining the possibilities of their reclamation. Such survey was made by the United States Geological Survey and a report was transmitted to congress Jan. 28, 1907, and printed as house document No. 607, and further report was made to congress by Richard A Ballinger, secretary of the interior, May 13, 1909, and printed as house document No. 27. The reports were enthusiastically in favor of the drainage, but when the attempt was made to appropriate funds for the actual drainage, the western house members discovered a great difference in the constitutionality of appropriating money for irrigation ditches to conduct water upon land and drainage ditches to take the water off, and killed the measure in committee.

"On May 20, 1908, the Volstead bill, so-called, was passed by congress. This bill is entitled 'An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the state of Minnesota,' and permits unentered and unpatented government land to be assessed for benefits in drainage proceedings. This bill removed the principal difficulty and we again prepared to proceed, only to find that the legislature of 1907 of this state had so amended the judicial ditch law as to render its operation impracticable where large and vacant areas of land were affected. Thereupon, the legislature of 1909 was applied to and the necessary legislation enacted and immediately upon adjournment the petition and bond for the establishment of the ditch was prepared and on May 22, 1909, the same was signed and presented to Andrew Grindeland, district judge, who at once made an order for a preliminary hearing.

Minneapolis Engineer Who Planned Drainage



W. R. HOAG,
Authority on Reclamation of Swamp Lands

"The hearing was held before Judge Grindeland on July 10, 1909, and it is a remarkable fact, that although the lands of more than 2,000 land-owners were liable to assessment for benefits, neither at that hearing nor at any other stage of the proceedings has objection been made to the establishment of the ditch. On July 12, 1909, Judge Grindeland appointed W. R. Hoag of Minneapolis as engineer in charge of the drainage project, and a comprehensive ditch system to be made and ordered a complete survey of the territory by him.

Viewers Begin Work.

"Mr. Hoag completed his preliminary survey and made his report on Oct. 20, 1909, and the viewers entered upon their work. Judge Grindeland had appointed G. O. Cross of Warren, John Simonson of Excel, and Mr. Hagen of Bemidji, as viewers. Their duties were to examine the lands affected and estimate and determine the amount and the value of the ditch. On Jan. 21, 1910, the viewers completed their work and filed their report of assessments. Final hearing to consider and act upon the engineer's and viewers' report was ordered by the judge and on Feb. 26, 1910, after such hearing, Judge Grindeland, by his written order, confirmed and adopted each report and established the system as designed by Mr. Hoag.

"The contract for the construction of the ditch system, including the leveling of the dump to form roads was let March 1, 1910, the contract calling for completion of the whole system in 1912.

Cost to the Land.

"The actual assessment for benefits will amount to about $2.50 an acre. Interest at 5 per cent is payable annually. During the first five years the interest only is payable, but during the sixth year one-fifteenth of the principal must be paid and one-fifteenth each year thereafter until all is paid. The year before any installment is due, the county auditor enters the installment upon the tax books and it is paid with the real taxes. The funds with which to pay cost of construction are secured by the sale of drainage bonds of the county affected, and the bonds mature in the same manner as do the installments, the bond being payable out of the collections of the respective installments of assessments for benefits.

"Considering the magnitude of the project and the engineering difficulties to be overcome, the completion of preliminary work and the letting of the contract of construction within one year is phenomenal, and to Mr. Hoag is due the credit for this achievement.

The Soil and Facilities.

"The soil in the whole territory is of unusual fertility, not stony and of ample depth for all crops. There is no poor land. The slope to the west is ample completely to drain and render tillable all land affected. The land is not cut-over land, which is sometimes expensive to reclaim, but is open prairie interspersed here and there with small poplar groves. The village of Grygla is the most central point in the whole system and there is today, within one-half day's drive from Grygla, many free quarter section homesteads of choice agricultural land only waiting the advent of the ditch to become as fine farming land as exists in the far-famed Red River valley, or elsewhere in the state. To those who prefer to purchase lands already patented, the price ranges from $10 to $18 an acre according to improvements. A letter addressed to the secretary of the Commercial club of Grygla will secure full information to prospective settlers. Even in the face of the adverse conditions caused by the imperfect natural drainage, the farmers in the territory have prospered and in the few years since the county was first settled many of them have achieved independence. The creamery at Grygla alone paid to the farmer in 1909 more than $28,000 for butter fat.

Many Improvements.

"Rural telephone lines are in operation over the district, and with the advent of improved transportation facilities afforded by the graded roads along the ditches, the farm conditions will most favorably compare with those in the hitherto more favored parts of the state. The free homesteads are being rapidly taken up, but many are left, and the lands patented are already advancing in price because of the impending benefit.

"It is true that the territory is somewhat distant from railroad transportation points. The lands of the system nearest the railroads being about five miles therefrom, and the most distant being forty miles farther. Railroads, however, will of necessity follow the rapid settlement of the country, and knowing the favorable climate and soil conditions, it is certain that within a comparatively few years the whole territory will be reasonably accessible to railroad transportation.

The Opportunity for Homes.

"The free homesteads and the low-priced patented lands should prove attractive to the wage earners of the cities who are dissatisfied with their present lack of independence and should likewise deflect the stream of immigration passing our doors to Canada and to the arid lands of our western states. No soil that can be found in either locality can compare in fertility and in the variety and quality of its products with that in this drainage area. Why should an intending settler experiment with untried and unproved conditions in Canada, or take up a 320-acre arid homestead in the west and dry farm it, or burden himself with the cost of an irrigated tract there with the water supply question unsolved as it is, when right here in the grand old North Star state we have ideal climatic conditions, soils of proved fertility, rainfall in abundance to insure crops, unusually favorable dairying and stock raising conditions, and other unsurpassed natural resources with which the foreign localities cannot compete.

"To the actual settler who is willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and assume only one-half the burden necessary to success in the Canadas or in the west, this section of the country affords unlimited possibilities of prosperity and success."

GIVES LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Judge Grindeland Outlines Methods and Throws In Sound Advice.

District Judge A. Grindeland, who has been largely instrumental in working out the legislation necessary to the project, has prepared the following resume of the method of providing for the township and county drainage systems:

"Prior to 1883," writes Judge Grindeland, "we had only the township system of drainage. This was inadequate for draining large areas. The legislature of 1883 enacted the law known as the county system of drainage.

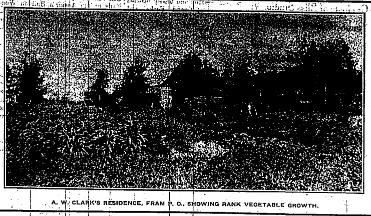
"There being much government land in the northern part of this state, and that section being sparsely settled, it took some time before the drainage question became a matter of public interest. Public attention was especially called to it by an open letter written by Judge Frank Ives of Crookston in the spring of 1886. A drainage convention was then called to meet at that city in July, 1886. There was a good representation of farmers, business and professional men. The necessity, practicability and advantages of drainage was discussed. James J. Hill proposed that a survey of the valley be made, and that if the counties interested would pay half the expense, his company would pay the other half. This proposition was accepted and the survey was made. This survey showed that there was sufficient fall to drain all the wet lands. It accomplished a great deal of good in more than one way, but it took years before practical results were realized under the county system.

State Drainage.

"In 1893 the legislature passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for drainage work in the Red River valley, and creating a drainage commission known as the Red River valley drainage commission. Under the direction of this commission $182,500 was expended in drainage and reclaiming the swamp lands of the Red River valley. In 1901 an act was passed by the legislature appropriating $50,000 for the drainage and reclamation of state lands in Minnesota and creating a drainage commission consisting of the governor, state auditor and secretary of state, and known as the drainage commission of the state of Minnesota. An additional appropriation of $50,000 was made in 1903 to be expended under the direction of this commission.

"In 1907 a law was enacted giving this commission power to drain state lands, and such private lands as may be benefited thereby, and to assess private lands therefor. A large amount of ditching has been successfully accomplished under this law.

HOME ON FERTILE ALLUVIAL LANDS OF MUD RIVER BOTTOMS



A. W. CLARK'S RESIDENCE, FRAM P. O., SHOWING RANK VEGETABLE GROWTH.

"Under the laws prior to 1907 the state drainage commission had no power to assess lands, hence could only construct ditches from appropriations expressly made for that purpose. On account of limited appropriations, they could not begin to keep pace with the demands and besides were restricted to localities where the state had lands that needed to be drained. The county system was inadequate as it applied to ditches wholly within the county and in case such a ditch benefited land beyond the boundary of the county such lands could not be assessed. Besides, it is often the case that ditches must extend beyond the boundary of the county in which the proceedings are instituted, and it therefore became apparent that a more comprehensive drainage law was required.

Judicial Ditch System.

At a special session of the legislature in 1902 the judicial drainage law was passed. The law has since been amended, but it has been a success since its enactment. The fact that ditches costing several million dollars are now and have been constructed under this law should claim for it attention and consideration rather than criticism and condemnation.

"The Volstead act, which was passed May 20, 1908, was a great relief to settlers who had acquired titles to their land but were surrounded by vacant or homesteaded government lands. This law provides: 'That all lands in the state of Minnesota, when subject to entry, and all entered lands for which no final certificates have issued, are hereby made and declared to be subject to all of the provisions of the laws of said state relating to the drainage of swamp or overflowed lands for agricultural purposes to the same extent and in the same manner in which lands of a like character held in private ownership are or may be subject to said laws.' Thus, we have drainage jurisdiction over the government lands, and we are now preparing many a tract of this land for the home of the government homestead settler.

"Now, having briefly called attention to drainage legislation, let us for a moment comment upon proceedings thereunder. Experience has taught us how to avoid trouble and expense in ditch proceedings.

Petition.

"A tract of land that needs drainage should not be drained in piecemeal. It should be all done in one proceeding. With several proceedings and several sets of viewers you have more trouble and expense. Make the petition broad enough so as to give the engineer power to take in the whole watershed, or so much thereof as requires drainage.

Engineer.

"Don't experiment with inexperienced engineers. An incompetent engineer will make the ditch a failure. In a level country ditches are often made too shallow. Branches and laterals should be established at the same time, and not rely upon townships or landowners to put them in afterward. Ditches and laterals should, when possible, follow section lines.

Roads and Bridges.

"Whenever possible, make use of the excavated dirt for road purposes. Have it specified in the contract how the roads and bridges shall be built and completed. You can often kill two birds with one stone. Get good ditches and good roads in one proceeding. The viewers should be careful about providing for bridges wherever required.

Viewers.

"Too much care cannot be taken in appointing viewers. They should be practical men, with experience and good judgment. Viewers have an inclination to rely too much on the engineer and his report. Viewers should be equipped with pencil and plats and should view the land by forty-acre tracts—always by forty-acre tracts. To classify a farm of 160 acres as all swamp land when it contains only forty acres of such land, is wrong, and litigation generally follows. When the viewers have viewed all the lands, then they should call a meeting of the settlers at the nearest schoolhouse. There inform the land owners of their assessments, invite discussion and in many cases better information can be obtained of conditions during wet seasons, by this method, than can be gotten by viewing or from the engineer's report. Every resident settler should be consulted by the viewers before completing the report. Don't blame the farmer for wanting to be consulted before his assessment is fixed and report filed. If you don't give him a chance to discuss these matters before the hearing on the viewers' report, then you will have to meet him in court, where it is harder to adjust matters after counsel fees and expenses have been incurred. If you have to break in new viewers, give them full instructions before sending them out. Poor work on the part of the viewers means delay, expense and litigation.

Hearing.

"The following method of procedure at the first and final hearing has proved to be satisfactory and expedient. This applies to hearing before the county commissioners as well as before the district judge. Have the engineer and viewers present. Then proceed as nearly as possible in the same manner as the trial of a court case. Hear the parties and witnesses on one side, then on the other, each taking the usual oath before testifying. When this is not done, the hearing is likely to take on the form of a stormy political convention, rather than a judicial proceeding.

"When the hearing is concluded, the county commissioners, or the judge, as the case may be, should make findings and render decision.

"Add drainage laws are necessarily somewhat complicated, and give rise to conflict between honest opinions. There would be much less friction in operating under it if those who preside would give these proceedings [illegible] persons interested more time and con[illegible] are not hampered with appeals. Drainage has become practicable."

ENGINEER TELLS OF WORK

W. R. Hoag Explains Peculiarities of Drainage Area.

W. R. Hoag, civil engineer of Minneapolis, who is supervising the work, throws much light upon the magnitude of the undertaking and tells about the difficulties which confronted him when he began the task of making the plans for the reclamation.

"Thief river, with its tributaries, Mud and Moose rivers, provides the only natural drainage for about 1,000 square miles situated in the eastern part of Marshall and the western part of Beltrami county," said Mr. Hoag. "It is a tract about twenty-five miles wide and forty miles long. Grygla is situated near the center and Thief River Falls in its southeast corner.

"This area of about 650,000 acres, which is smaller by only two townships than the state of Rhode Island, has an average slope from northeast to southwest of nearly two feet a mile. A fall entirely sufficient to provide ample drainage for it, had nature been but reasonably judicious in its distribution.

"River channels are made and maintained wholly by the erosive action of running water. The slope necessary to create the velocity which measures its securing effect and ability to maintain an open channel differs widely, depending somewhat upon the subsoil conditions but largely upon the volume of water at flood stage.

Question of Fall.

"The Thief river, for about twenty miles, has about six inches fall to the mile. The Red river for a hundred miles along the state's western boundary maintains its channel and has a fall of about two inches to the mile, while stretches of the lower Mississippi river have but a half inch to the mile.

"Small streams must have from three to eight feet fall a mile to overcome the obstructive effects of sedimentation and vegetation. The Thief river watershed has ample fall in the general direction of slope to maintain good-sized rivers, capable of removing all excess storm water in the usual time—that insuring safe cultivation on adjacent lands—but it has no cross valley lines of sufficient slope to collect the storm water into small streams and conduct it quickly to a central channel or river. Accumulated water from these many small valleys coming in at the same time would maintain a river channel capable of carrying efficiently such waters even though its fall per mile is but a fraction of that needed to bring the water to it along the lines of the small streams.

An Inner District.

"But this area has no such cross drainage lines, and hence cannot have the larger streams, even though there is present the necessary fall for maintaining the latter. As proof of this, there is a tract within that covered by the drainage system known as judicial ditch No. 11, which contains 300 square miles, yet within this area there are less than ten miles of continuous open river channel, and this single stretch of river is where the storm water from about 200 square miles has been compelled by reason of some small cross ridges to get together and make a river, resulting in a river channel of a size increasing from twenty feet wide and four feet deep, at the upper end, to forty feet wide and eight feet deep at the lower end.

"Here, however, it meets a broad marsh about three miles across with practically no fall. Coming to this level area the waters part and spread out over whole townships, but are collected again ten miles to the west in Mud lake. The general route between these points is scattered over with pieces of rivers, sometimes connected, although crooked and poorly put together, while at other places they are wholly disconnected.

Ample Outlet.

"To remove the excess storm water from this area in time to insure the ordinary planting season and properly to guard against harmful overflow to bordering lands at harvest time, this outlet should be about sixty feet wide and eight feet deep, capable of passing 1,600 cubic feet of water a second. But nature has here provided only a crooked stream about thirty feet wide and five feet deep, and given such a small slope and it can deliver only about four hundred cubic feet a second. Thus, the usual time for the safe delivery of storm water, commonly placed at from two to three weeks, is here lengthened into two to three months, while at the same time the ordinary season furnishes enough during even the drier summer months to keep fully replenished this small amount of run-off.

"A large part of the Thief river watershed is thus kept wet by reason of its peculiar topography; that is, having its slope all in one direction, rendering impossible the usual and natural processes of river-making. Considerable relief from too much surface water is frequently furnished by a pervious subsoil, consisting of sand or gravel, which permits much of the ground water to get away to remote localities, later appearing as springs and entering river channels and lake beds.

Usual Relief Denied.

"But all such relief is denied this area, as the whole tract is underlaid with a stratum of impervious clay, extending from two to four feet below the surface to an unknown depth. Test pits made during the last season to the depth of and along the line of all the ditches show this clay sub-soil to be always present.

"So in order to correct this twofold unfavorable condition imposed by nature, the drainage engineer is called in counsel. He must provide a complete system for the whole area, since the Thief river, which is to receive the water from the several main ditches, is as inadequate in its present size and capacity as are any of the present small streams, to provide adequate drainage to the bordering lands.

Up to State.

"No way has yet been pointed out by which either state or federal aid can be secured for the proper improvement of Thief river. It would seem, however, that the state, which has spent about $250,000 in the Red River valley alone, for drainage, and is continuing to assist other localities in their efforts to secure drainage, might be moved, should northern Minnesota at least lend a helping hand in this Thief river improvement. The federal government has opened these lands to the settler and has accepted his money in payment for them, thereby declaring that they are suited for agricultural purposes, but these lands in their present condition, except in a succession of dry seasons, are not suitable to agricultural use and so federal aid would be logical if on no other theory, than to smooth the edge a little of a sharp bargain.

"Representative Halvor Steenerson of Crookston, whose district includes this watershed, has worked on this line, but thus far without success. He reports that he was told such aid is unconstitutional. It appears to be constitutional to take the money obtained from the settler on these lands ($1.25 an acre (even though he lives on it four years) and take it off to Idaho or Oregon to finance irrigation schemes, but it is unconstitutional to allow it to remain here in Minnesota, even as a loan to the settler, with which to construct ditches to drain the land he bought from the government.

Counties Do Share.

"Meanwhile, this tract is to be drained through the efforts of Marshall and Beltrami counties, and Mr. Steenerson has been instrumental in providing a way by which all government land within the area is to be assessed the same as the settlers' land, without which the whole plan would have failed.

"Perhaps the most helpful thing done to make it possible to treat so large an area, and bring it into one comprehensive system, is the topographical survey by the United States geological survey made in 1907-8. This was a splendid piece of work, in obtaining which Mr. Steenerson and the Thief River Valley Improvement association, A. W. Clark, president, are deserving of great credit.

"The working out of the most economic system properly to drain each quarter section has resulted in making the map of this area look more like a cross between a checkerboard and a crazy-quilt than a drainage system. But an efficient drainage system of this extent must have each mile of each main and branch of a carrying capacity to meet the demands made upon it by the territory whose storm water must pass through it. This carrying capacity in every ditch is the result of the combined effect of five distinct factors, some of which the engineer has under complete control, while others he can safely control only within small limits. The side slopes of the ditch he will design to suit the soil conditions to be met in the ditch and the agency to be employed in making the excavations. Greatest economy will be secured with the steeper side-slopes. These can be employed where clay or gravelly clay predominate, but with sand or gravel the steeper side-slope will result in caving banks and a speedy and serious filling up of the ditch will follow.

Matter of Slope.

"If the ditch is to be dug with teams, that is with horses and small scrapers, the flatter side-slopes will be employed. If either dipper dredge machines [illegible] side-slopes [illegible] vators [illegible] the engineer [illegible] steeper slope [illegible].

"If [illegible] slopes [illegible] give [illegible] steep [illegible] to be [illegible] section [illegible] drainage engineer has much to do in [illegible] coefficient [illegible] of the [illegible] slightly affected by the [illegible] ditch.

"The remaining [illegible] factors of [illegible] size which [illegible] the discharge capacity of the ditch [illegible] design [illegible] the bottom [illegible] the depth of water [illegible] at flood stage and the fall per mile of the bottom of the ditch.

Makes a Saving.

"An example of what may sometimes be saved by a diligent search for the most efficient design, occurs in the case of the final design of the lower five miles of the ditch in judicial ditch No. 11. Here a saving over a previous design of $1,600 was made without diminishing the discharge capacity of the ditch.

"Drainage once consisted of means provided by each man injured by it to conduct water away from where he did not want it to some place where some one else did not want it," concluded Mr. Hoag. "The early laws on drainage were built on the theory that water in excess was a common enemy against which every man was justified in protecting himself by all possible means. Under these conditions no progress could be made in drainage as a science. Until comparatively recent years it remained a more or less crude art, the laws governing the flow of water in open channels being but little known."

SOIL IS OF THE BEST

Expert Explains How Valley Was Developed Geologically.

W. H. Frazier, connected with the soils department of the state experimental station, has given much time to an examination of the soils in the Thief River valley. He gives his conclusions in the following statement:

"Most everyone knows in a general way the story of the formation of the soils of Minnesota. Thousands of years ago, geologists tell us, the northern part of North America, north of a line drawn from the Rocky mountains through Montana down through the western part of North Dakota, western Nebraska, and Kansas, east through middle Missouri, southern Illinois, along the southern part of Indiana and Ohio, through Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and traversing Long Island sound into the Atlantic ocean, was covered with a sheet of ice, from a few hundred feet to two or three miles in thickness and extending from the boundary given above to the polar regions.

"Some people may ask how to account for such a tract of ice forming and remaining on what is now such a valuable part of the globe. A slight study of different portions of the earth's crust shows that a great per cent is either lowering or raising itself; an increase or decrease in pressure elsewhere, and the supposition is that the state of Minnesota was at this time (ice age) some 6,000 to 7,000 feet above sea level.

Region Was Cold.

"From this it is easy to understand that instead of an average yearly temperature of about 42 degrees, it would be much below freezing, and in place of rain the precipitation would be in the form of snow, and from years of accumulation an immense sheet of ice would be the result. This large body of ice moved southward, crushing, grinding and pulverizing the rocks on its way and thus are the soils of Minnesota, except Houston county, were primarily formed. If one can imagine the immense amount of pressure brought to bear upon the earth's crust by 10,000 feet of ice, earth material becoming incorporated in the glacier grinding and whetting away other material, all being carried and pushed for many miles, he can get some conception of the well churned, disintegrated, complicated mass of rock particles which comprise the regolith of this section of the country. Throughout the state many long ridges or moraines are to be found which were piled up by this body of ice. In these are found boulders of varying sizes which are the strongest proofs that they are of glacial formation.

"While the ridges were being formed, earth or rock material was being scooped up, leaving basins giving rise to many of the thousands of lakes of Minnesota.

"One large lake formed, which is not now shown on the map, or only a few remnants of it, was Lake Agassiz. This lake was bounded by a line starting near the source of the Red River of the North, paralleling it about twenty-five miles on the east, up to about the southern part of the Red Lake county, thence eastward running near the southern shore of lower Red Lake, northeast to Bors Fort Indian reservation, thence northwest encircling Lake Winnipeg, Lake Manitoba, back to the international boundary line about fifty miles west of Red River of the North, paralleling the river, about fifty miles west, to the source.

Who guided the project through the maze of legislative proceedings.

"It will at once be seen that the widely known Red River valley was covered by this lake. Not only did the Red River valley receive its vast amount of fertility from the deposits (settlings) of this lake, but the vast area east, north and northwest, as outlined by the above area received rich deposits also. This is shown by vegetable matter and organic debris found over this area. The fertility of this large area of deposit has been proved by the results of the Red River valley, which includes the Thief River valley as a tributary area.

Character of Soil.

"Thus, summing up the soil formation of these drainage districts we find: First, that by action of the glaciers in prehistoric times there was a varying amount of glacial till or ground-up mass of rocks spread over the surface varying from 100 to 200 feet in thickness; second, as a result of these glaciers a large lake was formed which has now nearly disappeared, but has left its traces by the beaches formed and large deposits of organic matter together with dissolved mineral substances, just like many lakes are doing today in the state of Minnesota. This in a way accounts for the levelness of the district and the varying thickness of vegetable or organic matter. Organic accumulations in many places have been going on since that time, due to the growth of spagnum moss and characteristic vegetation of the swamps.

"The organic matter varies from twelve inches to three feet in depth, underlaid with clay slightly sandy. In some places pockets of gravel were discovered which came within about two or three feet of the surface. The vegetable or organic matter of the soils which are under cultivation and as a rule are partially drained, shows a good degree of disintegration and by comparison of adjoining lower tracts which have not been drained at all, water standing at the surface, prove that a few years of good drainage and plowing or loosening up yearly will bring about good results.

Clay Is Important.

"The clay underlying this organic matter is not a fact to be lost sight of. If the water level is lowered several feet below the surface of the ground, the clay is one of the best types of soil to help raise this water to the roots of growing plants (as kerosene raises in a lamp wick). Where the particles are large as a sandy subsoil or gravel, the underground water will not rise nearly so rapidly nor so high as with clay. The larger the particles, the less the height to which the water will rise and the more easily it will drain. The slight amount of sand will drain much more quickly than a subsoil of pure clay.

"As to the fertility of the soil of this locality, there cannot help but be plenty of the plant food elements, namely, nitrogen, potash and phosphorus, present. It being a new soil, alluvial deposit formation, as cited above, overlaying glacial till or highly disintegrated rock particles, leaves little or no doubt as to the question of amount of plant food.

Soil Conditions Change.

"When the water is removed from the vegetable matter, a great change in soil conditions will be brought about. The soil will become more porous, air (oxygen) will pass through it more readily, temperature will be raised and a new set of soil bacteria will begin action. Oxidation will take places, gases will be liberated which will react further on the soil particles, plant food elements will be liberated and nature will begin building an arable soil which will in time become a fertile soil. Man can aid by turning over or cultivating the soil and by seeding crops which aid in the above processes. Often such newly drained soils are slightly acid in character, due to the partial decaying of the immense amount of organic refuse material forming acids which are neither leached out nor counteracted by alkaline mineral material. It must be understood that sour soils will not produce successfully. There must be present a slight excess of basic material for best bacterial action. Such soils are remedied by a dressing of lime—generally 500 to 1,000 pounds an acre. The division of soils at the experiment station, St. Anthony Park, will be glad to test any sample of soil for lime and acidity and offer suggestions for treatment."

Farmers Are Interested

Great Richness of Land for Entry is Little Understood

Farmers who have been in this section for years are awakened to the importance of the project and are giving their hearty support to it, and the movement to bring others in to till the land that will be opened as soon as the canals have begun to do their work.

A. W. Clark, pioneer agriculturist, voices the sentiment of the farmers, and tells of the resources of the soil and the advantages that will accrue to those who locate here.

"There are few places," said Mr. Clark, "where rich, level land can be had, under the homestead laws, for $1.25 an acre. There are few places where the land is thoroughly drained and roads built ready for the occupant, at 5 per cent on twenty years' time. This is exactly what can be found in the Mud lake country, more than 200 sections of which lands are still vacant and can be filed on under the homestead laws. More than 1,000 miles of great ditches and their laterals are being laid out by the engineers.

"Perhaps nowhere in the west are such opportunities offered a man in moderate circumstances to settle on good land so cheaply as in eastern Marshall county. The swamps to be drained are practically all of clay bottom, with two or three feet of vegetable mold on top, with a southwesterly incline of two to five feet to the mile. The little groves are mostly taken up, but there is an abundance of fuel to be found in the tamarack swamps to last for years, and the whole covered with a luxuriant growth of wild grasses.

"Clover, alfalfa and corn are grown successfully on land high enough to dry out quickly after heavy rains and, after the ditches are in, will undoubtedly be as sure a crop as in any part of the state. It has come to pass that there are no more new lands to be opened by the government, and land values are rising fast. A man who has a quarter section of good land laid by for a home for his children, or for old age, will be fortunate, for most of our people will become of necessity either renters or laborers. At any rate, this is the last chance to get good land on homestead rights in Minnesota.

"If I can live to see a settler on every quarter section of this rich land, with a ditch and a good road I am ready to die. My heart and soul is in this work."

Some Questions.

"The prevailing questions asked with regard to the drainage project are as follows:

"First—What is the nature of the lands to be drained?

"Second—What is the price of the land and who pays the drainage charges, and what will these charges be?

"Third—Is this land all wet now, and can a homesteader live on it before the ditches are in and make a living for his family?

"Fourth—Can the lands be bought, or how are they taken up; and if on homestead only, how about complying with the laws as to residence?

"Fifth—Is it a good dairy and a stock country, and if so, have you any creameries, and what are the cream tests, average?

"All the lands in the Mud lake district belong to the Red Lake Indians. Under the treaty this land is held in trust by the government and can be sold to homesteaders under the provisions of the homestead laws only, at $1.25 an acre, in five annual payments, but as there is no penalty for non-payment, there are few who make any payments until they make final proof, which may run for seven years. But some of these lands were opened for settlement before the passage of the free homes bill, in 1900, and all such lands, on any Indian reservation, were by this bill, made free, the government paying the Indians for them instead of the settler, though any of the lands may be commuted into cash entries after fourteen months' continuous residence and cultivation, by paying $1.25 an acre, while five years' residence entitles the homesteader on the 'free lands' to a patent without any payment.

"The vacant lands are all low and swampy, too wet for cultivation until drained. The test holes of the engineers show that most of the land is underlaid with boulder clay, with a black muck deposit of from one to three or more feet, covered in parts with peat, but in much of it, with moss and slush of vegetable origin, void of timber or brush except small popple groves and a few tamarac and spruce swamps. The popple groves are practically all taken up by former settlers, and there are schools, churches, stores, postoffices, blacksmith shops and creameries scattered all through the lands, wherever high enough to form settlements, but none are more than three or four feet above the general level of the swamps.

"The drainage charges will be around $2.25 an acre, average, and must be paid as a tax, by the settler. The first five years the interest only is paid, but after that he must pay one-fifteenth of the principal each year for fifteen years.

About the Lands.

"The answers to the questions are so interwoven that I am answering all of them at once. If a person waits until the ditches are completed to make his entry, or until it is 'dry enough to make a living on,' the land will have all been entered. But there are laws which will, on a proper showing, protect an entryman. The law provides, where an entryman cannot, for climatic reasons, establish his residence within six months, as required by law, the commissioner of the general land office may, in his discretion, allow him a year, and if at the end of this time he establishes his residence in a house on the land and it is still too wet to live on, he may ask for a leave of absence for another year. The lands cannot be bought or taken in any other way than on homestead.

"As for making a living while waiting for the ditches: There are many deserted farms, with good house and improvements, that can be rented for a year or two at a small cost for rent. I have several under my control which I shall let free, and at present prices of food products it seems as if anyone should get along for a year or two, and by that time we hope to have most of the land drained.

"Though we raise as good grain, such as wheat, oats and barley, here as anywhere in the Red river valley, this is pre-eminently a dairy and stock country. I raised seventeen acres of good, ripe corn last year, and nearly everybody raises clover, timothy, bluegrass, and are just beginning to raise alfalfa. Our creamery tests average nearly 3.5 per cent.

"I am a United States commissioner and settlers can make entries before me.

"N. Evernham of Felton, Clay county, was here in February and filed on a quarter, a quarter mile south of the Rollis store and postoffice, half a mile from our school and one mile from our church. He says:

"'I had no idea there were such chances to get good lands on homestead, right in the settlements, for mere entry and drainage charges.'

"C. L. Dunham, from Gettysburg, S. D., was here and contested two abandoned entries, right on one of the main ditches. He says:

"'It is just like finding a farm. There won't be an acre of this drained land left vacant by next fall. The trouble is, people don't know about it.'

"J. C. Wilson of Fergus Falls entered a quarter in township of Velt.

"'I wouldn't take $2,500 for my quarter,' he says. 'I shall never allow stick of timber cut out of that beautiful grove.'

"Earl Sands of Tait, Sask., has taken up a quarter here. He says:

"'This beats any Canada lands, and my father and two brothers will come and take up homesteads.'"

GRYGLA

Grygla, located on Mud River near the Eastern boundary line of Marshall County, Minnesota, is near the geographical center of the Thief River Drainage project.

The lands tributary thereto are of the most fertile in the whole district, and will produce large yields of all varieties of grains, grasses and root crops.

Wild fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, cranberries and blueberries abound there, and a good yield is had each year. That part of the territory is fairly well settled and schools and churches are in existence all over the district.

Grygla is a bustling prosperous young town, having a creamery, a saw-mill, a grist mill, a weekly newspaper, a State Bank, a Commercial Club, and a bunch of hustling and wide awake merchants. The Grygla Land and Loan Company is operating in this territory and is dealing in desirable farm lands. Also the Company in conjunction with the Commercial Club, has made arrangements to show the vacant government lands to actual prospective settlers at actual cost without payment of a locator's fee. A quarter section of any land tributary to Grygla will assure an independent income within a very short time, and the same can be purchased at the present time at a low figure and on easy terms. Many free homesteads can also be had. Grygla can be reached at the present time by way of stage or private rig from Thief River Falls, or by gasoline launch from Thief River Falls, except at low water.

Also if preferable, same can be reached by team from Middle River, a station on the Great Northern Railroad. Long distance telephone communication can be had with Grygla on Tri-State Telephone, via Thief River Falls.

Work is now under way on the drainage projects and the price of lands will advance as the work progresses.

Prospective buyers or settlers would do well to communicate with the Secretary of the Commercial Club with reference to roads and travel accommodations.

Come to Grygla and buy a farm home or take a free government homestead and build yourself one, and in a short time you will with diligence and reasonable effort, have an assured income therefrom and the increase in farm values will make you independent.

DOING THEIR DUTY

Scores of Thief River Falls Readers Are Learning the Duty of the Kidneys.

To filter the blood is the kidney's duty.

When they fail to do this the kidneys are sick.

Backache and many kidney ills follow;

Urinary trouble, diabetes.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure them all.

Thief River Falls people endorse our claim.

Mrs. George Parenteau, 322 S. Duluth Ave., Thief River Falls, Minn., says: "I was greatly worried over my little girl's condition. She was a constant sufferer of kidney complaint and was unable to control her kidney secretions. I tried everything that I thought might help her, but no good results were received until Doan's Kidney Pills were procured at Curtis' Drug Store. As soon as this remedy was taken, the child began to get better and now she has no symtom of kidney complaint. I wish to add that another member of my family has also taken Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results."

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

A FIERCE NIGHT ALARM

is the hoarse, startling cough of a child, suddenly attacked by croup. Often it aroused Lewis Chamblin of Manchester, O., (R. R. No. 2) for their four children were greatly subject to croup. "Sometimes in severe attacks," he writes "we were afraid they would die, but since we proved what a certain remedy Dr. King's New Discovery is, we have no fear. We rely on it for croup and for coughs, colds, or any throat or lung trouble." So do thousands of others. So may you. Asthma, Hay Fever, LaGrippe, Whooping Cough, Hemorrhages fly before it. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Sold by all Druggists.

THE PURPOSE OF ALL IS THE PROGRESS OF HUMANITY
VOL. XXII, THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 10, 1911. NO 30

RESERVATION LANDS OPEN APRIL 15th

Can be "Squatted" that Date and Filed May 15th. No "Free for All" Opening. Restrictions!

One having proved up a homestead can not file on these lands. Such as lost, forfeited or abandoned their claims, except those canceled for fraud or relinquished, can now file again. This is according to the latest information at hand.

The first reports had it that anyone having proved on a homestead could file here again, as well as those who never had one. This, however, proved erroneous when a copy of the bill itself appeared which reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

United States Land Office, Crookston, Minnesota.

(Public—No. 340.) (H. R. 15660).

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person who, prior to the approval of this Act, has made entry under the homestead or desert land laws, but who, subsequently to such entry, from any cause shall have lost, forfeited, or abandoned the same, shall be entitled to benefits of the homestead or desert-land laws as though such former entry had not been made, and any person applying for a second homestead or desert-land entry under this Act shall furnish a description and the date of his former entry: Provided, That the provisions of this Act shall not apply to any person whose former entry was canceled for fraud, or who relinquished his former entry for a valuable consideration in excess of the filing fees paid by him on his original entry.

Approved, February 3, 1911.

WASHINGTON LETTER

Washington, D. C., March 8, 1911—As intimated in previous correspondence the votes in the Senate on the Borah resolution for direct election of United States U. S. senators and the Beveridge resolution, which if carried would prising. Both resolutions were defeated, as is well known now, by narrow margins. There was a time if a vote could have been obtained the anti-Lorimer forces would have won out, but this Lorimer's friends prevented until they were sure they were in control of the situation and had the necessary votes.

* * *

The Lorimer episode may not be over yet. There is talk of continuing the fight at the next session of Congress if evidence is secured which would warrant a reopening of the case. The result of the recent vote is bound to have its political effect in more ways than one. For one thing it will hasten the day for the direct election of Senators. This is conceded. Then again, trouble is already brewing for some of the members of the Senate who voted in favor of Lorimer's retaining his seat. It is quite plain that opposition is going to be stirred against a number of the Senators who voted to allow Lorimer to retain his seat. How widespread this opposition will be it is too early to predict, but it is cropping out that some at least will have opposition. It was really the "lame duck" Senators, or those who will not return to the Senate for the next Congress whose votes counted for Lorimer and turned the tide in his favor. These Senators were Bulkeley, Burrows, Carter, Dick, Flint, Kean, Piles, Scott and Hale.

There is a most interesting parallel between the vote against popular election of Senators and that in favor of Lorimer. The Senators who voted for Lorimer are generally those who voted against popular election of Senators and generally do not believe the direct election is safe.

While the vote on popular election of Senators [illegible] Republicans, yet defeat came by such a narrow margin—33 to 54, lacking just four votes of the two-thirds necessary to carry—that the issue will be carried over into the next Congress when it is quite sure to carry. It is believed by many that the Sutherland amendment which was tacked on the original resolution killed the proposition. This amendment was distasteful to many Southern Senators and it had the effect of causing several, who otherwise would have voted for the resolution, to cast their vote against it.

DISCUSSION OF CONGDON BILL

As Seen by Student of Politics. Brief Analysis of Subject by F. Anderson

No more significant fact has in recent years challenged the attention of thoughful citizens in all parts of the country than the continuance and rapid concentration of population in the large cities. Whereas two generations ago the class of cities of 100,000 or over included but 6 per cent of the people, it now comprises over 21 per cent or nearly 20,000,000. Not less marked is the growth if we adopt asmaller unit. The inclusion of cities of 25,000 or more swells the total by some 8,000,000 and Director Durand of the Cencus Bureau estimates that more than 45 per cent of the whole population live in places of 2500 or over. Roughly speaking the cities increased by about 40 per cent during the past decade, or nearly double the rate of growth of the country at large, and the striking fact becomes apparent that soon the preponderance of numbers will go over from "the country" to the cities, certainly never to change back.

This same tendancy is apparent also in our state today. For instance the growth of the three most populous counties, Ramsey, Hennepin and St. Louis was about 240,000 or practically 75 percent of the state's growth, so that they now comprise about 35 per cent of our populatiodn instead of some 27 per cent as in 1900.

With the causes of this constant tide, such as the virtual exhaustion of free lands, the magnified attractions of city life, marked changes in the scale and methods of manufacturing, and not least the favoring influetce of arbitrary freight rates, this is not the place to deal. The question here is: How does it or may it affect the workings of government in Minnesota? In the first place it obviously enhances the importance of efficient municipal administration to keep pace with the growing complexity of city life, and secondly it breeds a certain sense of solidity among the legislators from the small and compact districts. This brings us face to face with two fundamental problems of Democracy.—the right apportionment of political power throughout a commonwealth, and the nature of the safe-guards available against the abuse which is an inherent possibility in all power.

Now as most "rights" which are not conferred as arbitrary monopolies or privileges are essentially others' recognition of ability in the person, so the "right" to vote is really the public's recognition of the voter's disposition to use his power for the general welfare. That he may not be as worthy to participate as some of his fellows many semi-democratic countries recognize in giving some more votes than others, as was once done in the United States, tho we now give all male adults only one legal vote or none at all and in most states disfranchise women all together in important elections. But this apparent equality of influence between voters is false and deceptive if the spokesman for each group does not represent approximately the same number. This was evidently what the writers of the Federal Constitution had in mind when they specified that "representatives ...... shall be appointed ......according to their respective numbers", etc. But they departed absolutely from this principle in the creation of the senate on a sealed and cemented "rotten borough" basis, as you would expect them to do who wanted a permanent, self-sufficient institution, sure to "check the imprudence of Democracy" (Hamilton), to "keep down the turbulence of Democracy" (G. Morris), and to curb "an interested and overwhelming majority" (Madison), that it expedient that "the people should appoint one branch of the government in order to inspire them with the necessary confidence" (Gerry).

Different minded, however, were the authors of our state constitution, who provided that the "representation in both houses shall be ......in proportion to the population", also empowering the legislature to redistrict and reapportion after each State and U. S. Census. To those familiar with manipulation of districts for party advantage instead of fair play to the public, it is unnecessary to add that glaring inequalities have persisted in actual practise and are by no means eliminated in the Congdon reapportionment bill which passed the House on February 21st, 85 to 31. For instance, under it the constituency of one of the 61 proposed senators would number some 47,000, but of another only about 19,000 moreover, the counties of Hennepin and Ramsey would each have, I believe, one senator less than their proportionate share, altho electing five of the eight senators transferred from the first, second and third congressional districts, the sixth man being assigned to the "unrepresented north". Different was the proposed realignment in the House, where six new members were assigned to the north and eight withdrawn from the south were distributed among the three "heavy" counties. This bill differed from the Moonan-Haycraft proposition in that it involved radical inequalities in the constituencies for members of both Houses, while the latter concentrates them in the Senate, with the proposal that by constitutional amendment no county should contribute more than four senators.

The strong vote for Congdon's bill in the House must be attributed partially to the desire to "keep on the right side" of its supporters as long as possible, a majority of the 85 "yeas" no doubt entrusting to the senate the disagreeable duty of killing it. And they did not reckon in vain, for there it will most certainly perish. And for a two-fold reason: Opposition to its inequalities, and antagonism to the principle of equal representation itself. It is unfortunate that the conjunction of political forces in the present session has not allowed a bill really in accord with the constitution to be advanced as Congdon's has been, so as to test the temper of the legislature on the single point of equal representation. No such test can be again until 1916-17 if the opportunity is missed now, but whenever it comes, uncomplicated with other issues, the opposition will be stated somewhat as follows:

One or two prefer the present inequalities to any distribution which would allow an alien element, e. g., on the Iron Range, to be represented while not enfranchised. This discrepancy in the general relation of voting strength to population is a trivial point and really cuts little figure. It is in no sense parallel to the discrepancy in the Southern States where the negroes are disfranchised.

A more practical appeal of the supporter of some such substitute as the present Moonan-Haycraft bill is to the federal Senate as a precedent, but those who appreciate the humor of a majority in Nevada or a bare 15 per cent of the voters in Rhode Island having equal influence in that powerful body with a majority in New York, Ohio, etc., will hardly hold it up as an irresponsive, local and special "interest"—representing model for Minnesota, especially at a time when conservative England is giving a knock-out job to its (partial) counterpart in the House of Lords.

A louder argument will be an attack up on the character of the electorate in the cities, such as was implied in Senator Work's suggestion to give the cities half the representation to which they are numerically entitled. Comparisons, such as this kind of an argument raises, as to the average character of the voter according to the size of the place he happens to vote in are as odious as they are fatuous. The fact that a portion of the city electorate is mobile (tho not any such portion as some of the arguments assert) is no discredit and no proof of its comparative unfitness for influence in the councils of the state. If our franchise laws are too liberal, the remedy is to change them—not to partially disfranchise the intelligent city voter along with the "unworthy" as a penalty for his living where all (?) congregate.

The final and most serious argument is that if the cities have a proportionate share of influence, their representatives will make illegitimate use of their power to further "the interests" of the cities as against those of the country. It might be retorted with some justice that such abuses might not any more make up for the long history of past interferences by ill-informed non-resident legislators in the strictly local concerns of city administration, but such vindictive arguments are fair-minded nor necessary. But it is pertinent to point out that our three large cities will not for many years contain a majority of the population and if given all the representation to which they are now entitled, it would only be by combination with a substantial element from the "country" that their "selfish schemes" could be carried out. Further more there is not the sharp division, and conflict of interest between the voters of city and country that this argument assumes. If legislation takes the form of a pork-barrel scramble and a fight for subsidies industrial and transportational advantages, such as the fight over the Cashman bill seems to have been, the remedy is to emphasize moral issues which will divide men according to principle and not local selfishness. The remedy is for all parts of the state alike to send men to St. Paul able and willing to vote for the welfare of the state as a whole instead of to get all the petty contracts, institutions and small political favors they can for their constituents. The remedy is to send men instructed simply as William Kent of California will be when he goes to Washington next December "Vote for the good of the whole country."

The foregoing was written by Mr. Frank E. Anderson of St. Paul. I am temporarily incapacitated by an attack of the grippe, but will be able to attend to my legislative correspondence again next week. This installment will not be an unwelcome change however, as Mr. Anderson is a thorough student of economics and politics, and has taken a broad unbiased view of the question. In a future issue I shall attempt to show how the Congdon bill was drawn and the specific influences which are for and against it. It would seem useless at this time to suggest that it eliminates certain inequalities only to substitute others, because the bill will be defeated in the Senate unless the steel trust and brewers can overcome the honest opposition that now exists.—Lynn Haines.

WEST POINT WANTS CADETS

This District Has One Vacancy. Why not a Thief River Falls Boy to Fill it.

There will be a special examination of candidates for appointment as cadets at the West Point military academy, May 2nd, to fill no less than 129 vacancies. Of these one is from this the 9th congressional district of Minnesota. The successful candidate gets a most liberal college education free—a thing to be despised by few. The examinations will be held at several military posts throughout the country to be designated by the war department at Washington, D. C. A statement issued by the general staff calls attention to the fact that for several years the cadet corps has been 75 or 85 per cent below its full quota. Because it is regarded as of vital importance to the army that the institution turn out the largest possible number of graduates, therefore this effort to fill all existing vacancies. These now number 129, per cent and prospective, including the following:

Illinois—District 2, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18 and 24.
Iowa—Districts 5, 9, 10, and 11.
Michigan—Districts 3, 4 and 7.
Minnesota—Districts 2, 3, and 9.
North Dakota—One at large.
Wisconsin—two at large; districts 4, 6 and 11.

CLAPP AGAINST RECIPROCITY

States Reasons for Opposing Measure. Favors Closer Relation on Right Basis.

Our junior United States senator, Moses E. Clapp, who has been importuned through letters both by men favoring and opposing the Canadian reciprocity bill, finally makes answer to a letter from one Markell of Duluth who wrote him urging him to support the bill. His letter to Mr. Markell, which is of great interest to all Minnesota, reads as follows:

Washington D. C., Feb. 26, 1911.
Porter B. Markel,
Duluth, Minn.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 28th inst. at hand. I do not see how you could expect me to vote for the impending bill. Two years ago when the Payne Aldrich bill was up for consideration I worked against it and voted against it as being a measure in the interest of the few at the expense of many. It reduced the duties on raw materials, or what we call products, and kept the duty on manufactured articles, thus exposing the producer to competition, and was only in the interests of the manufacturer, leaving the consumer to the mercies of the manufacturer behind protection, and in an industrial condition where combination has largely taken the place of competition.

The people endorsed my fight against that bill, which was very gratifying, for two reasons; first, because it is always gratifying to be endorsed, and second, because it confirms one in the wisdom of his policy. Believing that my attitude in that matter was right, I could not now consistently turn around and vote for a bill (that is what it is i nthe last analysis) that does precisely the same thing. If you go down along the line of this bill, you will find that it repeats the vice, if I may use the word, of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill in taking the duty off of the raw product and leaving it on the manufactured product.

Nor was this at all necessary in framing a bill with reference to Canadian reciprocity. What Canada wants is our market. She has no interest in our leaving a duty on beef, mutton and pork. There was some other purpose in that than reciprocity.

Now, I believe the time has come when we should consider the American consumer, and we could do this in a tariff without impinging the least upon the spirit of Canadian reciprocity.

I am heartly in favor of closer trade relations with Canada, and have repeatedly pointed out on the floor of the senate the difficulty of maintaining a tariff wall between the two countries, but I cannot bring myself to reverse my position on the Payne-Aldrich bill and support a bill which is manifestly framed without ultimate regard for the consumer we are going to get that some day, and when we get it we are going to get a broadening of our markets to Canada which all Canada asks for in reciprocal trade relations. More than that I do not believe it is wise to rush a great tariff measure through congress without any discussion. I get scores of letters saying: "We wish you would vote for reciprocity." That is all right. I get hundreds of letters from all over the state pointing out in detail the defects of the bill. A discussion can do no harm. If a discussion should prove the strength of the bill so much the better for the bill; if it should prove its weakness, so much more the need of discussion.

Regretting, therefore that I cannot vote for the bill in its present form, I am

Very truly yours,
MOSES E. CLAPP.

NEW MACHINE FIRM.

The farmers of this vicinity are to be given the benefit of still sharper competition in the farm implement line. A new firm enters this field. They are Charles Gustafson and Son.

Mr. Gustafson was until recently one of our prominent and progressive farmers. He dwelt about four miles south-west and carried on successfully a large diversified farm with all its varied interests and intricate problems to solve. He was one of the few of our dairy men who understood livestock feeding and profited by it. He knows the requirements to be a farmer and should be able to tell a good machine when he sees it; should be able to foresee how it will work under actual farm conditions. He has in other words, entered a line where his experience as a farmer should help him to "make good" as the phrase goes, and we believe his farmer friends will like to see what he has before closing their deals.

NEW CITY DIRECTORY OUT

Population Numbers 4692. Over 50 Per Cent Are Over 18 Years Old

The new directory arrived from Dubuque, Iowa, last Tuesday forenoon. John H. Ley, our "directory man" is to be complimented upon the fine appearance of the book inside and out. It is well gotten up and good taste has been exercised everywhere. As to the correctness of its data few have any doubts. Mr. Ley has had many years experience in the directory business and has reduced it to a science, where there is no questioning results. Following is his own introduction and speaks for itself:

For the second time the publisher of the Thief River Falls City Directory submits to a critical and discerning public the results of his labors to furnish a complete and accurate guide to the city. While he has never spared any efforts in making the book the best and most satisfactory of its class of publications, he would be much dissatisfied with himself were he to fail in improving his work with each issue.

It was felt that in this census year, of all years, a criterion should be established by which to gauge the future years, and the publisher boldly challenges the census as to results. The figures obtained this year are not estimated, but secured by a complete count of the directory system. It is not too much to claim that in every respect the directory is a more reliable and accurate index to Thief River Falls than even the census of the government, that mysterious something, which like Caesar, can make no errors.

Let us compare the work of the directory compiler yith that of the cencus enumerator. The directory compiler has the last issued book to check by, and if a namefails to appear this year a special messenger goes to hunt it up to see whether the party has left the city. The census enumerator works on has blissful ignorance of the many he never sees. The compiler takes every man's name twice—once at his residence and again throughout the business districts to secure a check on all persons employed. The census enumerator takes a name only at the place where the party sleeps, and this single enumeration allows many errors and omissions. The census man is limited as to time, and must get his schedules in at the appointed hour; the directory compiler has an abundance of time in which to examine and verify every item. The census men are necessarily inexperienced men (in this line of work), working under half understood instructions at a forced and rapid pace in order to finish their work on time, the directory compilers are men who have spent their lives at this business, and who have thoroughly systematized their work until the result of their labors became as nearly perfect as work of that class can be. The census man's beggarly pay makes it necessary for him to hurry through his work as quickly as possible, and it would be absurd to expect him to spend extra time going over his territory in hopes of finding the person he has missed, especially when the missed number will never be discovered, as the records are not published or open for inspection. The pages of the city directory, however, are open to the public inspection, and the publisher is sure to hear of it if a name be found missing. The publisher has apersonal interest in making no omissions, as his success for the future depends upon popular judgment given after a close examination of the present year's volume. On these grounds, then, we fear not to challenge a comparison of the conclusion of the census with those of our work. If there be any discrepancy between the two as to results, we deny that the inaccuracy is in the directory. Have we not given sufficient reasons for so doing?

In the present number we have found the population of Thief River Falls to be 4,692, of which 2,520 are persons above the age of eighteen years, and 2,172 below that age. As the County seat of the new Pennington County, Thief River Falls' future is assured, so watch us grow.

A NEW STORE.

A Halseth and Son have opened up an exclusive wall paper, paint, oil and varnish store on Second St., next door west of O. L. Bakken's tailor shop. Thus they stand ready to furnish the material for the decoration and renovation of the homes, offices, stores and public buildings of Thief River Falls. They are the first to make this their exclusive line and we predict that they will be liberally patronized by the general public.

ARE WE NOT ONE FAMILY?

Family Talks about How We May Prosper ---- Through Team-Work.

The farmers and the city people (I mean we) are one large family. Brother farmer, do you agree to that? And brother Business man, do you? I hear you say, "Sure thing.'

Well, then let's have a little talk over family matters.

We are fortunate in being such a large family. Most people say that the members of a large family are more unselfish and get along better together than the members of a small family do.

Unselfish! I've heard it remarked that there is no such a thing as unselfishness in this world, but I have found that they are wrong who say so. All we have to do to prove them wrong, is to stop and recall the acts of kindness other people have done us. In doing this, you should be careful not to count what you have done to other people. Leave that to them.
